SPLIT-TICKET RULE BLOW TO NEW YORK

Travelers to the South Compelled to Go to Newark to Get Mileage Privilege.

COMMERCIAL MEN ANNOYED

Must Detrain and Recheck Baggage —An Interstate Commissioner's Experience.

A member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, who was in New York recently, on the morning of the day set for his departure went to a ticket office of the Pennsylvania Railroad and purchased a straight ticket to Washington. When he received the ticket he exhibited a mileage book of the Southern Railway to the agent from whom he had purchased the ticket and asked him to reserve him a berth for Huntsville, Ala., and also to check his baggage through to the Alabama city. Then followed a colloquy that went something like this:

"I am very sorry," said the Pennsylvania agent, "but I can only check your baggage as far as Washington, and I cannot sell you a Pullman reservation for a point further south than that. This is the ruling of the Trunk Line Association with reference to 'split' tickets, and unless you purchase a straight through ticket from New York to Huntsville you will have to recheck your baggage and make new Pullman reservations on your arrival in Washington."

"But that will put me to a great inconvenience," replied the Interstate Commerce Commissioner, "and would make it necessary for me to get up at 4 o'clock tomorrow morning, which is the time the train I desire to take is due in Washington. There are several matters I wish to attend to before leaving New York, and if I attend to them I will have to take the train due in Washington at 4 A. M."

"I am sorry," the agent replied, sympathetically, "but if you attend to that business and take the 9 P. M. train you will have to get up in Washington and recheck your baggage and make new reservations."

"Well, if that is the situation I guess I will have to take an earlier train," the Commissioner said, and so he bought a chair reservation on the train that leaves New York about 6 P. M. and arrives in Washington at 11 P. M. On his arrival in Washington he spent a large part of the hour before midnight getting his baggage rechecked on his Southern Railway mileage, and making his new Pullman reservation on the same mileage.

Rule Hits New York.

This incident indicates some of the many inconveniences to the traveling public that have followed the adoption by the Trunk Line Association of what is now popularly known as the "split-ticket rule," which is intended to stop the use of mileage books on journeys in which the traveler is compelled to travel over the lines of more than one company. Under the rule a ticket is a split ticket when any part of it is mileage over a line other than that of the line over which the journey begins.

The new rule affects more than any other section of the country the Southern States, where traveling on mileage books is more general and more popular than in any other part of the country. As New York is the city that ends or originates by far the greatest Southern business and pleasure travel, this city, as it was pointed out yesterday by a prominent citizen of Atlanta, is vitally concerned. Trunk lines operating north and west and east out of New York are also affected by the ruling, but as their lines are sufficient in most instances to carry their passengers to destination without change of system, the regulation has worked less hardship to travelers, and there has been practically no protest.

The matter is now before the Interstate Commerce Commission as a result of action taken by the Baltimore Board of Trade and various other trade and traveling organizations, among the latter being the Southern Travelers' Association, the head office of which is in the Mardge Building, this city. This association has in its membership the Southern traveling representatives of most of the great mercantile establishments of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and other commercial centres in all parts of the country. The experience of the Interstate Commerce Commissioner cited also indicates the inconveniences that have affected this big body of traveling tradesmen.

The Split-Ticket Regulation.

Under this rule no tickets or ticket orders issued by foreign lines will be honored as forming a part of through transportation for the checking of baggage, selling parlor car or sleeping car tickets, or for reservations in parlor car or sleeping cars to points beyond Buffalo, Niagara Falls, Suspension Bridge, Lewiston, Salamanca, Dunkirk, N. Y.; Corry, Erie, Pittsburgh, Penn.; Wheeling, Parkersburg, Charleston, Kenova, W. Va.; Baltimore, Md.; Washington, D. C.; Hagerstown, Md.; Shenandoah Junction, W. Va.; Norfolk, Old Point Comfort, Portsmouth, Va.; Montreal, Quebec; Ogdensburg, Morristown, Cape Vincent, Charlotte, Albany, or Troy, N. Y.

This regulation was intended among other things, as was pointed out yesterday by a man deeply concerned in the situation, to end so far as travel north of Washington is concerned, a system that has been in successful operation in the Southern States for more than twenty-five years.

"For at least that time," said this man, "the Southern Railway has been selling in New York City mileage books for points south of Washington, and the Pennsylvania Railroad has honored these books in the checking of baggage and in the purchase of Pullman reservation for points in the Southern States. This new regulation puts the whole thing into the air. The Pennsylvania got its full rate over its lines then as now and did not lose a cent, and yet for some reason this order has been promulgated which makes necessary detraining at Washington by people who want to go to points in the Virginias, Carolinas, or other Southern States.

"Let me cite an instance of the hardship worked by the regulation. A few weeks ago a blind girl from the South, who had been attending an institution in New England, arrived in New York on her way home. She had provided herself with interchangeable mileage, good over practically all the lines operating in the Southern States. Under the old rule the girl could have boarded her train in New York and would not have left it until she arrived at her destination in the South. This time, however, she had to detrain at Washington and with the aid of a station man attend to matters which could just as well, and without the loss of a penny to anybody, have been attended to here in New York.

Doesn't Work Both Ways.

"Then, again, here is another point which is worthy of consideration, and that is the rule does not work what is commonly known as 'both ways.' If you are in Birmingham, for instance, and want to come to New York they will extract your mileage to Washington, and then after the fare from Washington to New York is paid issue you a ticket to New York and check your baggage and sell you a Pullman reservation right through to the Pennsylvania Station in New York, and nobody is the loser, the southern line getting its full mileage and the Pennsylvania, or any other line used from Washington north, getting its full fare.

"The instance of the blind girl cited is the experience of thousands of other people who have to travel to and from the South. Women who come to New York to shop or on pleasure, merchants who come to buy goods, people who come on pleasure, those who journey to attend conventions and other gatherings, and they foot up in fact into thousands, are all affected, that is when they get ready to go home, for as I have pointed out the regulation does not work both ways.

"As for the commercial traveler, the man who because of the very nature of his business must carry a large amount of baggage, the inconveniences he submits to when he starts south to see his customers and to get the orders that means more money for the wholesale merchants and manufacturers, and more freight for the railroads, is perhaps greater than that suffered by any other class of travelers."

As published in THE TIMES of last Thursday, the new regulation as a result of the action taken by the Baltimore Board of Trade, backed by various other organizations, has been brought before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and its enforcement restrained in the territory south of and including Newark, N. J. No appeal, for some reason, was made in behalf of the tariff district in which New York City is situated, so that while the restraining order affects Newark, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and other points between Newark and Washington, the regulation remains in effect and is being enforced so far as New York is concerned. The result has been a big falling-off in the sale of tickets to Southern travelers in New York, who, in order to save the inconveniences in Washington that would follow the purchase of a ticket to the capital in New York, leave New York an hour or so ahead of their intended time of departure and go to Newark and purchase the ticket there and thereby are able to make their Pullman reservations and check their baggage through to their Southern destination.

Discourage Use of Mileage.

S. H. Hardwick, Passenger Traffic Manager of the Southern Railway, in a recent appearance before the Interstate Commerce Commission expressed the attitude of that, the principal trunk line of the South, in the following words:

"The practice of rendering or refusing special accommodations or facilities at will," he said, "is one of the evils which the law has undertaken to eradicate. It is neither the purpose of the law nor the policy of the commission in the administration thereof to restrain carriers from affording all possible facilities, accommodations, and conveniences consistent with that equality of treatment which the law requires and with the established tariffs intended to promote the same.

"Unliket a package of freight, a passenger is able to reconsign himself, and therefore, by purchasing tickets at two or more points to take advantage of combinations of excursion or mileage fares and joint or local regular fares. No good purpose is served by requiring the passenger to thus inconvenience himself in order to secure the transportation at the lower rates the carriers are willing to provide in their tariffs that all who desire it may have the benefit of the lower charges."

At the hearing before the examiners of the Interstate Commerce Commission held in Baltimore the representative of the Seaboard Air Line, another of the great Southern trunk lines, made it plain that the Seaboard did not consider the mileage business very profitable and that anything that discouraged the use of mileage books would meet with the line's approval. The Atlantic Coast Line's representative at the same hearing approved the regulation of the Trunk Line Association.

A hearing before the Interstate Commerce Commission at which it will be decided whether or not the restraining order now effective between Newark and Washington shall be made permanent will be held early in next October.

FIRST TYPHUS CASE REACHES NEW YORK

Health Officer Quickly Sends a Stricken Greek Engineer to Swinburne Island.

QUARANTINE ON THE ALERT

Dr. O'Connell Takes Every Precaution Against Possible Visitation of Cholera Following War.

When Dr. Joseph J. O'Connell, Health Officer of the Port, boarded the Greek freighter Christoforos on her arrival yesterday morning from Marseilles, he discovered that the third engineer, a Greek, had typhus fever and immediately ordered him removed to Swinburne Island for treatment. This is the first case of the disease to arrive here since the beginning of the war.

Captain Phitis, the commander of the ship, received a cablegram from the owners directing him to proceed to Baltimore to discharge his cargo, and he requested permission from the Health Officer to leave the port. Dr. O'Connell told him that the crew and the ship would have to be thoroughly disinfected and he might be allowed to go to Baltimore today. A telegram was sent to the Quarantine officer at Baltimore giving him the particulars of the case, with instructions to keep the Christoforos under observation next week.

The steamship left Marseilles on April 10 and the engineer developed fever on April 20. He was isolated from the rest of the crew, and every precaution was taken to prevent the disease spreading on the ship.

According to the Health Officer at Quarantine, there were twenty cases of typhus fever brought here last year after the Balkan war and they originated in Marseilles, where the Christoforos touched.

The latest scientist to join the bacteriological staff of the Health Officer of the Port, at the Quarantine Station, Staten Island, is Dr. Otto Schobl, the noted Austrian cholera expert, who arrived yesterday from Manila, where he spent five years in the Bureau of Science.

The appointment of Dr. Schobl was made as an additional precaution against the expected visitation of cholera, typhus, and other diseases, which may be brought to this country by immigrants after the war in Europe is over.

"We are very glad, indeed, to have Dr. Schobl with us," said Dr. O'Connell yesterday. "For some time, because of the complications the war brought about, we feared that we would be deprived of his services. His labors in the Bureau of Science in Manila gave him an experience which, added to his well-known qualifications as a bacteriologist, fit him in a peculiar way to the service here. He and Dr. Oscar Teague have worked together before, and I expect he will be a most valuable aid to the director of our laboratory. I now feel perfectly safe in saying that the quarantine defense of the Port of New York is splendidly manned and equipped, from a scientific standpoint, and, in view of the dangerous situation due to conditions in Europe, it is a great relief to me, as the head of that department, to be able to say so."

Dr. Schobl holds his degree from the University of Prague, 1904. He served in the Pathological Institute at Prague from 1900 to 1907, first as student demonstrator and later as assistant pathologist. In 1907 he was Lecturer in Pathology in Temple College, Philadelphia. He was appointed bacteriologist in the Bureau of Science in Manila on March 18, 1912.

SCHOOL FITS DOGS FOR POLICE WORK

Training Station at West Hempstead, L. I., Educating Five of the Shepherd Breed.

THEY SOON LEARN DUTIES

Succeed in Leaping Over Twelve-Foot Fences and Track Fugitives Until They Are Cornered.

HEMPSTEAD, L. I., May 1.—A training station for police and Red Cross dogs has been established two miles west of this village by Benjamin H. Throop, a wealthy Scranton man and owner of the Elmview Kennels at Elmhurst, Penn. From the time, about two months ago, that a plot of ground with a house and a few outbuildings located on Hempstead Avenue, at West Hempstead, were inhabited by two men who seemed chiefly concerned with six interesting-looking shepherd dogs, the greatest curiosity has been aroused regarding the men and dogs.

Passing automobilists, noting sections of board fencing raised at varying heights in the yard, would slow down their cars and watch the seemingly senseless operation of two men driving the dogs over the fences. Seeing the same men wandering with the dogs in the outlying fields, the neighbors became curious. Then the word went forth that the canines were being trained for army purposes.

It was learned that the little piece of property was in charge of Rudolph Hauri, an employe of Mr. Throop, who up to a few years ago had no more idea of training sheepdogs than he had of learning embroidery. According to report, Mr. Throop happened to be going through Switzerland five years ago on his wedding trip. It was there that he met across Hauri. The latter, as the tale runs, had been a saloonkeeper who owned a fox terrier in Switzerland.

Trainer from Switzerland.

On the fox terrier hangs the tale. Hauri, the terrier was the means of proving, had a genius for training dogs. He could make his pet do many tricks, from jumping through hoops to eating with a spoon. Switzerland abounded in sheepdogs, and Hauri started training those dogs. This naturally turned his mind to training the dogs against marauders. Then somebody suggested that Hauri give up the saloon business and make a profession of developing sheepdogs.

He acted on the suggestion, and, from what can be learned, it was while he was doing this that the Pennsylvania man, with the 350-acre estate back home, ran across the trainer. The result was that Hauri came to America about two years ago, bringing with him Gretlich, now 12 years old, which he claims was the first genuine German shepherd police dog to enter the country.

Hauri came to the door at the West Hempstead place in response to the knock of a reporter yesterday. He was followed by Herman Netzker, his assistant, who did the interpreting for him.

"Are you training any of your dogs for duty in the war zone?" he was asked.

"I don't know," he replied discreetly. "Mr. Throop has entire charge of that, and I'd prefer you asked him. There are sixty-three dogs in the kennels at Elmhurst, and they are brought here only as they are ready for training. A dog shouldn't begin training until he is about a year old. We have five here now, and then there is Gretlich, my own dog, who has a great record.

Dog Tracks a Murderer.

"When I first came over we went to the Pennsylvania place. A man had escaped from the Pennsylvania prison. Hearing about the dog they asked to have her put on the trail. This was done and she tracked him straight to the house he had entered. Another time a murderer escaped and they put the dog on his trail. She hung to it for two days, and finally led the man's pursuers to his hiding place. She's a wonderful dog," he added with pride, patting the dog affectionately.

"What are these dogs being trained for and what are these adjustable board fences for?" pointing to the bits of fence paling.

"You can train the dogs for anything," replied Hauri, answering the first question. "All that's necessary is to develop their intelligences up to the point of making them understand what you want them to do. Then they'll do it. You can train them to be your personal guardian, to do police work, or to discover wounded bodies in a field. Those things," pointing to the fence palings, "I'll show you!"

Netzker was ordered to bring out several of the dogs. Then he put them to work jumping the obstacles, first placing the boards at a two-foot height. Higher and higher the boards were raised, until one of the dogs was clearing it at a seven-foot height. Beyond that the animal did not make it without touching as he went over, but he jumped a height of twelve feet before he was allowed to finish.

Besides Gretlich, the names of the dogs now at the training station are Kuno, Faust, Lone, Nero, and Rex. They are about the size of a wolf, with thick hair. Nero, who was considered the best trained of the still unfinished lot at Hempstead, was chosen as demonstrator. The first trial was cause for hesitation on the part of Hauri, and marked "a break in training" for Nero. It seems that all these dogs like to take to water, and the pond of Mrs. Josephine De Mott Robinson—the former circus rider—was only half a mile away.

Dog Yields to Temptation.

At the suggestion of Hauri, the assistant took a glove and went off across fields, over several fences, and laid down the glove. Then Nero was given the mate to the glove to smell. He trotted off in the direction Netzker had taken and was soon lost to sight, but he did not come back. Presently a man appeared who announced he'd seen the dog going in the direction of the pond, a mile in the distance. After a long time Nero reappeared, dripping with water and looking very sad when Hauri admonished him severely. He drooped his tail and lowered his eyes and crouched on the ground.

"He feels bad, don't he?" remarked a visitor who had been watching the performance. "But he should worry. He's had his bath!"

As if to make up for his failure and really show what he could do, Nero was put on the trail of a man who had been sent ahead across the fields of the Anbrey G. Hutcheson estate, twice around a tree and then on to several other points, all in full view of the watchers. Nero took up the scent and never varied from the line the man had taken. Then he was put through several other acts, including the guarding of a pocketbook, the knocking of a pistol out of a man's hand and the tripping of a man pursuing his victim, all of which he accomplished skillfully.

According to Hauri, the dogs are one-man dogs, recognizing no one but their owners, to whom they are devoted. He claims that the Gretlich shepherd dog is the most intelligent of the twenty varieties of sheep dogs.

The use of dogs for police work is increasing in Nassau County. The county itself owns two enormous bloodhounds, one of which, it is said, cost $1,000.

MAY DAY MUSTERS 50,000 FOR PARADE

WANT SUFFRAGE AND PEACE

Equal Rights for Jews After War Also Demanded—"Reds" Rap Cathedral Bomb Plot.

A May Day demonstration of favor of peace in Europe, equal rights for Jews after the war, socialism, and woman suffrage, brought 25,000 labor unionists and Socialists to Union Square yesterday afternoon at the end of a dozen parades held simultaneously in Manhattan, Brooklyn, and towns of New Jersey. According to the estimates of the police and leaders of the parades 50,000 persons marched in the afternoon here, thought not all of them went to the central disbanding place and rendesvous.

The crimson banners of the Socialists, lettered in gold, flashed in the sun as the paraders moved through a large part of the east side and finally up Fifth Avenue and back to Union Square. The sentiments which inspired those in line were made known on lettered pennants and large pacards carried by thousands of marchers.

"War is a curse on the entire working class of the world—we demand the immediate restoration of peace," read one of these proclamations.

"As part of the Jewish nation we demand that the Jews of the warring nations get equal rights with all other nationalities," another read.

"We strife [sic] for the emancipation of women," were the words on a standard which was seen several times in the parade.

"Let those who preach war go to war. War is hell!"

"Down with bloodshed in Europe and in this country."

"The American nation cannot and should not remain indifferent to the sufferings of Jews in the warring countries in Europe."

"Down with our lawmakers at Albany who are robbing us of our constitutional rights."

Gibes of Anarchists.

A small group of Anarchists arrived at the little cottage in the north end of Union Square before the main parade stopped and the speeches began. Men and women in this group carried placards and banners with inscriptions expressing disgust at the methods used by the police in trapping members of the Anarchist band who tried to dynamite St. Patrick's Cethodral. On these placards were written:

"Fifty strong defectives [sic] wanted to catch two boy anarchists at St. Patrick's Catedrill. Bring your wigs, scrubbing brushes, and petticoats. Best pay."

"Do you want a job? Learn to make bombs. Teacher Polignani, Police Department."

"Bombs will be found by those who make them. Polignani, the spy."

The central meeting was held from the platform of the cottage, but there were separate meetings on different sides of the square. Nearly fifty speakers addressed the gathering in half a dozen different languages. They prescribed Socialism as the panacea for political ills. War was caused by capitalism, and Socialism was the cure for capitalism.

Referring to the suffrage question, one of the speakers said:

"You've got to have a showdown with the women, and hand them the ballot. They're going to make you bums give it to them, and if they use it without intelligence they can say it's only because they've hung around with you so long."

The main parade in Manhattan, including 10,000 shirtwaist workers, dressed in white uniforms with red sashes, and 2,000 bakers, also wearing white duck, started at Rutgers Square at 2 o'clock. This procession was headed by an escort of mounted police, and its line of march was kept clear by 200 policemen under Inspector O'Brien of the Traffic Division.

From Rutgers Square the parade moved east in Canal Street to Eldridge Street and north to Houston Street, where the procession was interrupted for nearly a quarter of an hour by a blockade of horse-drawn surface cars and other vehicles. In Houston Street it turned east to First Avenue, thence to First Street, to Second Avenue, to Fourth Street, Washington Square, Fifth Avenue, Fortieth Street, Madison Avenue, Thirty-first Street, Fourth Avenue to Union Square.

In Union Square.

It was 4 o'clock when the head of the procession appeared in Union Square and 6 o'clock when the end of the parade was passing in front of the speakers' platform.

More than a hundred policemen under Inspector Morris handled the crowds along the parade route above Fourteenth Street, and as fast as the throngs poured into the Square the policemen directed them without the slightest disorder to the stations assigned. Many of the organizations represented in the parade passed through the Square without stopping.

The parade from Rutgers Square was merged with the Socialists' division at Fourth Street and Second Avenue, where the Socialists marched after having formed at Nineteenth Street and Third Avenue. The United Hebrew Trades and Cloakmakers' Union were conspicuous.

At the Union Square meeting the speakers were J. C. Frost, Chairman; August Claessens, William Karlin, Charles Solomon, Anita C. Block, Jacob Panken, Ludwig Lore, Joseph Cannon, Pauline Newman, Sol Fieldman, Berthe Fraser, and Theresa Malkiel.

For the first time a special May Day parade and celebration was held by Socialist children, 2,000 in number, at the Harlem River Casino. This parade started from the Labor Temple, 243 West Eighty-fourth Street, and its route was east in Eighty-fourth Street to AvenueA, to Ninetieth Street, to Second Avenue, and to 125th Street, where it was merged with a parade of Bronx children and went by Second Avenue to 127th Street.

Similar parades and demonstrations were held in Brooklyn, Queens, Hoboken, and Elizabeth, N. J.

BARNES ON STAND PERHAPS THIS WEEK

practically all that he was allowed to say was that his name was John A. Heanessy and that he lived in Brooklyn.

There has been some discussion here as to whether the Justice will allow the jury to determine for itself whether or not a libel was uttered and whether Mr. Roosevelt was justified in making it, inasmuch as it is within the province of a Justice in a libel suit to direct the jury to return a verdict for either side. The Roosevelt people would like to have the case left to the jury, and they are confident that this will be done. The law requires that if justification has been shown either in whole or in part the case must be submitted to the jury. The Roosevelt forces maintain that such justification has been shown in part at least, and that the Justice cannot now order a verdict to be given in favor of Mr. Barnes.

Justice May Direct a Verdict.

The Barnes legal experts assert that it is possible for the Justice to direct a verdict for Barnes, leaving it to the jury to assess the damages. They say that Roosevelt has given little evidence in justification of the alleged libel except that of William Loeb, Jr., regarding Barnes's alleged agreement not to interfere with the Democratic State Senatore the fight over the United States Senatorship in 1911 and the printing "graft" testimony. They cite the rule of law that justification proof must be as broad as the libel.

The past strenuous two weeks has affected Mr. Ivins's health. Today he was suffering from a slight attack of la grippe, although he said he expected to be all right again when the trial was resumed on Monday.

It is not known whether Mr. Barnes will be his own first witness in rebuttal, or whether he will be reserved for the last. Mr. Ivins declared today that he intended to put Mr. Barnes on the stand. He would not guess how long his client would be on the stand, but it is predicted that it will be at least a week.

Both principals and their counsel remained in the city today, and they will be here until Monday. During the morning each of the principals conferred with his counsel at the Hotel Onondaga. In the afternoon the Colonel, who appparently has not felt the strain of the last two weeks in the slightest degree, went horseback riding despite the rain. He is still the guest of his Bull Moose friend, Horace S. Wilkinson. Mr. Barnes kept quiet in his hotel.

CARRANZA AND MEXICO
By CARLO DE FORNARO

A Graphic Portrayal of Mexico's New Leader

"If the European war had not come along and swamped the headlines, Carlo de Fornaro's 'Carranza and Mexico' would be one of the sensations of the year. Even so, it is a story of vast interest to those who would learn the truth concerning the Mexican situation from a man who has supremely mastered it. The reading of it will give a vivid and intensely clear, if one-sided, view of the Mexican situation to date."

LOSS IN GOLD HELD BY RESERVE BANKS

Nearly All Members of System Report Gains in This Class of Paper—No Change in Bonds.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—The Federal Reserve Board's weekly statement indicates a decrease of $3,100,000 in the total reserves of the banks, New York alone reporting $5,200,000 of total cash withdrawn during the week. The aggregate gold reserve shows a decrease of about $500,000. New York reports $3,200,000 of net gold withdrawals, which are partly offset by gains at the Philadelphia, Chicago, and Kansas City banks.

The only bank reporting a large increase for the week under the general head of loans and discounts is Dallas, whose net gain is in excess of $500,000. The aggregate amounts of acceptances and other commercial paper held by the banks show but slight changes since the preceding week. About 46 per cent. of the discounts held by the banks is thirty-day paper and about 33 per cent. sixty-day paper. Of the $2,000,000 of agricultural and livestock paper maturing after ninety days, about 50 per cent. is held by the Dallas banks, while Richmond and Atlanta report over $200,000 each of this class of paper among their security holdings. The total amount of acceptances held by the Eastern and Western banks was $13,812,000, compared with $13,768,000 shown at the end of the preceding week. The New York bank reports $5,700,000 of this class of paper; Boston, $1,800,000; Chicago and Philadelphia about $1,500,000 each; Cleveland and San Francisco $1,200,000 each, while the other Western banks show amounts of less than $500,000.

No change is shown in the amount of United States bonds held by the banks. A net gain of $800,000 in the investments in municipal warrants is reported, New York, Boston, Chicago, and Minneapolis showing the largest increases. The amount of capital paid in shows an increase of $2,000,000, the increase being due to advance payments by member banks on account of the third installment due on May 2. Deposits show a decrease of $2,400,000, St. Louis and Boston reporting the largest losses under this head.

Federal reserve agents report aggregate note issues to the end of the week of $54,300,000, an incrase of almost $3,000,000. Over $27,000,000, or about one-half of the total, were issued by the New York Federal reserve agent. About $7,800,000 of notes is reported in the hands of the banks, 70 per cent. of the latter total being held by the New York and Chicago banks. Over 75 per cent. of the notes issued are secured by the deposit of gold with the reserve agents. The aggregate liability of the banks on account of their outstanding circulation is stated at $11,334,000.

Combined resources and liabilities of the Federal reserve banks, at the close of business on April 30, were as follows:

BOSTON COPPER GOSSIP.

Big Boom in the Market—All Workings Being Made Ready.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 1.—Production of copper is proceeding at highest speed under the stimulus of a greedy market. Old workings are being rehabilitated, shafts are being unwatered, and explorations are under way by means of crosscuts and by diamond drills. Even mines whose costs of production are under ordinary circumstances prohibitive are planning to enter the ranks of the producers.

A conservative estimate of the 1915 output of the Calumet & Hecla Company is 150,000,000 pounds; probably the total will be nearer 200,000,000 pounds. Advices from the Old Dominion property are that the April output will be about 1,300,000 pounds instead of 1,000,000, which was the earlier estimate. Mohawk turned out in March the record quantity of 1,322,367 pounds. Shattuck-Arizona is turning out the highest daily tonnage in its history—400 tons, against 250 at this time a year ago. The Utah Copper Company's plant is running at full capacity and the April production is likely to exceed 13,000,000 pounds. Chino's March output was 4,446,067 pounds, comparing with 5,566,819 pounds in the corresponding month last year. Ray Consolidated produced 5,632,168 pounds against 6,223,617 pounds in March, 1914. Nevada Consolidated reports for March 4,535,192 pounds; in the corresponding month of 1914 the total was 5,218,227 pounds.

Quincy's production for April will come close to breaking the records of recent years. A third shaft is starting work at the Tamarack with twelve drilling machines. Hancock is increasing its daily output, sending some 450 tons to mill. Arizona Commercial is shipping at the rate of 4,000 tons of 3 per cent. ore per month.

The crosscut on the 3,000-foot level of North Butte from the Granite Mountain shaft has cut the Edith May vein, which is reported to be rich. Report is that the vein there is 15 feet wide.

Hancock and Quincy have practically agreed on the terms of a working agreement, which is expected to inure to the benefit of both companies.

Victoria is now working full time, water supply having been procured.

Advices from Houghton are that the mill run on New Arcadian rock was satisfactory, although no figures are given out. Diamond drilling has been resumed on the Mayflower; hole 41 has reached a depth of 1,750 feet. East Butte is back to normal production after being closed nine months.

Cotton Crop Forecast in India.

The final forecast of the cotton crop of India for the 1914-15 season made by the Government shows 24,632,000 acres, or nearly 2 per cent. short of the revised figure for last year, and a yield of 5,232,000 bales of 400 pounds each, or 3 per cent. more than last year. The figures for 1913-14 were 25,020,000 acres, which produced 5,065,000 bales.

COTTON PRICES OFF IN RAID BY BEARS

Market Experiences Sharpest Reaction That Has Taken Place in a Month.

DECLINE OF 15 POINTS

October Carried Below 10 1-2 Cents—Week-End Trade Advices Favorable—Some Rains in East.

Cotton yesterday experienced one of the sharpest reactions that has taken place in the last month. The undertone was easy and prices slipped off about 15 points on general selling, part of which was represented by commission house liquidation, although a still larger proportion was credited to bear pressure from the leading spot interests. The decline carried October below 10½c., although demand around that level was sufficient to check the decline for the time being.

The market is now a two-sided affair, and some rather aggressive operations appear to have been undertaken by the strong bear party, which is predicting a slump to about 10c. for the Fall positions. This would mean a decline of about 90 points from the high level of the season.

The bear raid appears to be predicated on an unfavorable technical position, as it is believed in certain quarters that the market has been overbulled on predictions of acreage reduction, decrease in the use of fertilizer, and an abnormal demand for cotton for smokeless powder.

The weakness yesterday was accentuated somewhat by the failure of predicted rains to materialize in Texas, at least to an excessive degree. The forecast calls for unsettled weather, with thunder showers over the Southwest today and tomorrow. The Eastern belt received further relief from drought through the medium of scattered showers.

The week-end trade advices were generally favorable. Distribution of dry goods is proceeding on a liberal scale, and manufacturers appear to be making ready sales of their output of cloth at advanced prices.

Among the items of crop news made public yesterday were the following:

Memphis: "Planting is about finished; weather has been favorable."

Jackson, Miss.: "Crop conditions are good."

Dallas: "Excessive rains extending over a broad area have caused streams to overflow, entailing heavy damage to farms in the low lands. Replanting of both corn and cotton is necessary in many sections."

Southern spot markets, as officially reported, were unchanged; 6 to 15 decline. The local market for spot cotton was quiet and 10 points decline; 10.40 for middling upland.

Will Need American Scythes.

An American firm, having been informed that there will be a serious scarcity of scythes in Russia during next season, says Consul General John H. Snodgrass, stationed at Moscow, have entered into an agreement with American steel works and supplied them with drawings, descriptions and samples of Austrian and other scythes used in Russia. It has also applied to the administration of the zemstvos to ascertain the number of scythes required, offering to guarantee the quality of the articles.

COMMODITIES PRICES.

Few Changes Last Week, and These Were of Narrow Range.

In wholesale commodities prices last week showed comparatively few changes and the range was narrow. In the 321 quotations which make up Dun's list there were shown 30 advances and 20 declines. Among foodstuffs wheat showed a sharp rise, accompanied by an advance in the price of Spring patent flour. The following list gives the minimum wholesale prices quoted on forty-three standard commodities in this city, unless otherwise specified, corrected to April 30, and with them are given comparative prices for the week before and the corresponding week last year:

A curious circumstance among the grains is that oats, of which the exports have been remarkably large, declined in price. Rye and barley advanced. Among the dairy products the finer grades of butter rose in price, cheese remained firm and eggs, because of excessive supply, dropped.

In the provision group live hogs, prime lard and short ribs advanced, live beef and mess pork remained stationary and live sheep declined. Among other foods, the vegetables were lower, excepting beans, and fruits showed no change. Coffee was unchanged, but Formosa tea declined a little.

The only changes in the metals were rises in electrolytic copper and spelter and a drop in tin. Steadiness marks the iron and steel market with an indisposition to accept forward contracts at current prices, though concessions are said to be possible on desirable business for prompt delivery.

Cotton, silk, and wool are practically unchanged, but rubber is lower. Burlaps have increased in price. Among oils, cottonseed and cocoanut are lower and linseed higher. Hides and calfskins prices advanced, but no change occurred in leather.

WHEAT.

The news of the day in the wheat market was generally of a bearish nature both regarding the crop outlook and the situation abroad, but after an early decline of ⅝ to 1c prices rallied and at one time showed net gains of 1⅝ to 2⅜c, although the close was a little below the highest with net gains of ⅝ to 1⅞c. In the local cash market No. 2 red Winter wheat was quoted at 1.70⅝ and No. 2 hard at 1.71⅜, c. i. f. track; No. 1 Nor. Duluth 1.66½, and No. 1 Nor. Manitoba 1.66⅝ c. i. f. Buffalo.

PROVISIONS.

The market for hog products was moderately active and prices were firmer in the face of quite liberal deliveries on May contracts in the West, which was reported at 30,500 barrels of pork, 15,000 tierces of lard, and 4,300,000 pounds of ribs. Receipts of hogs at Chicago were 11,000; estimated for Monday 31,000, and for next week 120,000. Kansas City received 1,000 and Omaha 11,700.

TO AID GERMAN IMPORTS.

Efforts in Progress to Modify the British Embargo.

Representatives of steamship, forwarding, and importing interests visiting Washington the past week in an effort to secure the modification of the British embargo on merchandise of German origin, reported yesterday that strong hopes are entertained that some working arrangement will be arrived at soon, which will permit the transportation of merchandise bought and paid for by American citizens.

A great deal of merchandise of German origin paid for prior to March 1, the date of the British embargo, is lying at Dutch and other neutral ports pending some definite assurances that the goods will not be seized on the high seas by allied cruisers. As matters stand, ship owners are unwilling to allow their vessels to carry cargo for this country fearing the loss of the carriers. This is the case of the American steamer City of Memphis which, after carrying a cargo of cotton to Rotterdam, was reported yesterday as returning in ballast, notwithstanding the heavy consignments of German merchandise awaiting shipment to this country.

A forwarding factor, who spent several days in Washington, said yesterday that the Foreign Trade Advisers of the Department of State are doing all they can to bring about a resumption of trade with Germany through neutral ports. This man believes that the Allied Governments will before long, make concessions favoring American-owned merchandise of German production. Importers told the State Department officials that in a great many instances the goods they are complaining about, will be a dead loss unless they are moved from neutral ports at once, as many of the lines were ordered for Summer requirements. Nothing has come, thus far, of the protests of German-made dyestuff handlers and consumers, that a working arrangement be perfected which will allow these products to come in via neutral ports.

Amateur Importers Now.

The fear that Italy may become involved in the European war, with the probable embargo on edible olive oil, has led to a practice which is beginning to make itself felt in regular importing circles in this city. It seems that hundreds of individual Italians here and elsewhere in this country have been writing their friends and relatives in Italy to send them small lots of the oil. After reserving enough of the commodity for their own needs these amateur importers are selling the remainder at comparatively low prices to other individuals. Jobbing circles, it was said yesterday, are surprised at the number of small lots held at the present time in the hands of persons not regularly engaged in the business. While good edible olive oil is becoming harder to obtain in Italy, and at constantly advancing prices, the commodity has not risen appreciably here, owing, in part, at least, to the heavy individual importations, which have had the effect of restricting sales through the retailer.

The REAL Opportunity to buy long term bonds will come somewhere along about the middle of next year.

The wise investor, in the meantime, is putting his money into SHORT TERM securities where it will be safe, pay him a high rate of interest, and be where he can get it when he wants it,

For this purpose the "convenient maturity" bonds we issue are absolutely ideal. They have been bought for years by National banks, State banks, and trust companies, and by trustees and conservative individual investors.

The interest rate is 6%.

Realizing in several of the stocks which had responded most enthusiastically to the influence of war orders and to the rumored great profits accruing from that source was the chief feature of yesterday's short session on the Stock Exchange. The reactions in these shares was substantial but small by comparison with the extent of the gains they had recently made. Of the major stocks the one which was watched with most interest by traders was United States Steel, which made a net gain of a full point. Traders are forming the habit of going home Saturday in the expectation that the beginning of another week will bring the decision in the Government's suit against the Steel Corporation, and the stock is bought and bid up on the theory that the decision will be favorable. That expectation seems at the moment a more potent market influence in the stock than any estimates of the probable extent of the recovery in the company's earnings, the start of which was shown in last Tuesday's quarterly statement.

There was some further reaction in the railroad shares, particularly in the stocks of Western roads affected by the award of higher wages by the arbitration board which for a number of weeks had been hearing at Chicago the demands of the men and the arguments of award has proved unsatisfactory to the railroads, but apparently still more unsatisfactory to the men, an outcome which is not unusual in such wage arbitrations.

The bank statement reflected some of the large financial operations conducted during the week, including some preparations for the heavy payments which had to be made yesterday. Despite this there was little reduction in surplus, the increase in reserve requirements being covered almost to its full amount by an increase in the cash holdings of the Clearing House members. Thanks to the lighter reserve requirements the Clearing House institutions now have a surplus many times larger than the surplus carried at this date in most past years. The present excess reserve of $170,000,000 is more than two and a half times the surplus reported at this time in 1908, a year of very great money plenty, following the drastic liquidation brought on by the 1907 disturbances.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

A $127,000,000 Saturday.

Payment was made yesterday for the $100,000,000 issue of New York Central debentures and $27,000,000 New Haven notes, with an accompanying heavy shifting of bank balances. Scores of messengers appeared with checks at the Guaranty Trust Company, where the New York Central funds were received, and also at the office of J. P. Morgan & Co., who accepted payment for the New Haven notes. The big transactions were put through without any fuss, and the only apparent difference they caused in the routine of the two institutions was added work for the clerical forces on a Saturday. At the Morgan offices a double operation was carried out, as $30,000,000 New Haven notes fell due, and while checks were being received for the new issue others were being paid out as the old notes were surrendered. Many holders of the maturing notes simply turned the money received back into new notes, so that a part of the task amounted to all intents and purposes to the exchange of securities. But each transaction of the sort was represented by two checks, whose appearance will be recorded at the Clearing House tomorrow.

Steel Ends the Week Strong.

Steel was not subjected greatly to profit-taking sales yesterday, although realizing was clearly evident in many quarters of the stock list. It may have been that buyers of Steel during the week did not have any sizeable amount of profit to take, while earlier purchasers decided to hold off a while. The stock's net change from Monday morning's opening to Saturday's closing figure was ⅝, a small total against the background of war stock ramblings. Instead of inciting pressure against Steel in yesterday's dealings, traders added to their lines, and the advance of a full point made a favorable impression on the bullish contingent.

Activity of Westinghouse.

The leaven of speculation has been shown of late to arouse great activity in stocks that ordinarily are unusually quiet. Take Westinghouse, for example. In the entire seven months that the Stock Exchange was open last year, total sales amounted to a little more than 39,000 shares. On Friday of this week more than five times as many changed hands, and a single hour yesterday—a Saturday at that—brought nearly as many sales.

The British War Credit.

J. P. Morgan left England on the St. Louis yesterday, bearing, it was assumed in Wall Street, a copy of the agreement he went to London to negotiate. It is still said that Great Britain is not ready to enter the market for $100,000,000, with which to buy supplies and make other payments here, but it is regarded as almost certain that she will take advantage of arrangements tentatively made rather than see the Bank of England's gold reserve depleted further in order to pay obligations here in cash. To a considerable extent her needs for exchange have been met up to date by the sale of American securities, each rise being followed by the receipt of selling orders in this market. The war is piling up costs at a rate which makes it inevitable for such of the belligerents as can arrange credits here to do so.

President Oler's Stand.

Remembering the reception given previous efforts to make a profit in ice, Wall Street did not, as might have been expected, greet the announcement of an advance of 50 per cent. in the price of ice with enthusiasm. At $3 a ton, ice may be cheap, but the public will not admit it. Wesley M. Oler, President of the American Ice Company, was quoted yesterday as saying that the advance does not really amount to 50 per cent., since the price a year ago was $2.50, making the increase only 20 per cent. over a year ago.

"I want to make it plain," said Mr. Oler, "that the law of supply and demand will govern the price of ice just as it governs the price of any other commodity. The harvest of natural ice this season was 450 tons below actual consumption of natural ice last year. There is every reason for believing that the consumption this Summer will be far and away heavier than last Summer, which was unusually cool. I think it is pretty nearly time for the American Ice Company to make some sort of a decent return to its stockholders."

So it is, if the company's capitalization is not more than the investment needed in the business, but will the public think so?

Coal Company Reorganization.

CHICAGO, May 1.—First steps toward the reorganization of the Dering Coal Company, a $10,000,000 corporation, said to own the largest coal tract in the country, were taken today, when Attorney Levy Maer on behalf of the Continental and Commercial National Bank of Chicago and Kuhn, Loeb & Co. of New York bought stocks and bonds of the face value of $7,000,000 at auction for $681,500.

FINANCIAL NOTES.

E. H. Rollins & Sons have purchased and will offer early in May at a slight premium $900,000 Northern New York Power Corporation 6 per cent. bonds, due serially from 1917 to 1940.

The Huntington Land and Improvement Company has called for payment on June 1 at 101 and accrued interest $200,000 bonds, due Dec. 1, 1915, of its issue of $14,000,000 collateral trust serial 6 per cent. bonds.

Within the Investment Boundary

If you are seeking to put your surplus funds on a profitable basis, your primary consideration should not be whether standard securities go a few points higher or a few points lower in the immediate future.

Values, not fluctuations, are the true determinants which guide the choice of the most successful investors.

All standard stocks have risen from the lowest level, but the opportunity is still open to purchase time-tested shares on a basis of income return which is much above the average for years.

You may still purchase the best type of securities on a basis of income return which proves them to be well within the investment boundary.

We will send on request any of our four booklets, 15, "Partial Payment Plan"; 15A, "Odd Lot Investment"; O, "Odd Lot Trading"; O2, "$100 Bonds."

The City of New Orleans, acting under authority of Act 179 of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana for the year 1908, ratified by constitutional amendment, and now a part of the Constitution of the State of Louisiana, will receive sealed proposals at the office of the Commissioner of Public Finances of the City of New Orleans up to twelve (12) o'clock noon, on the 26th day of May, 1915, for the purchase of $500,000.00 in face value of Public Belt Railroad Bonds of the City of New Orleans, authorized by and to be issued under and subject to the act aforementioned, and the constitutional amendment ratifying same, and of the numbers, denominations and maturities of the authorized issue of $2,000,000, and in the form of and in accordance with the bond schedule of the maturities of the entire authorized issue as given and prescribed by an ordinance of the City of New Orleans, being Ordinance No. 8628, N. C. S., approved May 14, 1912, and Ordinance No. 2340 Commission Council Series, approved April 20th, 1915, of said city, authorizing the present offering.

Said bonds are the second issuance out of the total amount authorized by said act and constitutional amendment, and are of the numbers, amounts and maturities, as follows, to-wit:

Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($350,000) of said bonds shall be of the denomination of $1000 each, and one hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($150,000) of the denomination of $500 each, and of the numbers, amounts and maturities as follows, to-wit:

Said bonds are subject to call by the City of New Orleans on the first day of July, 1939, or on any interest day thereafter, at par and accrued interest on thirty (30) days notice of its intention to so redeem, published in the official newspaper of the City of New Orleans.

They are, by the aforesaid act and constitutional amendment, exempt from all State, Parish and Municipal taxes, and may be legally invested for the estates of minors and of interdicts, and are receivable by State, Parish and Municipal officers, where, by law, deposits of bonds are allowed or required to be made.

The payment of the principal and interest of said bonds is made a preferential charge upon the net revenues of the Public Belt Railroad of the City of New Orleans, and are and will be issued under and subject to the aforementioned statutes and ordinances, all of which are hereby referred to and made part of this advertisement for greater certainty and particularity.

Said proposals shall be received under and subject to the following conditions, to-wit:

Proposals must be in writing, sealed, and marked on the outside of the envelope "Proposals for the purchase of $500,000 of Public Belt Railroad Bonds of the City of New Orleans," and shall likewise be accompanied by a certified check on some chartered bank in the City of New Orleans, for an amount equal to one per cent. of the aggregate amount of the bid, which said check of the successful bidder or bidders shall be cashed and the proceeds retained by the City of New Orleans as a guarantee that the successful bidder or bidders will comply with its or their bids, and the said proceeds shall be applied to the payment of the bonds last delivered to the successful bidder or bidders, respectively. In case of the neglect or refusal to comply with any bid, the proceeds of said check shall be forfeited to the Public Belt Railroad Commission of the City of New Orleans.

No sale shall be made unless the aggregate of the bids received equals the full amount of the present offering of $500,000, in face value, and the adjudication shall be made to the highest bidder, provided, however, that no adjudication shall take place for less than par and accrued interest. All matured interest coupons shall be cut from said bonds and cancelled, and the successful bidder shall pay the interest which may have accrued on said bonds up to the date of delivery. The bonds shall be paid for in cash as fast as said bonds can be signed and delivered. All bonds will be delivered within thirty days from the opening of said bids. The right is reserved to reject any and all bids.

Further particulars and information will be furnished on application to W. B. Thompson, Commissioner of Public Utilities, the Public Belt Railroad Commission, or to the undersigned. The final opinion of Wood & Oakley, lawyers, Chicago, Ill., as to the legality of this issue will be furnished to the successful bidder if so desired. A. G. RICKS,
Commissioner of Public Finances of the City of New Orleans.

VARIED PHASES OF THE COUNTRY'S BUSINESS LIFE

THE MERCHANT'S POINT OF VIEW

Taking general mercantile business as a whole, its course since the beginning of the year, now one-third spent, has shown an undoubted improvment. There has ben no sudden starting up of activity at any one time, nor has any particular week given evidence of a decisive character. It is only when a comparison is made between the conditions existing at the beginning and end, respectively, of a few months that the progress made becomes apparent. It has also been continuous, which is the best of all signs, because it indicates a steady growth toward betterment. All that has been happening from week to week lately has been the gradual extension of more favorable conditions to different fields. This extension is still in progress in the metal and other industries, no less than in the textiles.

Buying for the Future. Perhaps the best indication of the improved conditions and outlook is shown in the disposition to buy more largely for future needs. Long before the war unsettled things, it had become a habit to buy from hand to mouth, as it is termed, and the beginning of hostilities merely emphasized this habit. Recently, however, in many different lines buyers have been forecasting the future more and have been ordering in advance for a trade which, they are certain will come. While a striking illustration of this has been afforded by the orders put in for carpets and rugs, following the recent successful auction sales of these goods, it has been just as apparent in cotton fabrics, in metal supplies of one kind or another, in furs, in silks, and to some extent in woolens. It would have been more pronounced as to the last mentioned if a better gauge of requirements and future prices could be had. There are still just enough uncertainties about these matters to induce caution. One of them is likely to be resolved when the clothing manufacturers hear further from their men on the road.

Situation in Wool. Large recent imports of wool from all quarters has put an end to any apprehensions there were that there would be a scarcity in the supply of this much-needed article. Combined with this, of course, is the fact that the shearing of sheep in this country is now well in progress and promises a good yield. At last week's wool auctions in London, American buyers do not seem to have been much in evidence. This is taken to mean that they have obtained about all they need of the merino and blackface wool, which are the only kinds that Great Britain allows the export of. More attention is given to the domestic product which is used to blend or mix with the softer Australian wools. The Western wool is held high, the growers being fully aware of their strategic position, but there is less disposition than there was at the outset to force up prices to an unreasonable extent. As a result there have been some quite large sales made of the new clip. Within the next six weeks will occur the sealed bid sales of the Oregon Wool Growers' Association who seem to have profited by the suggestions made by the Department of Agriculture and others in trying to make their product more marketable. In a circular just issued by the Secretary of the association he gives the growers good advice as to grading the wool and otherwise preparing it for sale. He also is invoking the aid of the Humane Society of the State to prevent cruelty to the sheep in the shearing, which, he says, has resulted in the killing of 2 per cent. of them. An extension of this kind of good work will result in more wool being produced and in the obtaining of better prices for it.

Federal Trade Commission. It is announced that the Federal Trade Commission will meet shortly in this city and take counsel with merchants. Suggestions will be in order not only with reference to the conduct of domestic trade but also as to imports and exports. One matter to which exporters have devoted some time and thought is as to how far the Sherman anti-trust law applies to combinations for trade with foreign countries. The claim has been made that the law is not operative in that direction, it having been enacted with the avowed purpose of protecting the people of this country alone. But how would it be if it should appear that, by reason of combination, the people of other countries were enabled to get American products at lower prices than obtain here? Would that be such a discrimination as to offend the spirit of the law or would it be permissible if it should appear that the prices to purchasers in this country had not been advanced, although those to the foreigners had been reduced? There is opportunity here for considerable discussion and of difference of opinion, and it may be that some decision might be come to which would be generally satisfactory.

Discrimination in Trade. There is, however, another aspect of foreign trade which involves inquiry and is of immediate importance to more than one branch of domestic industry. This concerns the combinations in other countries, especially in Germany, where the system has been elaborated to the utmost, for the purpose of controlling the markets of foreign lands. An instance, which is especially in point just now, relates to the supplies of coal tar dyes. The supremacy of the Germans in this field here is due greatly to the methods they employed to capture the American market. All the German dyestuffs makers were in a combination and they were aided by their Government. They sent here and sold the colors below cost in order to prevent the establishment of the industry in this country, and subsequently raised the prices of their goods when they had put an end to domestic competition. Besides this they resorted to other practices which led the textile manufacturers of the country to unite in self-defense against them. It has also been asserted that dye dealers have been threatened with a cutting off of supplies of the imported coal tar colors if they sold any made in this country. In foreign trade the German Government has stood back of their exporters and has helped the latter by bounties or subsidies of one kind or another so as to give them an advantage in competition. How far the Clayton Anti-Trust and the Trade Commission laws can go toward reaching the foreign exporters is one of the knotty problems which the commission has to deal with. It is regarded as certain that the laws will reach the agents in this country of foreign exporters using unfair methods in trade, and it is also apparent that the articles brought in here become subject to American laws after their arrival. There is, therefore, an opportunity for proceedings both in personam and in rem, as the lawyers call it.

Discussion of the Tariff. For some time before and after the enactment of the present tariff no meeting or convention of protected manufacturers was quite complete without a Jeremiah to predict the dire evils to follow a reduction of duties on imports. Ejaculations of the kind have ceased to be popular since the Department of Commerce began investigations into the conditions of industries alleged to have been injured by the lowering of the tariff bars. The cases of the potters and of the knit goods people of Montgomery County, Penn., are instances easily recalled. On Wednesday, however, the old calamity note was again raised—this time at the convention of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers held in Boston. The presiding officer, Albert G. Duncan, who happens to be at the head of a cotton mill that was very successful last year, was quite doleful in his remarks. His frame of mind may be inferred from this remarkable misstatement: "Two years and a half ago the American people voted for a change in their National Administration and elected a party on a program of anti-business legislation." He next referred to what he described as a "terrific increase in the imports of foreign goods during the first nine months that our present tariff was in operation." He omitted, probably through inadvertence, to state the kind of goods he had in mind or the fact that, whatever they were, they form a very small percentage of the goods made here and sold here. In cotton cloths alone the exports during the period were over seven times the increase in the amount of imports, and this, too, despite the political and financial troubles in China and the Central and South American States. If he intended to refer to all imports he was manifestly wrong, since the total imports increased less than one-third of the amount of increase in the corresponding period of the year before.

Imports and Also Exports. A few figures of the increases in imports for the entire year ended with June 30 last, as compared with those of the year before, may be of interest. They are given in round numbers as follows, the first figure being the increase for the fiscal year 1914 and the second that for the year before: All Europe, less than $3,000,000, $73,000,000; North America, $65,000,000, $38,000,000; South America, $10,000,000, $5,000,000; Asia, $12,500,000, $52,000,000; Oceania, $4,500,000, $1,000,000; Africa, $400,000 decrease, $800,000 increase. The total shows an increase in imports of $80,000,000 as against an increase the year before of $260,000,000. So far from there being any "terrific increase," there was a reduction in the yearly increase of imports. Another consideration for the cotton manufacturers is the fact that they have shown their ability for years to compete in foreign markets with the products of other countries because the labor cost of most kinds of cotton goods here was less than it was elsewhere. In Canada, American cottons have been sold against British, although the latter have a preferential tariff in their favor. Similarly these goods have been sold in quantity in India, Aden, and British Africa. The last calendar year, because of the war and the unsettled conditions as well as the lack of shipping facilities, showed exports of American cotton productions at their ebb, but still more than $50,000,000 worth of such manufactures were sent abroad. The claim is made that the industry needs more protection to enable it to meet competition in this country from the products made abroad and yet it is able to meet that same competition in foreign countries, some of which discriminate in their tariff against American goods. Are the American manufactures sold cheaper abroad than here?

A Sidewalk Nuisance. Fifth Avenue merchants, especially those having fine shops above Madison Square, have long complained of an annoyance to which they and their patrons have been subjected. The encroachment of factories for the making of garments near where the fine stores are has brought into the district a large number of workers, who make it a point during the noon hour to crowd the avenue sidewalks and saunter leisurely up and down, peering into the shop windows, and elbowing out of their way those who would be patrons of the merchants. Many of these workers are unkempt and their conduct is not such as to make their presence agreeable to shoppers. They do nothing, however, to offend against any law or ordinance and are, therefore, not subject to police discipline. Storekeepers say they hurt business and wish them kept away from in front of their doors and windows. They have talked of organizing and agreeing not to buy goods of any of the manufacturers whose operatives crowd the sidewalks, and they have met with a little relief, because the recent factory laws have brought about the lessening of the number of workers in buildings unless certain safety requirements were provided. The operatives are not blamed so much for wanting a little relaxation and fresh air in the intermission they have, but it looks as though these might be provided by the manufacturers on their own premises. Social recreative centres might easily be provided, which would obviate the need of creating a nuisance and injuring legitimate business.

LUCK AND SKILL IN SALESMANSHIP

Salesmanship does not consist entirely of convincing a buyer that certain goods are best, that the prices are right, and the time for buying is auspicious. This has been proved by men who have sold goods without doing any of these things, none of which is easy in these days of close competition, but who have got and held good accounts by leaving the beaten path and finding new approaches.

For instance, there is a silk salesman in this city who calls on the metropolitan trade, a trade that is said to be the most difficult to sell in the mercantile world. For a long time this man sold goods in the average "headless," slambang way, taking a chance on his cards getting him past the gate and on some hole in the buyer's stock helping him out after he got inside. Sometimes he had luck, for it could hardly be called anything else, and got there with the goods the buyer wanted at the time he needed them. His card got him in without difficulty in most of the stores he visited, but he came a long way from selling goods to every buyer he visited.

One day he sat down and mentally took himself to task, finally arriving at the conclusion that if he called on his brains more and on the god of luck less he would sell more goods and make more money. Figuring along this line, he finally came to the conclusion that he would greatly enhance his chances if he knew the condition of stocks in the various stores he called on and "picked on" the weak spots. In other words, he decided to go prepared to fill the apparent need, and to spring these goods first and hard, instead of presenting a sort of hodge-podge for the buyer to cull over on his own account if he had the time to do it.

Then the question arose as to how he could get the information he wanted. He knew that it would be useless to ask the buyer, and he figured that while he might be able to "pump" the heads of stock in a tactful way now and then, he could not keep it up indefinitely. However, being a married man, he decided to ask his wife to help, and, when the proposition was put up to her, she said that she would get her sister to help if he would "come across" once in a while to keep the latter interested. The campaign was further carried on, and the mother of the salesman was enlisted.

With the "army" completed, the work began. The women went about among the various stores, presumably intent on buying merchandise, looked at goods, and asked questions concerning the way certain things were being called for by the customers, the colors that were wanted, the prices, &c. They also got samples of the goods that the answers to these questions pointed out as good leads. By alternating among the stores, by tactful questioning and by buying an occasional dress length, the "spies" have been able to carry on their work for some time without detection. In the meantime, the salesman has been selling goods where his competitors have been turned down right and left.

Another salesman with ideas sells upholstery goods and drapery materials. His territory included a good part of the Middle West and also included a store to whose buyer he had never been able to make a decent sale, from the dollars and cents point of view, by following the ordinary line of salesmanship. One day, while waiting for the buyer to return to his office, he walked through the department and saw that the display of window curtains consisted chiefly of goods hung on poles against a bare wall. Immediately the thought came to him that these displays would look a lot better and attract more attention if they had some kind of a scenic background. From this the idea grew into the drawing power of a display making use of real window frames with scenic backgrounds, giving the effect of the curtains actually hung at windows.

When the buyer returned the salesman shared his idea with him, and the latter was very enthusiastic. The only objection he saw to the plan was the possible cost. Inquiry revealed the fact, however, that he could arrange for a half dozen or so of window frames at a not very great expense, and further search revealed a quite good amateur artist who would paint the backgrounds for a small sum.

Despite his attempt to help the buyer, the salesman left the store with no larger order than he usually got, for the buyer was a man who was inclined to take care of his friends of the grip, and this particular salesman was as yet not in the friendship class. When he got back from his trip, however, the salesman found to his surprise that the buyer had placed two liberal orders by mail, and bade fair to become a permanent customer. It later developed that the display scheme outlined by the salesman had been the means of increasing considerably the business of the department, with the result that the salesman was given a preferred position on the friendship list.

In another instance an accident resulted in the opening of a friendship and an account. A lace salesman was in a buyer's office in a certain New England city standing beside the latter's desk while he prepared to sign a small order. The buyer picked up his fountain pen to put the finishing touch to the transaction, but all it did was scratch. To start the flow of ink he gave the pen a vigorous shake, with the result that the salesman, who was standing close to the buyer's right elbow, got a fine, large inkspot on a pair of light gray trousers. It resulted in profuse apologies on the part of the buyer, the purchase of a new suit by the salesman, and a friendship that ultimately meant a great deal to the road man.

A women's neckwear salesman, who is somewhat akin to Apollo so far as face and figure are concerned, opened a new account not long ago in a certain Southern city solely on his ability to trip the light fantastic in the modern way. This man succeeded a salesman who was much older than he and less accomplished. The first man could not sell goods to the store in question, and the new man, though he got a lot nearer to the name on the dotted line than his predecessor, was not much better off.

After a particularly vacant day the salesman was lucky enough to meet the buyer and another woman in one of the city's restaurants. Taking his courage in his hand, he advanced on them and was invited to sit down. Not long afterward he was whirling around the floor with the buyer in his arms while the orchestra was "Ballin' the Jack" in lively style. The salesman was scheduled to leave the city just before midnight and did not have any chance of talking business. The next time he came that way, however, he found he was "in right."

Retailers Buying Tweeds.

Retail dress goods buyers seem to be leaning rather strongly toward tweeds, as the orders received from some representative stores show. The salesman for one house, who has been on the road for some time with a Fall line, has been sending in orders larger than those usually obtained from retailers. The goods are required in weights varying from 13 to 16 ounces in the colored nub effects, with the fleecy finish. Sellers find it hard to explain the reason governing this increased demand, but it is reported that the growing business being done on semi-made skirts explains it.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Lenses, Mesh Bags, and Gloves Among Articles Passed On.

Semon, Bache & Co. were overruled yesterday by the Board of General Appraisers in a protest relating to round pieces of glass about six inches in diameter, known in the trade as plano-convex lenses. They were returned for duty under the tariff at 25 per cent. ad valorem as lenses. The merchandise was claimed by the importers to be properly dutiable as glass at 6 cents a square foot, or at 4 per cent. ad valorem. It was claimed that bubbles in the glass disqualified it from classification as lenses. While Judge Sullivan acknowledged that the glass may not be of the highest quality, he held that it fell under the lenses provision.

Walter F. Meyle, Los Angeles, imported under the act of 1909, silver mesh bags and mesh bags gilded. The first-named articles were taxed at 85 per cent. ad valorem as personal adornment articles, while the other bags came in for duty at 60 per cent. ad valorem as jewelry. The claim of the importer in both cases was for a rate of 45 per cent. ad valorem as manufactures in chief value of metal. No samples were submitted to the board, while the testimony was inadequate. In view of this, the board affirmed Collector Elliott's classifications.

Miller, Rhoads & Swartz, Inc., Norfolk, lost in protests affecting the classification of gloves imported under the present tariff. They were assessed at $2 per dozen pairs as women's lambskin gloves. The claim was that the gloves were of the schmaschen variety calling for duty at $1 per dozen pairs. Judge McClelland said that the evidence was very meagre and unsatisfactory, but that its weight seemed to favor the Collector's classification.

M. J. Corbett & Co., were sustained in a contention that toy tea and kitchen sets imported under the Act of 1900, are toys within the meaning of the law, and therefore dutiable at 35 per cent. ad valorem. The Collector was reversed in his return at 45 per cent as metal manufactures.

The J. D. Richardson Company, Detroit, objected to the action of the Collector in assessing carburetors at 20 per cent. under the tariff as manufactures of metal. They were claimed to be properly entitled to free entry as parts of agricultural implements. The testimony failed to prove that the articles are parts of the implements claimed. Judge Fischer said that apparently the carburetors are intended for use in traction engines, but that there was no affirmative proof to the effect that the traction engine is an agricultural implement. The Collector was affirmed.

J. R. Hopkins, St. Louis, imported lamp shades composed of cotton, bamboo and artificial silk. The Appraiser returned all of the goods as being composed in chief value of artificial silk, and duty was accordingly taken under the tariff at 45 per cent. ad valorem. The importer claimed that the shades were in chief value of bamboo, and properly dutiable at 25 per cent. ad valorem. An official analysis disclosed that some of the goods were of principal value of bamboo, as claimed, while artificial silk predominated in others. As the shades were indiscriminately mixed in the shipments, the board decided that the Collector's decision would have to stand since it was the duty of the importer to have segregated the goods.

AT FALL RIVER MILLS.

Business Somewhat Slow, but Market Tendency Is Upward.

FALL RIVER, May 1.—This was a quiet week in the cotton goods markets and sales were rather small. There was some demand from day to day, but business on the whole has been slow and uninteresting. Some buyers have filled their immediate wants and can afford to withdraw from the market for a few days. It is known that there have been requests for lower prices, but this will not come about while cotton rules high.

The general tendency of the market is upward, and any changes that are to come will be toward the ascent rather than the descent. The volume of business included all styles. Wide and medium wide goods held the attention of buyers, but narrow widths for printers' uses sold in moderate quantity. The fine goods mills are doing a fair amount of business, and reports show that buyers have taken goods in fairly large quantities and have their requirements covered for a space of over four months.

Mills have received inquiries during the week for certain styles, and, so insistent were buyers for the goods, that they were ready to pay a slight advance in order to get them. Sateens have been quiet, while twills received but little attention from the trade. These styles have been well received, however, and much business has been done in the past. Some mills have their machinery engaged, for several weeks to come on these goods. The total sales for the week are estimated between 150,000 and 175,000 pieces, of which about 40,000 pieces are spots.

FACTS ABOUT TOBACCO.

How Large the Industry Is and How the War Affects It.

In a special consular report just issued, some idea is given of the tobacco industry in this country. The United States is the greatest producer of tobacco in the world, the production of leaf averaging somewhat more than 1,000,000,000 pounds a year, with a value to the growers of about $100,000,000. More than one-third is exported in normal years. These exports exceed in value such items as cotton manufactures, electrical machinery, paper and paper products, and leather and its manufactures.

The dislocation of trade resulting from the war has had its effect on these tobacco sales, however, just as it has upon the exports of many other items. The sales of manufactured leaf have suffered most, and these sales represent the bulk of the tobacco exports. In the first place, it is practically impossible to ship leaf to some of the belligerents at all, and, in the second place, the factories in the warring countries that are accessible are not taking their usual supply of leaf, probably because sufficient labor can not be spared to manufacture it. Our manufactured tobacco is holding its own in spite of the war, thanks largely to increasing demands from the Far East and Oceania. In the actual war zone the increased consumption by the men in the field is more than offset by the economies that must be practiced by noncombatants.

How Not to Do It.

Consul Alger at Mazatlan, Mexico, writing under the date of April 10, tells of a firm at that place which sent an urgent order in January to an exporting firm in Chicago and laid great stress on the need of getting the goods as soon as possible. He says: "Instructions were to send via San Francisco. The goods have not arrived, but the bill of lading has been received, showing that shipment was made via New York and the Panama Canal to San Francisco, whence they were to be shipped here. If a deliberate attempt had been made to pick out the slowest possible route, it would have been difficult to improve on the route actually selected."

The World's Raw Silk Markets.

In raw silks, the Japan market after a slight recession in prices has become firm again, owing to an increased demand and in advancing, according to advices received by A. P. Villa & Brothers. The visible stock is estimated at about 12,000 bales. Canton is active and, as a large crêpe season is predicted, the belief is that these silks will rule high. Shanghai is rather quiet for tsatlees and tussahs but there has been some buying in steam filatures. A large volume of business is reported in Italian silks, the new decline in exchange helping this. In this city there is a demand sufficient to keep the market active.

SAFEGUARDING A FABRIC'S REPUTE

When certain mills undertook to push the sale of Summer fabrics and were successful to a remarkable extent, this new feature introduced to the men's wear trade was regarded as a fad which would soon die out. Since the Summer suit meant the addition of another season for the clothing manufacturer, however, the idea was taken up at once on all sides. This exploitation resulted in the usual thing, namely, a wholesale price cutting campaign. It seemed to be the desire of all the clothiers accustomed to make a cheap class of merchandise, to see how far they could get below the price at which the Summer suit, with a respectable amount of workmanship and a reasonable profit, might be sold.

Last Summer there was a very large amount of this sort of clothing sold, and some of the clothiers who overestimated the demand were left with stocks on their hands. Consequently there were not the same enthusiastic preparations made for the coming season. Those who held to the opinion from the start that the Summer suit was but a fad smiled and said "I told you so." The imitation that brought with it such undesirable results was along two lines. There were mills that put cheap lightweight mixtures on the market, and clothiers who bought this cloth and used the cheapest sort of workmanship in constructing the garments.

One manufacturer, who had been in the business for a number of years before the Summer suit business attained its present growth, states that even his factory organization, trained for this special work, was unable to turn out garments that could compete with some of the merchandise on the market. He sells a large part of his product in the South and operates on a very small margin.

"A small manufacturer came into my office one day," he said, "and gave me the opportunity to purchase over two thousand of these suits made up of a well known cloth for 65 cents apiece less than I could make them up. Now there were only two conclusions I could draw from this, either he had been able to get the cloth at less than its regular price from another manufacturer who repented his purchase or, through some means unknown to me, he had been able to save that 65 cents in manufacturing. The prices for each operation in making such a suit are fixed, and it is practically impossible to get below a certain minimum. That manufacturer must have been in business for his health. The instance will serve, however, as an example of what the legitimate clothier has been up against in this business."

The mills, and one organization especially, that took up the manufacturing of Summer fabrics, tried by every means possible to protect their customers. Trademarked names were registered with the Patent Office and cases of infringement were vigorously fought. Instances came up constantly of imitation fabrics that were labeled with well-known brands by clothiers who had managed to get hold of the brands. A campaign with the object of educating the retailer to look for the distinguishing mark in the suit was carried out, but the piracy continued. Some reputable houses in the clothing trade would not touch the branded goods because of their exploitation by cheap manufacturers. At the same time, it was recognized that a well established Summer clothing business could be a very profitable adjunct to the regular lines.

The solution of the problem of the manufacturer, who would like to take up this business but is afraid while so little protection is possible for him, appears to be near at hand in the steps taken by one selling agency that has recently put a new fabric of the sort on the market. The situation was investigated thoroughly before action was taken, and every possible loophole closed to harmful imitation. The manufacturer who buys the Summer fabric produced by this house will be first of all protected against any chance of imitations cropping up, once he has sold the original cloth. This protection has been accomplished through having the cloth put out not only under a copyrighted trademark but through having the construction itself patented. Thus it will be impossible for another mill to make the identical fabric and put it out under a different name. This has been the chief trouble in marketing Summer cloths, since the name might be registered but the construction could not only be imitated, but copied exactly.

The manufacturers of this cloth have gone a step further in pointing out the way in which this business might be brought back to a legitimate basis. Only reputable manufacturers will be able to buy the new cloth. A few days back, a manufacturer offered to pay 2½ cents a yard more than the regular price for the goods to get them. The selling agent, however, thought that if he let the cloth get into this manufacturer's hands it would be made up to sell below what it should, and refused. It is this seller's contention that it pays more in the long run to sell the cloth in a limited way to reputable concerns that will put a fair quality of workmanship into the fabric, than to have the business "killed off" after one season of indiscriminate price cutting. He not only believes in this theory but has put it into practice. On another cloth the firm has given exclusive rights to one manufacturer. Next year this fabric will be sold to five or six other clothiers whose standing must be approved by the manufacturer who now has the cloth exclusively. If 10,000 pieces of the cloth are sold and marketed at an unvarying price, the selling agent will be satisfied, since it will be legitimate business and not subject to the inroads of price slashing competition.

COPPER FOUND IN RUSSIA.

Copper discoveries in Russia are reported by Consul Snodgrass at Moscow to the Department of Commerce. At a distance of eighteen miles from Elisavetpol abundant deposits of copper pyrites have been found in two places, in one of which mining operations have already begun. The pyrites is being sent to the acid-producing concerns of Baku. Analysis shows sulphur content of from 48 to 58 per cent. The present production of ore is about 36,000 pounds per day.

In the same district have also been discovered considerable deposits of copper ore spreading over 2,000 acres. Evidences of copper, as well as of iron ore and fireproof clay, have been found also in the Valley of Dostofur-Chai and, to the west of Dostofur, a vein containing copper oxide has been discovered extending from one to three miles. Copper has likewise been found in Gel-Gel and Surnabetr.

RAISING SOME DUTIES.

Treasury Order Affecting Metal "Parts" and "Materials."

The Treasury Department has issued an order to Collectors of Customs throughout the country that will have the effect of raising tariff rates on a great variety of articles of all kinds, generally known as "parts" and "materials." The line of distinction now drawn under the tariff will affect a great many metal articles which since the enactment of the law have been admitted to classification as manufactures of metal with a customs tax of only 20 per cent. ad valorem. The new order will become operative June 1.

It seems that the Classification Committee of the local Custom House has been studying paragraph 356 of the tariff act, with special reference to the subdivision contained in that provision. This paragraph and subdivision cover, among other things, parts of, and material for, cable and fancy patterns of chain for adornment purposes, mesh bags, cigar holders, and other smokers' articles of metal, hair ornaments, powder cases, vanity cases, and like articles. The rate of duty specified is 60 per cent. ad valorem where the articles are valued at above 30 cents per yard or 20 cents per dozen pieces as the case may be.

The committee advised the department that the phrase in the paragraph "and parts thereof" is not qualified by the price limitation "valued above 20 cents per dozen pieces," and that therefore mesh bag frames and parts of chains and other articles mentioned in Paragraph 356, are dutiable at 60 per cent. under that paragraph irrespective of their values. Up to this time it has been the practice at this port to classify as "parts" under this provision, at 60 per cent., only such as are valued at over 20 cents per dozen and clearly intended to be used in the construction of the articles provided for in the paragraph. Frames for women's handbags perforated around the bottom suitable only for use in the manufacture of mesh bags, and valued at the rate mentioned, have been classified at 60 per cent.

Other frames with divided bottoms, occasionally used for mesh bags, but in the greater majority of cases used in the manufacture of leather, beaded, or silk bags, have been classified at 50 per cent. ad valorem, when plated with gold or silver, and as manufactures of metal not specially provided for at 20 per cent. when not so plated. The committee reported that the paragraph should be interpreted so that "parts thereof, finished or partly finished," wholly or in chief value of metal, which are chiefly used in the manufacture of of any of the articles dutiable in the paragraph, come within the scope of the paragraph, and should be classified at 60 per cent.

If, however, the "parts" (such as unpierced metal frames for bags) are chiefly used in the manufacture of articles that would not come within the scope of the subdivision of paragraph 356, but are suitable for use in the manufacture of any of the articles of jewelry and are so used to some extent, then classification should be at 50 per cent. ad valorem under the last part of the paragraph. All of the suggestions have been adopted by the department. Importers who formerly paid only 20 per cent. on the parts will probably controvert the new order in the Federal courts.

Variation in Potash Imports.

There is considerable variation shown in the figures of potash salts imports for the first three months of this year with those of the corresponding period of last year. In all the groups except cyanide of potash and carbonate of potash, there have been large decreases owing to the restrictions imposed by the war. For the three months this year there were 3,786 tons of kainite, valued at $31,553, imported, against 201,669 tons worth $938,560 brought in last year. Manure salts declined from 46,683 tons for 1914 to 12,259 tons for 1915, sulphur of potash from 14,090 to 8,608 tons; muriate of potash from 63,729 to 53,490 tons. Carbonate of potash imports increased from 5,705,084 pounds in 1914 to 7,028,443 pounds in 1915, cyanide of potash from 263,877 to 828,527 pounds. Caustic potash imports declined from 1,912,469 to 1,777,497 pounds.

Some Crossbreds Not in Demand.

LONDON, May 1.—The offerings at the wool auction sales today amounted to 10,600 bales. The assortment was in good condition, and there was a steady demand for the best grades of merinos and fine crossbreds from the home trade and occasionally France, but Americans were quiet. Medium and inferior crossbreds declined 10 per cent., and they were frequently withdrawn.

CIGAR IMPORTING IN THE OLD DAYS

Changes in Methods Which Have Come Since the Time of the Old Wind-Jammers.

Several interesting changes in the conduct of the cigar importing business in the last sixty-odd years were related to a TIMES reporter yesterday by A. E. Faber, Sr., head of G. W. Faber, Incorporated. Mr. Faber, who is still active in business at the age of 84, was a partner in the firm at the time of its foundation in 1848. In the sixty-seven years that have passed he has not only seen a shifting of methods in the importing business, but a shifting of the city's trade centres as well.

"In the old days," he said, "if the wind-jammers which brought our cigars from Havana were fortunate enough to weather the storms off Hatteras, they discharged their cargoes on the Manhattan docks. They were then ready for delivery to the importers without further formality than a cursory examination and approximation of duties by the Government Inspector in charge of the dock.

"In those days the cigars either came in huge hogsheads, packed in bundles of 100 and wrapped in the fibre from palm trees, or in large, undecorated boxes of 500 to 1,000 cigars each. When the smoker received one of these large boxes he could select for his own use the colors which pleased his taste and reserve the remainder for his friends.

"Today, when the Ward liners land our importations here regularly each Tuesday, the cigars are packed in finely decorated boxes of from 25 to 100, and the cigars in this packing are selected so that they are all of exactly the same color. Contrary to the old easy-going, wind-jamming days, however, they are not available for the use of the owner for a week or more, as they have to be transferred to the Appraisers' Stores. There they are weighed and appraised and various stamps are put on the boxes. Ample time is given the customs officials to decide on how much duty they want those particular cigars to contribute to the funds of the Treasury Department.

"Another thing of interest that may not be generally known is that no effort was made in the old days to care for the consumers' interests by keeping his cigars in the best possible condition for smoking. Now things are different. For instance, in our new establishment we have a stock room or humidor which is so constructed as to care for fully 3,000,000 cigars at once. This room is provided with an air-purifying and regulating apparatus that maintains perfectly uniform conditions of temperature and humidity at all times, so that the cigars will be as nearly perfect for smoking as it is possible for human endeavor to make them. Experience has shown that varying atmospheric conditions quickly sap the fine Havana tobacco of its richness of aroma and flavor.

"One of the most peculiar things that I have noted in my experience in the importing business is the fickleness of public favor in the matter of fine cigars. Our records show that large importations were in years ago from factories that are today practically unknown in this market, while on the other hand many of the most popular brands at the present time were unknown then. Many of the old brands have lost their popularity only for a time, being apparently forgotten only to come in for a new demand when the tastes of the smokers tire of the new favorites.

"This may be attributed in a large way to the varying crops of tobacco which Cuba produces, and the inability of the manufacturer to obtain tobacco every year of the same flavor and aroma. There is no consumer more insistent on absolute perfection than the smoker of fine cigars, and any failure on the part of a manufacturer to get tobacco up to the standard he has established most unquestionably means the loss of the popularity of his brands in this market. For this reason the success of the business of the importer of cigars depends largely on his judgment of the tobacco in them and his ability to select such cigars as will satisfy the popular taste.

"In the old days, sixty or more years ago, when I drove to Beaver Street from what was then a suburban home in Chelsea Village, or took the hourly bus to that part of the city, I found our place of business in the midst of our city trade, with all deliveries to be made within practically fifteen minutes' walk. In those days a location as far up as Thirty-seventh Street would have been the equivalent of one in the Bronx or Yonkers today. The matter of prompt deliveries alone, and the necessity for beating competition in that respect, gives an uptown location marked advantages at the present time because the big buyers of imported cigars are no longer in the Beaver Street neighborhood. It is particularly advantageous for out-of-town customers, who nowadays stop several miles north of Bowling Green.

"In view of the changes that have taken place in the city itself, as well as in its business methods in the past sixty-seven years, I often find myself wondering and speculating on what will be a central location for our business sixty-seven years hence."

YANKEES LEAD AMERICAN LEAGUE RACE—GIANTS AND DODGERS LOSE—SCHOOLBOYS' BIG WALK

MACKMEN HUMBLED BY YANKS' HITTING

Wild Bill's Boys Pound Out 11 to 3 Victory—Take First Place in League Race.

It was real baseball war up at the Polo Grounds yesterday afternoon when Connie Mack brought the Athletics over to shake hands with Wild Bill Donovan's recruits. The Yanks didn't take kindly to the return of their old playmates. They had vivid recollections of past disasters when the Quaker City men were the topliners, and showed little mercy. Hits rattled off the Donovan bats in riotous profusion, and the Mackmen were banished for the day by a score of 11 to 3. The Yankees are getting so they won't recognize a defeat when it comes. Yesterday's result gave them their fifth straight victory, and the defeat of Detroit by the White Sox placed them on the roof of the baseball standing. Wild Bill is sure his boys have moved into the new observation for keeps.

The Mack men never had a chance. Connie had brought over a big bushel basket full of hits to distribute to his players, and the Yankees stole all of them. No matter who he sent to the mound, it was the same sad story—the pitchers couldn't get the hang of sending that ball down the trail so that safeties wouldn't bounce off the Yankee bats. Shawkey was the first to try, and he lasted for two and a third innings. Boone caused Connie to send out a lifeline to his first choice. After Doc Cook had singled, he shot the sphere right on the nose and landed it in the right field grand stand for a circuit of the bases. It was more than Mack could stand, and he pulled Shawkey to the bench, deciding he would do better as a mere spectator. Bressler was the next choice. He stayed until the end of the sixth, and then made his little bow and retired. Davis, who replaced him, did not do much better, the final inning producing four hits for the Yanks, one a two-bagger by Mr. Caldwell.

Incidentally Ray pitched a great game for his teammates. At the start it seemed as if the Mackmen might find him, but as the game wore on they got few glimpses of the ball. He allowed only seven hits, and six of them came in the first four innings, but produced only three runs. In the seventh and eighth innings Caldwell went a bit wild, but he steadied before serious damage had been done.

One thing that helped him was the excellent support which was accorded him by the rest of the team, not only in hitting—there was a plenty of that—but in the sharp fielding. A mouse couldn't have got through that infield. Three snappy double plays were to the credit of the Yanks when it was all over, and each was completed by the same set of men, Peckinpaugh, Boone, and Pipp.

If there was one outstanding star on the New York team it was Fritz Maisel. In five times at bat he slashed out four singles and fouled out to Schang on his final effort. Also he scored four of the New York runs, and one in the sixth was counted only because of his clever work on the bases.

The first Philadelphia tally was the result of a three-bagger to centre by Strunk and a single to left by Schang. In the next a single through Peckinpaugh by Walsh, a pass, an infield out, and a single to centre by Lajoie scored another tally. The final one was in the fourth, when Barry singled, went to third on Kopf's hit to left, and counted when Bressler sent a sacrifice fly to left. The Yankees scored one in the first inning as a result of a hit, two passes, and an infield out. In the second Sweeney singled to centre and Caldwell walked. Maisel singled through Barry, and scored Sweeney. Hartzell's sacrifice fly brought in Caldwell, and Maisel scored on Shawkey's wild throw. In the third Boone scored Cook and himself on a drive to the right wing of the grand stand. In the fourth and fifth Maisel scored, the first on a single and infield out and a hit by High, and the second on a hit, a wild pitch, a stolen base, and a wild throw. The final scoring was done in the eighth. Caldwell doubled, High was safe on Barry's fumble, and Ray scored. Pipp singled to left, sending High to third, and stole second. Cook singled to right, scoring High and Pipp. The score:

CLEVELAND, May 1.—Mental and mechanical errors allowed St. Louis to defeat Cleveland, 5 to 3, in ten innings today. All of St. Louis's runs were the result of misplays, while Cleveland earned two runs of its three. The winning runs were scored after one was out on Shotton's single, Shields's error, Austin's grounder, Pratt's base on balls, a force play, and C. Walker's hit. Shotton walked the four times he faced Hagerman. Score:

Detroit Shut Out by Sox.

CHICAGO, May 1.—Russell proved an enigma to Detroit today, holding them to three scattered hits, while Chicago shut out the visitors, 5 to 0. Ray Schalk's homer with two men on the bases was enough to give the locals the game, but they added two more by bunching hits in the third and eighth innings. Cobb was ordered out of the game in the seventh for arguing with Umpire Nallin after he had been called out on strikes. Score:

PHILLIES RECOVER AT GIANTS' EXPENSE

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 1.—With Grover Cleveland Alexander pitching his usual airtight game, the Phillies recovered their winning stride after dropping two games in a row to the slugging Dodgers, taking today's game from the Giants by a score of 4 to 2. It was the fifth straight game the Phillies have captured from McGraw's crippled outfit. A crowd of 10,000 fans was on hand to witness the downfall of the Giants.

Christy Mathewson again essayed to break into the winning column, but while "Big Six" pitched a clever game, a home run clout over the right field fence by Beals Becker, and a fumble that Larry Doyle mixed in at a critical stage, proved too big a handicap for the veteran to overcome. The homer came in the first, following a clean single by Bancroft, and netted two runs, and the miscue by the Giants' Captain came in the sixth, with Byrne on second as a result of his single. Bancroft sacrificed, and was followed by Whitted, who singled to left, the combination producing the other two runs.

In the other innings which Matty pitched he showed a lot of his old-time skill and had his famous "fadeaway" working to perfection. He was particularly puzzling to big "Gabby" Cravath, who fanned the three times he faced Matty, although his third strike-out was made to protect a base stealer. "Rube" Schauer pitched the eighth inning, when Matty gave way to Eddie Grant, and the Phillies gathered two hits off the youngster. Bobby Byrne opened the inning with a slam to deep centre, which netted him three bases, but he was declared out when "Dode" Paskert, who was coaching at third base, became so enthusiastic over the hit that he tapped Bobby on the shoulder. The display of affection cost the Phillies a run, for Bancroft rapped a single to right which would have counted Byrne.

Alexander simply toyed with the Giants and blanked them in all but two innings. "Chief" Meyers prevented Alexander from scoring a shut-out victory by rapping a pair of doubles off the big Nebraskan. In the third the Indian backstop opened with a two-bagger to centre, and after Alexander had disposed of Matty and Murray, Doyle dropped a single into centre which tallied the Chief. Alexander took liberties with Brainard in the eighth, and the youngster hit one to left for two bases. Meyers got his second two-bagger to centre, scoring Brainard, and Eddie Grant, who batted for Matty, singled to centre, scoring Brainard. It began to look like trouble for the Phillies then, but Alexander quickly put on the brakes and stopped the rally. Murray hit a liner to Whitted, Doyle rolled one to Luderus, who tagged first, and Honus Lobert lifted a fly to Cravath. In the ninth the Giants went out in order. A pretty play, Luderus to Alexander, retired Robertson for the third out.

Alexander had brilliant support to help him win his fifth straight game of the season. Davey Bancroft played a sensational game, and made two singles and a sacrifice off of Mathewson. In the first he made a wonderful stop when Fletcher's grounder skimmed close to second, and tossed the ball with a back-hand throw to Dugey, forcing Lobert. In the fifth he ran back of third, grabbed Robertson's grounder, and nailed the runner at first by a long and accurate throw. Twice, when New York runners tried to steal second, Bancroft made the catch and put the ball on the runner. Altogether the youngster had a brilliant day, and the big crowd enjoyed his work. Byrne beat Lobert out of a hit by fielding his bunt in the fourth with one hand, and Becker made a circus one-hand catch of Fletcher's fly in the seventh, after misjudging the ball.

The Giants presented a patched-up team, owing to several of their regulars being on the injured list, but they played good ball behind Mathewson. Fred Snodgrass, who had been booked to play first instead of Merkle, who has a dislocated shoulder, was kept out of the game by a sore hand. Brainard, a recruit, played the bag. Lobert, the former Philly third sacker, was given a warm welcome and had a chance to tie the game up in the eighth, but flied out. He made a fine stop off of Dugey in the second. Lobert was spiked in one of the Boston games, but insisted on playing against his old teammates. The score:

RIGLER AND HERZOG FIGHT.

Then Each Has the Other Arrested for Disturbing Peace.

ST. LOUIS, May 1.—Umpire Rigler and Manager Herzog of Cincinnati fought on the local National League field and later caused each other's arrest on charges of disturbing the peace.

In the seventh inning Huggins of St. Louis put Leach of Cincinnati out at second by the hidden ball trick. Herzog disputed Rigler's decision and was ordered off the field. A few minutes later he returned, and according to Rigler, insulted the umpire. Rigler tore off his mask and struck Herzog in the face with it. The two struggled until their fellow players and twelve policemen separated them. Herzog suffered a bleeding nose and discolored eye. Rigler was unmarked. St. Louis won from the visitors 9 to 5. LEAVEY FIRST IN SCHOOLBOYS' WALK

Charles S. Leavey of the New Lots Evening High School, walking at an average of a mile in nine minutes for the entire distance, won the Finley Distance Walk for evening high school students over the streets of New York yesterday afternoon. The race started from Public School 52, at the corner of Academy Street and Broadway, and the route was down Broadway and St. Nicholas Avenue to Fifty-ninth Street, around Central Park, and then north on Fifth Avenue to the College of the City of New York, making a total distance of about 13 1-3 miles, which Leavey covered in 1:59.

Going to the front in the first few blocks of the race, Leavey increased his lead to four blocks at the sixth mile, and at the ninth mile he was leading by seven blocks, with J. Anthony of Stuyvesant Evening Trade School in second place. Leavey suffered from a "stitch in his side" when he was coming down Central Park West, but recovered quickly and struck his fast stride again. Leavey walked in the street most of the way, but, where traffic was heavy, he took to the sidewalk and on Fifth Avenue he was forced to keep off the sidewalk because of the many baby carriages in his path.

With nearly 600 students in lines across the street, Dr. Henry Jenkins, Superintendent of the evening schools, started the walkers on their long trip at 2:32 o'clock. For the first few blocks the walkers were pretty well bunched, but when the first mile mark was reached they were strung out in a long line. Walkers of all types, ages and sizes took part in the contest, and they were attired in all sorts of costumes, from the regulation walking uniform to the regular every-day attire.

The Winner.

Walking at a steady, consistent pace, Leavey passed under the archway at the entrance of the City College Grounds on Convent Avenue at 4:31, and J. Anthony, who finished second, came in 4 minutes and 50 seconds later. Of the 600 students who started in the race but 200 finished, the rest dropping out at different places along the long route. One boy was disqualified during the contest for riding on a bicycle. The judges caught the young man speeding down St. Nicholas Avenue on a friend's bicycle and quickly ordered him out of the race. There were no disqualifications for illegal walking and the judges were unanimous in complimenting the walkers on their strict adherence to the rules of heel and toe walking.

Dr. John H. Finley, State Commissioner of Education, who donated the bronze medals given to the first twenty-five walkers finishing in the contest, was unable to be present, as he was detained in Albany. The next ten men finishing after twenty-fifth place were awarded silver medals by The New York World. The thirty-five medal winners follow:

COLUMBIA ATHLETES LEAD.

Outscore Wesleyan by 26 Points on Field and Track.

Columbia defeated Wesleyan in a track and field meet yesterday afternoon on South Field, by the score of 76 to 50. This is the first time these colleges have met on the track in a score of years, and the meet was the opening contest of the season for both teams. The events on the track preceded the baseball game between the two colleges, in which Columbia also won.

The Blue and White athletes had the best of it all the way, taking eight first places to the Methodists' six. In two events, the shot put and the running broad jump, the home team took all three places from the visitors.

Sterling E. Graham was the star of the meet for the Columbia team, winning three first places, the only three events in which he competed.

G. R. Potter of Wesleyan carried off first places in the half mile, mile and pole vault events.

The contest between L. G. Smith, Columbia's cross-country Captain, and G. K. Cashman in the two-mile run was the spectacular event of the games. Cashman took the lead for the first mile, with his team mate, A. H. Treadwell, at his heels. Smith, after hanging well behind, challenged Cashman in a series of sprints that covered the next half mile, when Smith forged to the front and kept a two-yard lead until the finish. The summaries:

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 1.—Officials of the Colonial League announced today that Arlie Latham would manage the Tip Tops, one of the two baseball clubs that will represent New Bedford in the league this season. Latham was last with the New York Giants.

BRAVES BEAT BROOKLYN.

Veteran Long Tom Hughes Pitches Eight Scoreless Innings.

Long Tom Hughes, an outcast of the Yankees, Rochester, Washington, and several other clubs, showed up well with the world's champion Braves at Ebbets Field yesterday, and Brooklyn lost its first home game of the season with Boston by a score of 4 to 1. Hughes is not "coming back." He has already arrived. His victory yesterday was the third he has registered this season. Pitted against Sherrod Smith, a youngster drafted by Brooklyn from Newark this year, the veteran Hughes pitched a very superior brand of baseball, and from the start Brooklyn did not have a chance. He had no speed, but he had plenty of curves and still more gray matter, and he was successful in turning back his opponents scoreless for eight innings. It was not until the ninth chapter that the Robins earned their single counter.

Hughes gave "Chief" Stallings few moments of worry, allowing only three hits, and he was equally meagre with his passes. There may have been one or two occasions when Hughes appeared to be tottering, but Rabbit Maranville and big Hans Schmidt formed the bulwark which supported him through the danger periods. Maranville was especially active, and he killed off more than one hit for Brooklyn.

Smith, for a youngster, pitched steadily against the heavy-hitting champions. One of the runs registered against him was a present from himself. In the third inning the Brooklyn pitcher threw wild past Daubert on an intended sacrifice by Fitzpatrick, giving him two bases and sending Moran, who had walked, to third. Cather then drove a sacrifice to Wheat.

Red Smith, a former Superba favorite, was a factor in the two runs scored by Boston in the second inning. Sherwood Magee opened the inning with a single to left field. Smith followed this blow with a triple into left field, and tallied himself when Maranville popped a hit into centre field.

On his first appearance at bat, Zach Wheat, the slugging left fielder, received a reception from 6,000 enthusiasts which would have flattered any player and which proved that Brooklyn would have gone into mourning if he had been traded to the Giants, as was reported last week. Zach then gave a fine exhibition in left field, making two of the running one-handed catches for which he is noted.

Ollie O'Mara, the clever Superba shortstop, was the only Brooklynite who could reach Hughes's benders, and he slammed out two of his team's three safeties. Schultz got the other, but neither of the trio figured in Brooklyn's scoring in the ninth. Daubert walked at the start of this period, and Stengel was hit by a pitched ball. But it took three outs to bring Captain Jake in. The score:

DUAL ATHLETIC MEETS.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., May 1.—Swarthmore and Rutgers tied in a track meet here this afternoon, the result narrowing down to the pole vault, in which Smith and Olen of Swarthmore won both places. Nash broke Rutgers' discus record with a heave of 128 feet 7 inches. Talman also broke a Rutgers record in the shot-put with a throw of 38 feet 3½ inches. The prettiest race of the day was the 440-yard, in which Bowles of Rutgers nosed out Pohlig of Swarthmore with a wonderful spurt in the time of 0:53. Gowdy scored both first place in high and low hurdles for Swarthmore, and also first in the broad jump.

DURHAM, N. H., May 1.—Bates outclassed New Hampshire College in a dual track meet here today by the score of 87½ to 49½. Pettee of New Hampshire made the only record, doing the high jump at 5 feet 4¾ inches, a new mark for his college. A wet field and heavy wind slowed up all the performances.

BALTIMORE, May 1.—Lafayette defeated Johns Hopkins in a dual track meet today 54 to 47.

ANNAPOLIS, May 1.—University of Virginia defeated Navy in a track meet today 63 to 44.

ANDOVER, Mass., May 1.—Phillips-Andover Academy's track team won, 76½ to 19½, from the Harvard freshman team here today. The track was heavy and the time slow. Andover outclassed the young collegians except in the half-mile event.

TROY, N. Y., May 1.—Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute was defeated by Middlebury College here this afternoon in their annual dual track meet by 76 to 46. The ground was very soggy, making fast time impossible.

Smash College Track Records.

NEW HAVEN, May 1.—Two college records were broken in the annual Spring track meet at Yale today. J. W. Overton of Nashville, Tenn., ran the two miles in 9:36 2-5, lowering the previous record by twelve seconds. Vallean Wilkie of New York City bettered the quarter-mile record by two-fifths of a second, going the distance in 0:48 2-5. There was no wind and fast time was made in all of the events.

Final English Soccer Results.

LONDON, May 1.—The English soccer season was brought to a conclusion today, only one second division and three Southern League games being left to complete the schedule. Everton retained its position at the top of the first division and carried off the championship. The two London clubs, Chelsea and Tottenham Hotspur, are at the other end of the table and are both reduced to the second division for next season, exchanging places with Derby County and Preston North End. The failure of London's most prominent teams to retain their positions is a big disappointment. Watford kept up their brilliant form right to the last game and captured the Southern League championship for the first time, but Croydon Common and Gillingham will appear in the second division next season, Stoke and Stalybridge being promoted. The Scottish League season ends on May 15, but only six games have to be decided. The summaries:

Southern League.—Northampton, 3; Millwall, 1. Southend United, 3; Plymouth Argyle, 1. Brighton & Hove, 1; Crystal Palace, 0.

KAUFF BLACKLISTED BY COMMISSION

Jumping Ball Player "Not Proper Person to be Identified with Game."

CINCINNATI, Ohio, May 1.—The National Baseball Commission today refused the application for reinstatement of Benny Kauff, Brooklyn Federal League player, who signed a New York National League contract on last Thursday.

Following the announcement, Chairman Herrmann said: "The finding speaks for itself. The Commissioners voted it unanimously, and further discussion on my part would be useless."

The finding of the commission follows:

Player B. Kauff applies to the National Commission for reinstatement in organized baseball. His request is refused for the reason that in the past he has not respected his contractual obligations, and therefore, in our judgment, is not a desirable person to be identified with the great national game.

(Signed), AUGUST HERRMANN,
B. B. JOHNSON,
JOHN K. TENER,
National Commission.

The decision was arrived at after numerous telephonic communications had taken place between Chairman August Herrmann and President Tener of the National League and President Johnson of the American League, the other two members of the commission.

The result of the decision will be that Kauff cannot play baseball with the New York Nationals or any club operating under the rules of the National baseball agreement.

KAUFF BACK TO BROOKLYN.

Giants Relinquish All Claim When Contract Is Produced.

After a conference yesterday between President Harry N. Hempstead of the Giants and Robert B. Ward of the Brookfeds, it was decided that the New York club was laboring under a misapprehension in relation to player Benny Kauff, and as soon as Mr. Ward showed Mr. Hempstead Kauff's contract with the Brookfeds, the Giants immediately relinquished their hold on the "Ty Cobb of the Federal League." He will go back and play with the Brookfeds.

There will be no baseball war over this case. Mr. Hempstead acknowledged that both he and Manager McGraw believed Kauff when he made an affidavit that he was a free agent. As a matter of fact, he was not a free agent. His contract, which he signed at Browns Wells, Miss., with Business Manager Dick Carroll, stands.

One fact about yesterday's conclave at the Waldorf-Astoria stood out prominently. The Federal League club owners assembled here in a fighting state of mind. Regardless of expense, the outlaws came to town determined to fight the Kauff case to the bitter end. When it was understood that the attitude of the New York club was conciliatory, the position of the Federal League changed, and there was nothing but kind remarks for the attitude that the Giants had taken in the Kauff controversy.

The National Commission ruled yesterday that Kauff could not be reinstated, but even before that decision was known, Mr. Hempstead had conferred with Mr. Ward and had learned that the Kauff case had not been represented to the Giants in a fair manner. There is no doubt that Kauff, in stating his case to Manager McGraw, concealed certain facts about his contract with the Brookfeds.

In the final settlement between the two club owners this fact was taken into consideration and the case was settled to the satisfaction of all parties. Instead of meeting to fight the Kauff case against the Giants, the Federal League held no meeting at all, but went to the Federal League game in Brooklyn, leaving Mr. Hempstead and Mr. Ward to settle the matter.

The statements of Mr. Hempstead and Mr. Ward on the Kauff case are as follows. Mr. Hempstead's statement is:

"Kauff's services were offered to us several weeks ago, and it was represented that he was under no contract with any club, but a free agent. We investigated these statements carefully, and not until we felt thoroughly satisfied that he was free to sign a contract with us did we sign him. In response to Mr. Ward's telegram we had a conference with him and informed him that we had acted in the utmost good faith and in the belief that he had no contract with Kauff, but that if he could show us that he did have we would make no further claim to Kauff's services. In this conference Mr. Ward brought to our attention facts of which we had no previous knowledge, and which we believe give him the right to Kauff's services. Had we known these facts in the first place we would not have felt at liberty to sign Kauff, and, having learned of them, we willingly surrender his services to Mr. Ward."

Mr. Ward's statement is as follows:

"I am satisfied with the situation in regard to Bennie Kauff as set forth in Mr. Hempstead's statement. I believe that the recent complications were all the result of a misunderstanding."

GOOD RACES AT PRINCETON.

Tiger Track Team Leads U. of P. by 41 Points.

PRINCETON, N. J., May 1.—The performances in Princeton's open handicap track meet today were uniformly good. The best race of the day was the quarter-mile, which was won by Richardson of Princeton. He passed Meredith of Pennsylvania in the last ten yards. The Pennsylvania star was set six yards back of scratch, but as he turned into the straightaway he took the lead, only to lose at the tape. His time was estimated at 49 seconds flat.

Eller of the Irish-Americans was the only prominent star to win, capturing the 220 hurdles in easy fashion from Ferguson, another of Pennsylvania's best runners.

The Princeton team easily won the meet with sixty points, Pennsylvania trailing second with nineteen points, and the Irish-American club of New York third, with eleven.

VOTES FOR WOMEN DAY AT POLO GROUNDS—PENN DOWNS PRINCETON—YALE AND ARMY WIN

VOTES FOR WOMEN AT POLO GROUNDS

May 18 Will Be Suffragette Day, When Giants and Cubs Play.

Billy Sunday touches a match to the hell-fire and shunts people over on the glory trail by the hundreds, but the suffragettes are going to make Billy look like a second-rate "converter" when they invade the Polo Grounds on May 18 to win thousands to the cause of "votes for women." Mere man associates the Polo Grounds with baseball, but for that day it is going to be the suffragettes' temple. Of course there is to be a ball game—one between the Giants and the Cubs—but dangling yellow streamers shouting "Votes for women" and persuasive orators will impress on the carefree baseball fan that he should be occupied with the thought of that important question which he will have to vote FOR at the next election. What attraction could surpass it with side shows, lectures, and ball game for the price of an ordinary ticket. The suffragettes have turned many angles in their campaign, and now they are ready to punch the question right home when man is enjoying his favorite diversion. The stage is all set to make thousands of scoffers go home meek-minded converts.

When the women decided that a ball game would be the scene of their next political coup they went to Harry Hempstead and John Foster and told them of their wishes. As a result of the capturing of the Giants President and Secretary, the suffragettes now own the entire upper stand at the Polo Grounds, and that means about 9,000 seats. The next thing was to sell the purchase to men, and some women, and already that campaign is under way with the prospect that the entire block will be taken before the ball park is opened on the day of the game. Nine women, the suffrage ball team, have taken out peddlers' licenses and now they are wandering all over the city decked with the saffron-colored badges, offering their wares wherever they can bring together a group of men. The first assault was on the financial district and the next may be somewhere right in your neighborhood. You will know because there will be a crowd, a woman speaker, perhaps a ball player or two, and you will go over to see what the trouble is. Once there, could you well refuse to purchase the ticket for the three-ring performance on the eighteenth? The women who are selling the tickets are Mrs. Norman de R. Whitehouse, who arranged for the tickets, and a prime mover in the affair, Miss Bessie F. G. Brainard, Miss Virginia Thorburn, Miss Alice Morgan Wright, Mrs. Walter B. Chambers, Mrs. Ella O. Guilford, Miss Onna B. Raeder, Miss Leila Wittler, and Mrs. Helen Hoy Greeley.

At the same time that they are disposing of the tickets they scatter our circulars which read: "Buy your tickets NOW. The suffragettes will get 'em if you don't watch out." And not to lose sight of the main issue, some read: "Vote for the Women's Suffrage Amendment Nov. 2." Another wrinkle is the peddling out of autographed baseballs. The ones that bear Matty's name go great, but some lag. It would be unkind to mention names. The real object of it all is to boost the suffrage stock far above par. There will be very little money made, the tickets, with the exception of those for the boxes, being sold at the regular rate. The profit will be used to purchase prizes for the Captains and Lieutenants of the new political organization, who sell the most tickets. In ordinary political parlance they might be called the plums.

The arrangements for the day of the game are already quite complete. The suffragettes are well supplied with orators, who can give more arguments for the cause than a minister for salvation. They will have stands erected outside the grounds, and, as the hurrying baseball fans come to the gates, they will be greeted by women's suffrage on every hand. The women are a little worried, however, owing to the opposition from the elevated trains. They can't ask that they be stopped or the people won't get to the grounds, and they are not at all sure that their voices will sound out above the din. However, the printed word may prove stronger than the spoken, and there will be plenty of circulars.

There will be streamers and flags inside the grounds, and perched away up on top for all the world to see will be a big ribbon of yellow across the top of the grandstand on which will be written "votes for women." New York society is going to turn out for the occasion, that is, the society that favors the suffragettes. The wives of the baseball players of the two teams will be invited to attend, and an effort will be made to have a number of the city officials show their approval by being present.

What the ballplayers think about the innovation runs from the sublime to the ridiculous. Some of them won't talk, others want to consult their wives before they commit themselves, and some don't know how they are ever going to play for such a cause. Matty, the peerless, who was thought to have determined views on every subject has sidestepped, but one or two of his teammates have decided that suffrage is a great thing for women. When you start to talk to the most of ballplayers about it, however, they shift from one foot to the other like a boy stuttering his first recitation in the country school, mumble a word or two and then say "Now I've got to get out on the field to practice." That's the end of it. One Giant said: "You've heard about the jinx in baseball; well, say, this suffrage bunch will put the kibosh on us so hard that we can never beat those Cubs. Just think of the laugh they are going to give up when they see "Votes for women" plastered all over the grandstand. It will be worse to look at those than to pick out a cross-eyed girl in the crowd, and anyone knows that's the worst jinx that can hit a ballplayer." Hans Lobert, however, is not so pessimistic. He is married, and Mrs. Lobert has not told him to beat the suffrage cause with a baseball bat. In fact, Mrs. Lobert has told him just the opposite, so Hans is all for it. How could he be anything else?

Steve Evans, the humorist of baseball who tarries with the Brookfeds, heard about the "women plotters," and he called them and said he knew they would get it across the plate. Steve is for the cause and remarked that if he wasn't a ball player he just as lief be a suffragette, and you couldn't get any better send-off for the women than that.

Practically every one on the Brookfed team favors women having the vote. Down South when the boys weren't playing poker or baseball they picked out some subject like suffrage to furnish a little amusement. And they got quite proficient, according to Steve and Hap Myers, who is another staunch suffragette. Hap comes from California so he knows all about the question. Mrs. Hap does too, for she has a vote out there in San Diego. Steve Evans said if the ladies came over to Washington Park he would go through his best paces for them. If Steve hadn't been a ball player or a sufragette he would surely have been a stage comedian.

TRINITY BEATS N. Y. U.

Baker, Hartford Collegians' Twirler, Aids Materially in Winning Game.

Special to The New York Times.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 1.—In view of his remarkable pitching and hitting feat, which won for Trinity an 8 to 3 victory over New York University this afternoon, the story is nearly told when it is stated that Baker won his own game. To Genovese, the New York twirler, who stuck it out against uphill odds, credit must be allowed, for he, too, like Baker, made a three-base hit.

Trinity had a lead in the fifth inning when Ferris gave way to Baker, and the first three men up struck out. In the succeeding three innings but three men in each inning faced Baker.

He clouted out his long three-bagger in the eighth inning, bringing in a run and himself scoring a moment later. Pfau, New York's back stop, got two hits, one of them a double, and his work was generally commendable. Pfau began the scoring in the third inning when his doube inspired Woolff to a neat little single.

In the fifth inning Freitag, first to face Ferris, walked, and then Genovese's long three-base hit enlivened the proceedings. Genovese himself scored on Lund's out fly to centre. After that Baker controlled New York's destinies. Trinity secured two runs in the fourth through a combination of two hits, an error, and Schmidt being hit. In the next inning Genovese walked three men and allowed four hits. Three runs came in and two more were disallowed because Smith "Merkled" third base. Baker's big heave in the eighth with three other singles netted Trinity's concluding three runs and ended a good hitting contest. The score:

City College Gets Only Two Hits.

Special to The New York Times.

SOUTH ORANGE, N. J., May 1.—Seton Hall won from the College of the City of New York in an interesting contest decided on Seton Field here this afternoon, the score being 5 to 0. The game was a pitchers' battle between Heine of the Setonians and Rosenberg of City College, the latter cracking in the final round. Prior to their last time at bat the Seton Hall players had scored but two runs. In the final round, however, they accounted for three tallies on four hits, one a triple. Heine held the New Yorkers to two singles. Pitcher Rosenberg and Manz accounted for the only hits off Heine, but as they came in different innings no scoring resulted. Seton Hall scored a run in the second, when Shafrey followed up Maurice Shannon's three-bagger with a single. In the second a single by Captain Jack Fish and a two-sacker by Sullivan accounted for another. Krámer, at short for City College, did some clever fielding, accepting six chances out of seven. Rutgers, 5; Swarthmore, 3.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., May 1.—Rutgers won a spectacular game of baseball from Swarthmore this afternoon by the score of 5 to 3. In the first inning Rutgers landed on Twinning for five straight hits, including three doubles, which netted four runs. After that inning Twinning was invincible. There was spectacular fielding by both teams. Swarthmore rallied in the ninth inning, but Gilliam's great running catch of Riffert's long drive ended the game, leaving men stranded on third and second bases. Howlett and Browning hit hard for Rutgers, each getting three hits. Jennings pitched fine ball for Rutgers. Score by innings:

PRINCETON BEATEN BY PENN'S RALLY

Quakers Break Losing Streak by Downing the Tigers by 7 to 5 Score.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 1.—In an eighth-inning rally, which netted them two runs, Pennsylvania defeated Princeton here this afternoon, 7 to 5, before an immense crowd of undergraduates and college baseball fans who thronged Franklin Field in celebration of "straw hat day." As a result of this victory Pennsylvania's nine redeemed its long string of defeats at the hands of colleges, big and little, since the beginning of the season.

Pennsylvania started off strong in the first, when two runners went across the plate. Another run was added in the fourth, but Princeton came right back and tied the score with one in the fifth and two more in the sixth. Pennsylvania was not to be denied the victory, however, and hammered out enough hits to put over one in the sixth, one more in the seventh, and two in the eighth, after the Tigers had tallied two more, making a total of five, in their half of the eighth.

Deyo for Pennsylvania and Speilman for Princeton were reached for a total of ten hits each. The score:

COLUMBIA, 6; WESLEYAN, 1.

Methodists Get Third Drubbing from Local University Nine.

Columbia scored a victory over Wesleyan yesterday afternoon when the Blue and White baseball nine took the measure of the Methodists by the score of 6 to 1. The visitors held the Columbia team well in check until the eighth inning, when they weakened and four runs came piling across the plate in rapid succession. Yesterday was the third successive drubbing the Columbia team administered to the Wesleyan in as many years.

George Smith, the big pitcher of the Columbia nine, was in rare form. He ended with seventeen strikeouts. Only four hits were tallied off him, and these were all of the scratch variety.

The game was a nip and tuck contest for the first three frames. The break came in the fourth, when Wesleyan scored their lone run on Friederich's glaring error. Columbia evened in the same round and took the lead in the next inning. Lanning finally broke in the eighth and touched up with five hits and threw away all hope of evening up the contest. No Skiff Racing in England.

From the present indications, skiff racing, which is a popular sport in England, will probably be abandoned this season, as at the annual meeting of the Skiff Racing Association, held in England recently, it was decided to postpone the 1915 regatta.

Many of the regattas were abandoned last year, and the championships were not decided on account of the war. The Racing Committee of the association has come to the conclusion that the holding of any races or regattas this year would be unwise, as under the present circumstances they have thought it well to postpone the calling of the meeting to arrange a schedule.

Cup for Young Polo Players.

In an effort to encourage the playing of polo among the young men of Long Island and vicinity, and possibly to develop new material for future international competitions, The Brooklyn Eagle has offered a silver cup to be contested for annually. The Eagle Low Goal Handicap Cup, as the trophy will be known, will be played for at a tournament to be decided upon by the Polo Association and the donor, and will be open to any team composed of players who are members of a club belonging to the governing polo organization. The total handicap of any competing team shall not be more than seven goals, and that of any individual not greater then three goals. The cup will become the property of the club winning it three times.

EQUALS MARQUARD RECORD.

Neyland of West Point Beats Georgetown in Nineteenth Consecutive Victory.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., May 1.—The Army was too much for Georgetown today, the collegians taking the count, 11 to 4. It was another fine exhibition of coming from behind, Georgetown getting away to a lead in the second inning which they increased in the first half of the fourth. Neyland had been liberal with his passes up to this time, Tormey getting on via this route in the second and coming in on Oliphant's passed ball.

Two more passes in the fourth and a single by Irwin gave Georgetown its second run, and after that Neyland settled down and took things easy.

The Army went after Haggerty in the fourth. Gerhardt walked, Merrill forced him at second, Hobbs beat but a hit through short, and both runners scored on Britton's homer to the scoreboard.

Haggerty got the hook after that inning, and Finnegan began taking a lacing right in the next frame. Hits by Oliphant, Prichard, and Coffin, and Connelly's error figured in the two tallies the Cadets garnered. Neyland, Gerhardt, and Merrill all hit safely in the seventh, and then Hobbs, the Army's reliable hitter, came through with a circuit clout to deep centre, clearing the bases. Neyland eased up in the final frames, and Georgetown scored in the seventh and ninth. Star catches by Bradley and McCarthy featured in the fielding.

It is now nineteen straight for the Army hurler and ten straight victories for the Cadets this season. The score:

Yale Beat Virginia by Score of 6 to 2—Milburn's Circus Play.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 1.—Timely hitting allowed Yale to overcome Virginia today 6 to 2. The fielding feature was a leap into the air and a one-handed catch by Milburn off Frye's bat.

Way was effective except in the second inning, when he passed Phillips, who scored on Captain Middlebrook's poor return of the ball to third base. Paskell's single scored Stickley.

Middlebrook scored for Yale in the first inning on his pass, his steal, and two outs.

Reilly walked and stole second in the next inning, scoring on Bush's two-bagger.

Yale clinched the game in the fourth on Reilly's single, Easton's sacrifice, singles by Bush and Hunter, and Way's two-bagger. Le Gore poled a three-bagger in the seventh, scoring on Easton's single. The score:

Crescent A. C. Downs Fordham.

With Conway and Kiernan injured during the first few innings of play the Fordham baseball team lost at Bay Ridge yesterday to the Crescent A. C. The score was 8 to 7. Much wrangling took place when Collins was called out at the plate in the third inning. The heavy batting of Riddell, who rapped out a triple, a double, and two singles in as many trips to the plate, was responsible for most of the Bay Ridge runs.

Catholic Baseball League.

Weather permitting, the first game of a series by a new amateur baseball league will be played tomorrow at Jasper Field, Macomb's Dam Park, and the Pelham Bay Park. The new organization is known as the Catholic Baseball League, and is made up of teams from four Roman Catholic parishes in Harlem and four more in the Bronx. The Harlem teams will represent the Church of the Annunciation, St. Catherine's, St. Joseph's, and the Church of the Holy Rosary. The Bronx parishes represented are those of St. Anselm, Sts. Peter and Paul, St. Mary, and St. Jerome. Annunciation and St. Anselm will play tomorrow at Jasper Field; St. Catherine and Sts. Peter and Paul and St. Joseph and St. Mary at Macomb's Dam Park, on two different fields, and Holy Rosary and St. Jerome at Pelham Bay Park. The teams are made up of the best amateurs in the respective parishes, young men who know the game well. As there is lively rivalry the competitions, which will last through the Summer, should be productive of good sport.

FED MOGULS WATCH GAME IN BROOKLYN

Gilmore and Owners See Pittsburgh Take First Game of Eastern Trip by 2 to 1.

Pittsburgh invaded Washington Park yesterday in the first game of her Eastern trip and defeated the Brookfeds 2 to 1 in the presence of President James Gilmore and all of the club owners of the Federal League. The Fed moguls journeyed to the park when the League meting at th Waldorf had ended. In the boxes with President Gilmore were Edward W. Gwinner, of the Pittsburgh Club; Phil Ball and Otto Stifel, of St. Louis; Pat Powers and Harry Sinclair, of Newark; Ned Hanlon and C. W. Rasin, of Baltimore; G. W. Robertson, of Buffalo; Charles H. Weeghman, of Chicago, and George F. and Robert B. Ward, of Brooklyn.

It was Konetchy's triple to centre field in the third inning that spelled disaster for the Brookfeds. Jones, the first man up for the Rebels in the third inning, singled to left, and went to second when Berghammer sacrificed. Mowrey drew a pass, and Konetchy straightened out one of Lafitte's offerings for three bases, scoring Jones and Mowrey. Oakes, the next man, hit to Myers, and Konetchy tried to make home, but was trapped and run down on the third-base line. Lafitte settled down after this inning and held Pittsburgh in check.

Brooklyn' only run came in the fifth inning. Lafitte singled with two down, making the first hit off Frank Allen, who was formerly a Dodger pitcher, and went to third when Anderson doubled to right. Magee walked, filling the bases, and Lafitte was forced home when Allen passed Delahanty, who batted for Cooper. Gagnier got on base in the ninth, but a double play on Land's grounder retired the side, ending Brooklyn's chances of tying the score. Holt, at third, played wonderful ball for the Brookfeds, accepting seven chances, three of which were drives that skimmed over third base. The score:

Moran Stars for Newark.

NEWARK, N. J., May 1.—Harry Moran held the St. Louis terriers in check today while his team mates piled up four runs. Three of the four tallies were driven in by Moran himself, who was very much in the spotlight. The all-around playing of Roush was a feature. The score:

St. Louis	0	0	0	1	0	0	0	0	0	—1		10	2
Newark	0	2	0	1	1	0	0	0	.	—4		8	0

Chifeds Score Victory.

BUFFALO, May 1.—Prendergast outpitched Anderson in a 2-to-1 victory for Chicago today. It was Anderson's first appearance in the box here this season. He pulled out of what looked like a bad fix in the fourth inning, when the visitors secured only one run out of three singles and a base on balls. With the bases full and one out Farrell forced Fischer at the plate and Prendergast struck out. Score:

											R.	H.	E.

Bender Loses Close Game.

BALTIMORE, Md., May 1.—Kansas City made it two straight by taking today's seesaw contest from Baltimore, 5 to 4. Bender allowed only three hits in seven innings, but Chadbourn's homer sent in two runs ahead. Doolan and Meyer featured in fielding.

Manhattan Trims St. John's, 7 to 3.

The fast Manhattan College nine defeated St. John's yesterday by the score of 7 to 3 on Van Nest Oval. It was a pitchers' battle between O'Connor and E. Carey until the seventh inning, when, with three men on bases, Caffrey tripled to right, starting the downfall of Carey. The batting of Nolan and the fielding of Barry and J. Houlihan featured. Captain O'Connor twirled an excellent game, being especially good in the pinches. The Manhattan Prep beat St. Augustine's Academy in the first game. Score:

Row for Childs Cup Saturday.

PRINCETON, May 1.—Princeton's rowing hopes will have their first really big test of the season next Saturday, when the Tigers will race Columbia and the University of Pennsylvania in the annual regatta for the Childs Cup. Although Princeton disposed of the Naval Academy eight rather easily two weeks ago, neither Dr. Spaeth nor his pupils have any illusions about next Saturday's event. Columbia has never failed to send a perfectly conditioned and well-trained crew to Lake Carnegie, and this year's eight, a light, fast combination, is admirably adapted to the requirements of the Henley distance. Not much is known about Penn, but it is the general belief that the Quakers are stronger than their defeat by Yale would indicate. It is almost certain that Princeton will send against Columbia and Penn the same crew that won from the Navy.

Noted English Yachtsman Dead.

Frederick J. Harrison, who was well known in the English yachting circles and a member of the Royal Yacht Squadron, the Royal Mersey, and the Royal London Yacht Clubs, died recently at Maer Hall, Staffordshire. In his memory the flags were all placed at half-mast at all the leading yacht clubs in England. Mr. Harrison, who was very fond of yachting, chartered a number of yachts, until about twelve years ago he purchased the steam yacht Clementina, in which he took several voyages. His last trip was to the West Indies last year.

YALE TEAM ENDS PRACTICE.

Stress Laid on Passes and New Plays—Exhibition Monday.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 1.—Easily the most elaborate Spring football training practive ever ordered at Yale closed today, and an exhibition of punting, drop-kicking, and passing, for both accuracy and distance, next Monday will show the result of the work. Head Coach Frank Hinkey last year put on the gridiron a Yale eleven which excelled all its predecessors in ability to pass and punt accurately.

That Hinkey will base his next Fall campaign upon perfection of details in the use of the forward and lateral pass, and in clever distance punting and drop-kicking, is apparent from the three weeks' Spring practice which closed today.

The Spring work was behind closed gates. New plays which the coaches plan to rely upon as the strength of their attack have been tried and a new system of defense has been tested. Yale's weak defense of last year led to the impression that the rush line was the weakest the Elis have exhibited. For two weeks the linemen have worked in breaking through and have tested the new defense thoroughly.

One of the features of the Yale campaign of next Fall is likely to prove the heavy artillery drives of the giants, Arthur Yates and Big Dick Kent. Yates, who weighs 235 pounds, was called behind the line from tackle. Kent, the former Stevens Institute guard and tackle, is an equally powerful line driver and the presence of the pair on the Eli eleven of next Fall will allow the team a source of power which Yale has lacked for several seasons.

The squad will include several brothers of former Yale stars, including Hutchinson, Wise, and Markle, all of whom were in the freshman back-field last Fall. Preliminaries in the punting and passing contests were held at the field today, leaving only the final for Monday.

Tigers' Football Plans Complete.

PRINCETON, N. J., May 1.—The final plans for Princeton's 1915 football campaign were announced this week, when the names of four coaches who will help Speedy Rush in his work next Fall were made public. They are Philip M. Brasher, '06; James L. Cooney, '06; W. Gresham Andrews, '13, and Wilbur J. Shenck, '15. Another man, whose name will be given out later, will probably be appointed to take care of the freshman squad.

Spring practice has but a week more to run, but that week will be the busiest of any since Coach Rush called out the candidates on April 9. There will be scrimmages every day, provided the weather isn't too warm, and when the men finish the last practice it is expected that they will have made about as much progress as is accomplished ordinarily in the first fortnight of the Fall season. Rush has been putting much stress on the forward pass, and, following Percy Haughton's lead, he has made use of moving pictures to supplement his personal direction; movies of scrimmage, and particularly those plays involving the forward pass, were taken several days this week. After Spring practice is over these pictures will be the subject of blackboard lectures for the squad.

PENN CREWS WIN FROM ANNAPOLIS

First and Second University Boats Defeat Midshipmen on the Severn.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., May 1.—The University of Pennsylvania, coached by Vivian Nickalls, took the rowing honors from the midshipmen this afternoon, winning with their 'Varsity and junior 'Varsity against the first and second crews of the academy. The academy fourth class crew, however, one of the best in its history, defeated the Pennsylvania freshmen.

The big Pennsylvania crew defeated the first Navy eight by over three lengths, and the margin in both of the other races was about two lengths. The course was the Henley distance of a mile and five-sixteenths. The time of the races was: Pennsylvania 'Varsity, 7:16; Navy first, 7:26 3-5. Pennsylvania junior 'Varsity, 7:21; Navy second, 7:28. Naval Academy, fourth class, 7:33; Pennsylvania freshmen, 7:38.

Although there had been some breeze during the morning it died down completely in the afternoon, and the races were rowed under perfect conditions. The freshmen race was the first, followed in order by the second crew race and the 'Varsity.

The hero of the day was little Foster, the coxswain of the Pennsylvania 'Varsity boat. Seized with appendicitis as he was leaving Philadelphia Thursday, he insisted upon making the trip, and occupied his place in the boat this afternoon. He had spent the night packed in ice, but he was determined not to be left out today, and steered his crew to victory.

The oarsmen in the first Navy crew started out with a stroke of forty to the minute, four more than their opponents. It was a desperate effort to set up a pace that Pennsylvania could not follow, but the Quakers were not excited, and easily held the midshipmen during the first third of the race. At that point both crews had dropped about two strokes, and the loss of vim in the Navy's stroke was perceptible. Half way down the course the visitors began gradually to pull away. They were getting more of their shoulders and legs into the stroke than did the midshipmen, and there was notably less stopping between strokes.

At a quarter of a mile from the finish the midshipmen again raised the stroke to forty, and Pennsylvania responded by increasing its time, but never pulled above thirty-six. Still it was plain that there was a reserve of power with the Quakers, and there was no time after the first third when Pennsylvania was not increasing its lead. It crossed the finish line rowing easily.

Jersey Road Drivers to Parade.

The Road Horse Association of New Jersey will hold its sixteenth annual parade next Saturday. It will start from the vicinity of Washington Park and end at Weequahic Park, where there will be a series of races held. Many of the light-harness drivers from all over the State are expected to be in the procession. The association will hold a luncheon at the Continental Hotel at 12 o'clock noon the day of the parade.

COURTNEY EXPERIMENTING.

Cornell Coach Makes Changes When 'Varsity Crew Fails in Trials.

ITHACA, N. Y., May 1.—The rearrangement of the Cornell oarsmen made this week by Coach Charles E. Courtney puts the crew situation at Ithaca again up in the air. No one now will endeavor to predict the make-up of the 'Varsity crew which will row Yale and Princeton on Carnegie Lake on May 15. The shift was characteristic of Courtney's methods, but it was far more sweeping than had been expected.

It has been known for some time that the showing made by the so-called first 'Varsity crew in the time trials and in the race with the other crews has not been satisfactory. It has been known that the crews up to this time were behind last year's eight in development, but it was not expected that Courtney would practically demolish his so-called first 'Varsity crew and reconstruct his entire 'Varsity flotilla. As it stands now he has three eights, none of which is markedly superior to the others, but the first of which has made a better showing than any other first crew so far this year.

Training Table for Freshmen.

An innovation in training methods at Fordham was instituted yesterday when Manager McCormack selected twelve of the freshman rowing squad for the newly arranged training table. For a month the freshman and Prep crews have been training on the Harlem River, and, with the Decoration Day races only a month off, the enforcement of stricter training methods was decided on yesterday. The training table will be in the senior section of the Fordham refectory.

During the last week the Maroon authorities procured a forty-horse power launch for the coach. As the Fordham crew candidates are strangers to the water game, it was decided to christen the launch The Rookie.

Negotiations were started during the last week with Coach Rice of Columbia to arrange a practice race in the near future between the Blue and Maroon freshman eights. The Prep crew has made application to Yale's racing coach to enter the Blue interscholastic rowing races at Whitney Lake next Saturday, when all the high-school crews of New England hold their annual competition.

Bethlehem Now the Champions.

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, Penn., May 1.—Bethlehem today, by defeating the Brooklyn Celtics 3 goals to 1, won the final contest in the National Challenge Cup elimination contest, and with it the championship of the United States. The game, staged in Taylor Stadium at Lehigh University, was brilliantly played. About 7,000 people witnessed the contest.

Bethlehem played the better game throughout. The Celtics put up a plucky struggle but could not get their combination play going, due to the fast work of Bethlehem's half backs. Line-up:

Brooklyn	Position.	Bethlehem.
Mather	Goal	Duncan
Nicholas	Right full back	Fletcher
McWilliams	Left half back	Ferguson
Broadbent	Right half back	Campbell
Donegan	Centre half back	Clarke
Neville	Left half back	Morrison
Campion	Outside right	Ford
Lonier	Inside right	Murray
Halloran	Centre forward	Miller

Law for Rod and Line Fishermen.

Governor Fielder of New Jersey has signed a bill that will gladden the hearts of many of the rod and line fishermen. The bill gives the sportsmen the right to fish unmolested in the waters of Sandy Hook and the Shrewsbury River from June 1 to Nov. 1, as the use of seines, purse nets, drift nets, and gill nets will be prohibited during that period.

104,000 Men are Working to Supply Goodyear Tires

In the jungle and the field, in our fabric factory, our tire plants, our branches, etc., 104,000 men are employed to meet the demand for Goodyears.

That demand has grown until last year men bought about one Goodyear tire for every car in use.

It is growing now faster than ever. Our sales to dealers have this spring shown an increase of 52 per cent.

We Fortify Tires

The reason is, we fortify our tires. We give you the best that others give, plus five exclusive features. In costly ways, employed by no one else, we combat these six great troubles:

Rim-Cuts Blowouts Loose Treads Insecurity Punctures Skidding

Not all these troubles can in any way be completely ended. But we combat them in the best ways known. We do it regardless of cost. Our "On-Air" cure—one exclusive feature—costs us $450,000 yearly.

We Never Skimp

Despite all price reductions, we never skimp these tires. In fact, scores of experts work all the time seeking new ways to improve them. Lately we have added three conspicuous improvements, each of which adds much to our tire cost.

This policy is apparent. Compare Goodyear size and thickness with the average tire. Compare the number of fabric plies. Some Goodyear supremacies can be seen at a glance.

Prices Way-Down

Goodyear has made in about two years three great price reductions. They total 45 per cent. The last was on February 1st.

Every saving we make—in rubber or cotton or through multiplied output—goes to Goodyear users. Our present output enables us to give you a value which none can duplicate.

Men who use Goodyear Fortified Tires get better tires than others. They have less trouble on the average, and less cost. The evidence lies in our exclusive features. It lies in our dominant place. And it lies in the swelling Goodyear tide. We urge you to join this army. Any dealer will supply you.

DISCUS RECORD AT SCHOOLBOY GAMES

Nearly two hundred young athletes competed in the sixth annual interscholastic track and field meet under the auspices of the Stevens Institute of Technology Athletic Association yesterday at Castle Point Field, Hoboken, N. J. Several sterling performances marked the youngsters' efforts, who represented twenty-two preparatory and high schools, but it remained with Robert Walker, Passaic High School, to carry off the honors of the games when he established a new interscholastic record for the discus throw, heaving the disk 158 feet 2¾ inches, supplanting his best figures of 155 feet. Walker actually eclipsed these figures, but the steel tape was removed before the Amateur Athletic Union officials could make their official measurement.

While Walker showed to advantage as a record-breaker, George Bronder, Polytechnic Prep, made the best showing among the competitors. Bronder won the shot-put with 48 feet 10 inches, the hammer throw with 107 feet 1 inch, and was a close second to the record-breaker in the discus throw. His performance in the latter event was 146 feet 4 inches, a few feet below the old record.

Competition for the point score trophy was keen, and it was not until the closing event of the meet was decided that the Poly Prep entrant in the high jump secured a point in this event, when the honors went to Poly Prep by 27 points to 24 for Morris High. Third place went to Stuyvesant High with 19 points. The other schools were outclassed.

Frank Jenkins, Far Rockaway, and John Bonaparte, Morris High, the two colored champions of the Public Schools Athletic League, won their events in splendid fashion. Jenkins, who is the half and one-mile champion, captured the mile event in 4:45 2-5, which equals the indoor record, and Bonaparte finished an easy winner in the furlong dash in 24 seconds. Bonaparte was also a member of the Morris relay team.

The defeat of Edward Balestier, Morris High, the quarter-mile P. S. A. C. title holder, came in the nature of a surprise. The event was won by A. Albrecht, Stuyvesant High, who alternated in the lead with Hal Finley, Morris High, until the last twenty yards, when a spurt carried him to the fore, and he won by the margin of half a yard.

The 100-yard dash also brought out lively competition, with two of the best sprinters in the P. S. A. L. athletic ranks finishing in first and second positions. M. White, Stuyvesant High, and Ben Levinson, Polytechnic Prep., broke at the crack of the gun, and ran neck and neck for the entire distance. White forged ahead in the last few strides and secured the verdict by three inches. The summary:

100-Yard Dash.—Won by Maynard White, Stuyvesant High School; Benjamin Levinson, Polytechnic Prep, second; Cook, South Side High School, third; McKenzie, Ridgewood High School, fourth. Time—0:10 2-5.

HAVERFORD, 54; N. Y. U., 50.

Result of Athletic Contest Decided by Final Event.

In a dual meet that was not decided until the last event, the quarter mile, Haverford won from New York University yesterday by a score of 54 to 50. The men from Pennsylvania lost the lead in points early in the contest, but their work in the high jump and hammer throw, in which they took both first and second places, soon gave them a lead which they held to the last. New York University did the best work in the shot-put, in which Schaeffer and Farber took both front places; but the failure of Captain E. E. O'Donnell to place in the hammer throw clinched the Violet's defeat.

Crowther, a New York University freshman, did the best work of the day for the University Heights team, capturing first place in both the 100 and 220 yard dashes, while Alvin Lent, Middle States' Intercollegiate champion half-miler, beat out Price of Haverford in the half and took second place in the quarter.

Because the Haverford team does not include the discus in their field sports, this event, in which New York University was particularly strong, was omitted. The summaries:

100-Yard Dash.—Won by C. Crowther, New York University; W. K. Bray, Haverford, second. Time—0:10 3-5.

High Hurdles.—Won by Martwick, Haverford; S. B. Many, New York University, second. Time—0:17 1-5.

One-Mile Run.—Won by E. T. Price, Haverford; T. R. Racoosin, New York University, second. Time—4:46.

Quarter-Mile Run.—Won by Bray, Haverford; Alvin Lent, New York University, second. Time—0:52 1-5.

Two-Mile Run.—Won by E. Houghton, New York University; D. C. Clement, Haverford, second. Time—10:28.

220-Yard Hurdles.—Won by W. Many, New York University; Mortwick, Haverford, second. Time—0:27 3-5.

Pole Vault.—Won by P. A. Hunter, Haverford; R. McGowen, New York University, second. Height—10 feet.

High Jump.—Hallet and Hisey, Haverford, tied for first at 5 feet 6 inches.

Hammer Throw.—Won by H. E. Knowlton, Haverford, with 104 feet 7½ inches; Ramsey, Haverford, second, with 104 feet 7 inches.

Broad Jump.—Won by S. Many, New York University, with 21 feet 1½ inches; Hisey, Haverford, second, with 20 feet 8½ inches.

220-Yard Dash.—Won by C. Crowther, New York University; Bray, Haverford, second. Time—0:23 2-5.

Half-Mile Run.—Won by Alvin Lent, New York University; Price, Haverford, second. Time—2:06.

Point score: Haverford, 54; New York University, 50.

"GYM CHAMPS" FIZZLE.

Only Three Competitors for Two Events at Brooklyn.

Only three college men took part in the collegiate horizontal and parallel bar championships held by St. John's College in Brooklyn, yesterday. The lack of entries deprived the event of much interest, but the winner, J. B. Wiss, of Princeton University, gave a good performance running up the high score of 34½ points. This total was just ten points better than the record of Nathaniel Labovitz of Yale, who was second, and more than thirty points above the tally of R. D. Huestis, who came all the way from Toronto as a representative of Toronto University to win third place, unopposed.

There was a bigger field in the interscholastic competition, and in comparison there were better performances. T. Cramer of Boys' High School, Brooklyn, annexed the gold medal with 38½ points, while Milton Jahoda of Bryant High, and Josef Sadlow of Stuyvesant High, tied for second honors with thirty-two points each. Nine boys took part in this event.

Sidney Hatch Wins Marathon.

ST. LOUIS, May 1.—Sidney Hatch of the Illinois Athletic Club won the annual Marathon of the Missouri Athletic Association today in 3:05:10 3-5.

Olaf Lodal of the Danish-American Club, Chicago, finished second. His unofficial time was 3:16:30.

The race was for the full Marathon distance of 26 miles and 385 yards. Twenty runners started. The record time for the course is 2:49:53.

Defeats Local Star in Atlantic City Golf Tournament After Hot Contest.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., May 1.—James C. Parrish, Jr., of the National Golf Links of America won the chief cup in the golf tournament of the Country Club of Atlantic City today by defeating Maurice E. Risley, the local crack, by 4 up and 3 to play in the decisive test.

It was the first time since Parrish has been playing golf that he has won the chief cup in any tournament, although he has gone far in events at Pinehurst and other Southern resorts, as well as in European competitions. He has had considerable experience, which was effective in the pinches today. Both Parrish and Risley made costly mistakes.

Parrish took the lead at first, and rose to the occasion frequently. Both were long off the tee, with Risley slightly in the advantage, but when it came up around the green it was Parrish who did the better work. He was three up at the turn, and, barring the messed up twelfth, played soundly coming in, so that he was able to settle the argument on the fifteenth green. The card:

Parrish, out	4	4	5	6	3	6	3	3	4	—38
Risley, out	4	5	4	6	4	7	3	4	4	—41
Parish, in	4	3	7	4	4	4
Risley, in	4	3	5	4	5	5

Parrish advanced by defeating Maxwell R. Marston of Baltusrol earlier in the day in a contest which was carried to the nineteenth green. Marston was on the aggressive most of the time and he lost out through trying too hard to carry the trap at the extra hole, becoming bunkered for his pains.

Risley's first opponent was Herbert B. Newton of Frankford. The local star, after finding himself three down at the turn, began going his own pace and won by 2 and 1. The summary:

The metropolitan tennis season opens this week with the tournament for boys to be held on the courts of the New York Tennis Club at Columbia Oval at Kingsbridge, under the direction of the Yale Alumni Association of Westchester County, next Friday. The tourney was scheduled for the Pelham County Club, but labor difficulties made it necessary to transfer the event. With thirty schools to drawn from the entry list has been a gratifying one, and only three boys have been allowed to enter from one school. The winner and runner-up of the singles will be entered by the association in the Yale Interscholastic Championship at New Haven, Conn., commeneing May 27.

Entries for the second annual tournament of the Sleepy Hollow County Club at Scarborough-on-Hudson, which will be held during the week beginning May 17, include Frederick B. On the day of the finals of the Sleepy Hollow tournament the fifteenth annual open tournament of the New York Lawn Tennis Club will begin on the Columbia Oval courts. The events will be the men's scratch singles, men's handicap singles and the Manhattan doubles championship.

The Fordham Tennis Club is arranging for a lively season and will make determined efforts to encourage the sport in the upper part of the Bronx. The courts were opened yesterday for the Summer.

Members of the Seventh Regiment Tennis Club, which is an indoor organization, will soon be seen in action in the metropolitan tournaments in which they will represent their respective clubs. W. Merrill Hall, King Smith, Arthur M. Lovibond, William B. Cragin, Arthur L. Cragin, G. C. Shafer and Julian S. Myrick are among the Seventh Regiment stars. The team will get together on May 30 for the annual match with the army officers stationed at West Point. It has not yet been decided who will represent the Guardsmen in the match.

COLLEGE TENNIS STARS.

Columbia, N. Y. U., and Fordham to Have Strong Teams.

College tennis stars in the Metropolitan district plan to make the coming season the best on record, and Columbia, New York University, Fordham, College of the City of New York, and other institutions of learning will be represented on the local courts by unusually strong teams. Racquet wielders of the local universities are determined to keep pace with the rapid growth of tennis.

The record of the Columbia players up to date is very satisfactory, and under the management of Milton A. Bridges the Morningside players should make things very interesting for their opponents. The team composed of Spencer Miller, Harold Lamb, Kenneth Smith, A. F. Von Bernuth, Robert Collins, W. Cornell, and H. Wainwright, was selected from the largest list of candidates ever turned out for the team. While all have played in excellent early season form the star of the team is Spencer Miller, while Wainwright's play has been of a sterling character.

With victories over Fordham, Trinity, Wesleyan and City College, the players are looking forward to a successful season. This week Columbia will journey to Princeton, Lafayetter and Lehigh, and return for the annual match with Yale on May 13. The annual interscholastic tournament will start at Columbia on May 8, and the winner will be eligible to play in the National Interscholastic Championship at Forest Hills on Aug. 30. This year Columbia has the advantage of playing on the splendid courts at 117th Street and Amsterdam Avenue, which were formerly owned by the West Side Tennis Club. This property was purchased by the University last year.

New York University started the season auspicuously and under the coaching of Professor Edwin J. Clapp the team on the banks of the Harlem is rounding to in excellent shape. The team picked from a field of forty candidates is made up of Captain Edward Fixman, Roswald Pearson, Chester Brown, and M. Pike, while Manager William Draper is attending to the business details of the team.

Columbia Loses at Tennis.

Columbia's tennis team bowed to its first defeat yesterday afternoon, when the Williams College racquet wielders won, by the score of 4 to 2. Drumming Up Tennis Players.

Tennis courts have so multiplied on the upper west side of the city, where about every available vacant lot has been pressed into service, that one enterprising proprietor has equipped a sandwich man to advertise the fact that he has grounds to rent. Yesterday this animated billboard was traveling invitingly up and down Broadway and Amsterdam Avenue, in the stretch of a half mile between 145th and 155th Streets, where there are eleven courts open to players, inviting them, in the largest possible type consistent with the size of the sandwich boards, to "play tennis, the most healthful and fascinating sport in the world, at the Blank Courts, on ——th Street." Like all advertising, this novel method of drumming up trade paid the proprietor, for his courts were crowded all afternoon.

Kingsley Tennis Teams Win.

Kingsley School's tennis team defeated the Polytechnic Prep. team in a one-sided match yesterday afternoon, on the former's courts at Essex Fells, N. J., taking all the matches contested for an aggregate score of 5 to 0. The Kingsley School representatives, Tremaine, Field and Frost, won their matches in the singles in straight sets, but Tremaine and Field were forced to a third set to win from Noyes and Maxwell, the Poly Prep. racquet wielders, in the doubles match. NOTES FOR DOG ENTHUSIASTS.

The noted winning English Sealyham terriers, Easton Finder and Sealy Vic, which were bred by the Duchess of Hamilton, have just been purchased by the Hamilton Farms, Gladstone, N. J., through the Rodney Kennels, and will be brought here immediately. The Hamilton Farms have been collecting a very fine kennel of Sealyhams, and in Eastern Finder and Sealy Vic have two of the best of the breed in England. Finder is a brother of Easton Frigid, the championship winner at the Crystal Palace Show, and is very much on the same type. Sealy Vic, a granddaughter of the famous Peer-Gynt, Lord Kensington's well-known winner, has captured many prizes on the other side and is the dam of several prominent winners. Other Sealyhams purchased by the Hamilton Farms are Windholme's Busy, the charity show winner, and her dam, Windholme's Venie.

Prominent members of the New York toy dog clubs met recently to select a type of muzzle for their pets which would not only be humane but meet with the approval of the Board of Health, and unanimously chose a design made by Miss Nance Gwyn Williams, a very successful exhibitor of Pekingese.

Miss May Snellenberg of Philadelphia, who was to make her debut at the San Mateo show in California as judge of the popular White West Highland Terrier, will not be able to officiate. This breed and the majority of the other breeds have been allotted to Charles G. Hopton, who leaves on Wednesday for San Francisco, where he is to judge at both the Golden Gate Kennel Club show and San Mateo, returning East in time to be the "all-rounder" at the Ladies' Kennel Association show at Auburndale in June.

The specialty show of the Scottish Terrier Club, which will be held at the Biltmore on June 2, will have such a large entry that a four-point rating has been granted by the American Kennel Club. The money prizes will equal those of the Westminster Kennel Club show. In addition there will be forty special prizes, for which the dogs in all classes are eligible under varied conditions. The prize money in ten classes totals $200. The Bench Show Committee consists of Francis G. Lloyd, Clarence C. Little, J. Sergeant Price, Jr., Walter T. Stern, and Robert L. Sedgwick, Jr., with whom the entries close on May 19. George F. Foley of Philadelphia is to be the Superintendent, and all the judging will be done by Henry T. Fleitmann of this city.

NEW YORK CYCLING CENTRE.

European War Will Drive Best Racers to This Country.

John M. Chapman, manager of the Sheepshead Bay Velodrome, now in course of construction, and one of the best posted men in bicycle circles, is authority for the statement that New York City will be the cycling center of the world in the future. Mr. Chapman, who has been affiliated with the game for a number of years both in Europe and America, will be in charge of the Bay track, which opens May 22, also the Newark Velodrome, as he has taken the place of the late Floyd McFarland.

"Cycling in America will benefit greatly by the war in Europe, as the financial condition of the population on the other side will prevent the proper support of the bike game and the cream of the talent will come to America just as soon as there is peace.

"Although Newark has had a successful track for some years past, the game in America has not had the proper chance, but now that the Sheepshead Bay track is under way cycle racing is bound to go forward. The lack of a real cycling plant in New York has been the one big drawback to the sport in America.

"In Paris, Berlin, London, Brussels, and all of the big European cities it was a common sight to see twenty-five thousand people at a cycling meet before the war, so that there was no doubt about the popularity of the sport. We have greater riders on this side as has been proven time and again.

"The motor-paced races at Brighton Beach last year were of the sensational variety and with the added European stars on their way over the competition in this class will be keener than ever."

The new track at Sheepshead Bay is nearing completion and will be ready for practice spins a week before the opening, May 22.

MOTOR CYCLE NOTES.

Riders from all over the East joined in making up the largest cavalcade of motor cyclists ever seen in Boston. The event was the recent annual run of the Bay State Motor Cycle Club to Worcester and return. From Portland and Bangor, Me., Providence, R. I., and Hartford, Conn., came enthusiasts to participate in the tour. An unusual feature of the event was the fact that over 50 of the 300 entrants were women, one woman rider even piloting a motor cycle with side car over the entire course.

In order that he might have an opportunity to win a place on the Jacksonville (Fla.) baseball team, Howard Childress traveled all the way from Chattanooga to the Southern metropolis on a motor cycle. Then, without even stopping to change his khaki suit after his 500-mile jaunt, he chugged on out to the athletic field and got into the game which was in progress there.

F. A. M. Legal Action Chairman Johnson has recently added the following attorneys to represent motor cyclists in their communities: W. Semmaney, San Antonio, Texas; Carlisle S. Whitten, Abilene, Texas; E. J. Emmons, Bakersfield, Cal.; O. M. Wilkerson, Wheeling, West Va.; John R. Haughey, Erie, Penn., and R. Douglass Boyd, Gloversville, N. Y.

Not daunted by a drizzling rain, which promised to settle into an all-day downpour, about 200 motor cyclists left the Quaker City on the Philadelphia Motorcycle Trade Association's first sociability run of the season. Of this number 140 covered the 125 miles and checked in in the three and one-half hours' allotted time.

In order to get the advantage of Memorial Day holiday, the observance of National Motor Cycle Week has been changed to the week of May 24, with the following schedule: Monday, May 24, Demonstration Day; Tuesday, Commercial Day; Wednesday, Carnival Day; Thursday, Ladies' Day; Friday, Bicycle and Motor Wheel Day; Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, the King of Sports Holidays.

At a rate better than 63 miles an hour, "Red" Parkhurst sent his motor cycle around the two-mile course at Oklahoma City, in the 150-mile event staged in connection with the celebration of the twenty-sixth anniversary of the opening of Oklahoma Territory. Joe Wolters was second to cross the tape, in 2:27:06, and right on his heels came Sam Correnti.

The 100-mile motor cycle championship of New South Wales was won by W. Jack on an American-built motor cycle.

Foreign Cyclists Coming Here.

The advance guard of the foreign bicycle riders who will compete at the new Sheepshead Bay Velodrome during the Summer, will sail from Havre, France, on the Rochambeau today and arrive in this city May 12. The riders include some of the best sprinters and pace followers in Europe, among them Thorwald Ellegaard, the Danish cyclist who holds six world's championships; George Seres, the noted French rider, M. Pastiur, M. Nazo, Caesar Moretti and Marius Maso. The cable announcing the embarking of the riders was received by Manager Chapman of the Velodrome yesterday, and it also said that another group of riders would leave in about ten days. It was Seres who Clarence Carmen such a sharp race for his title during the sprint events preceeding the last six day grind at the Garden.

His Sweetheart

To him she is always the same—the dearest, the sweetest, the prettiest girl in the world. In his heart she reigns supreme—his ideal of all that is best in womanhood.

His eyes reveal her to him as the possessor of a fascination and attractiveness of which nothing can deprive her. She may not wear elaborate and expensive dresses, she may not even have a pretty face, according to worldly standards. Her chiefest claim to beauty may even lie in a mass of glittering, fluffy, natural hair, growing on her own head. But certainly no hair can be charming or even attractive if it is not properly dressed and intelligently cared for. There is a subtle charm about beautiful hair that lends more to personal adornment than the combined skill of the beauty doctor and modiste.

To the girl or woman desiring always to be at her best and to make the most of Nature's richest gift, we recommend

ROCKAWAY HUNT OPENS LOCAL RACING SEASON—LYON CHAMPION AT TRAPS—BASEBALL RECORDS

KEENE CELEBRATES RETURN TO RACING

Veteran Amateur Wins Rockaway Cup in Hunt Club Meet at Hewlett.

About 4,000 people, most of whom were members of what is popularly known as the hunting set of Long Island, were at picturesque Hewlett Bay Park yesterday to welcome the opening of the amateur racing season, and incidentally the first thoroughbred racing of the year hereabouts.

The reappearance of Foxhall P. Keene in the saddle, after some years of rest from racing activities, brought out an unusual number of the old guard of racing men, admirers of this clever horseman from the five years beginning with 1885, when he headed the list of amateur jockeys, both on the flat and across country. It was at near-by Cedarhurst, then the headquarters of the Rockaway Hunt Club, that he made the record which still stands for amateur performances in the saddle in this country. That his hand had not lost its cunning, and that he still remembered how to handle and ride a horse to get the very best out of it, was shown by the skill with which he piloted his mount, Toreador, in the race for the Rockaway Cup, second of the events of the afternoon's sport.

Unfortunately this, like the rest of the jumping races, proved to be a chapter of accidents, and hardly gave Mr. Keene any chance to exhibit much horsemanship. There were a half dozen starters, and Mr. Keene allowed Toreador to trail them over the first trip around the course. At the Liverpool jump just opposite the grand stand—an addition to the facilities for the accommodation of spectators erected this Spring—Uncas tripped and unseated his rider, John Harper Bonnell, then running in third place to Unico and Ouiton. Three jumps further on, when the jumpers had rounded the lower turn and were once more opposite the stand, but away over in the back field, Ouiton tripped on a rail fence, turned a somersault, broke his back, and gave such a tumble to R. Penn Smith, Jr., as to break the collarbone of this promising young jockey. Mr. Keene witnessed this succession of tumbles from his position in the rear, and on the second journey around the course also saw Unico go down. He steered his mount clear of prostrate horses and riders, and on the final run by the Marshall cottage caught Nina, which had been leading for a mile and a half, passed her going over the last jump, and merely shaking up his mount for the first time, came home an easy winner, with the old-time shouts of approval ringing in his ears.

Harry S. Page, another of the old-time riders, won the Hewlett Park Plate with his mount, Ben Cabell, which of the quartet of starters was the only one to stand up for the two miles and a half of the journey. Mr. Page won the same race for the same sort of a plate just twenty years ago to a day.

Overseer won the Cedarhurst Cup as he, too, was the only one to go the route, Fashion Wing, then in the lead, coming a cropper near the Marshall cottage with but a half mile to go. His rider remounted and rode the horse home for the second money.

After being beaten a head in the opening dash of a half mile by Mr. Specs, Culvert came back in the quarter-mile dash, which closed the sport, and won very handily from Lily Orme, both pairs making pretty sprints in the finishes that aroused the crowd to real racing enthusiasm. Cloud, a stable companion of Culvert, won the dash at a mile from Chopin very handily under the vigoorus riding of John Tucker, who had piloted Culvert in both his races.

Quite a Frenchy touch was given to the affair by the appearance on the lawns of a party of a dozen mannequins, gowned in the very latest cry in riding togs and awn gowns, sartorial confections which showed all the colors of the rainbow and then some, and which excited the risibilities rather than the admiration of the quietly gowned women of the hunting set, which does not go in for the risque in dress. The tableau was more like a scene from a comic opera or a parade in a cabaret than one fit for a hunt meeting.

Betting was done quietly, as it was at the tracks all last season. Yet three layers of odds were arrested for betting, and a fourth was taken into custody for acting as a stakeholder in a transaction where there was an actual passage of money after the manner pursued at the races at New Orleans during the Winter. The arrested party in the latter case gave the name of Edward Salmore. All the arrested were taken before Judge Raising at Rockaway who paroled them in custody of counsel for a hearing on Monday, the Salmore case being a test to see if the New Orleans method of placing money bet in the hands of a stakeholder is a violation of the law in this State, presumably preparatory to its trial at the big tracks later in the season. DISCUSS PELHAM COURSE.

Oarsmen Again to Consider Abandoning Harlem—Newark in Favor.

Whatever may be the final action with regard to the proposed Pelham Bay rowing course, there will be a revival of interest in the project Monday night at the New York Athletic Club, when a committee of oarsmen will again discuss the mooted question. There are so many arguments for, and also against, the scheme that it is likely, as always before, to result in a deadlock. Pelham Bay is so far away from the centre of things that it is almost impossible to reach it from Wall Street in time for a row before dark. Putting it into shape would cost, approximately, $150,000 to $200,000. The clubhouses of most of the rowing organizations are already located on the Harlem, and removal would necessitate a large expenditure, or a division by sending part of the boats away from permanent headquarters. This would result in a sort of "week-end" club, a thing opposed strenuously by many who are now rowing on the Harlem course.

Many of those now facing the handicaps imposed by rowing on what is essentially a ship canal instead of a rowing course, are ready to try out almost any alternative. Drift wood, the wash of the frequently passing boats and an unsanitary condition of the Harlem itself combine to make the present course anything but satisfactory.

A desirable substitute course for New York City must be accessible first, and comfortable and safe after that.

The Newark course, used so continuously and successfully from 1879 till some ten years ago, when sewage made it impossible, still has its admirers. Fred R. Fortmeyer, for twenty-one years secretary of the N. A. A. O., is one of these. As a member of the Passaic Club he is still paying dues in the hope that a club which has sold its site and belongings may some day reorganize in Newark.

Mr. Fortmeyer points out that ten starters could be placed easily at Newark, whereas three or four is the safe limit on the Harlem. There is little or no shipping or traffic to interfere, no drift, and the sewage is now being carried further down the bay. Above all, it can be reached in twenty minutes by the tube. Neither will there be any necessary expense entailed in protecting the course by bulkheads or breakwaters, as there will be at Pelham Bay.

Altogether, it seems that there may be a turn in favor of the old Newark course, after the pros and cons of Harlem, Pelham Bay and other possibilities have been thoroughly discussed.

CHAMPIONSHIPSHOOT GOES TO N.Y.A.C. MAN

George L. Lyon Leads Big Field at Travers Island Traps—Chamberlain Second.

Continuing his sensational shooting of the opening day, George L. Lyon of Durham, N. C., wearing the emblem of the New York Athletic Club, won the tenth annual amateur trap-shooting championship of America at the Travers Island traps of the New York Athletic Club yesterday. The new titleholder's score was 192. A. L. Chamberlain of Bridgeport, Conn., came in second with 190.

As in the preliminary shoot on Friday, records were again upset. Never before have the gunners been so numerous, 143 facing the traps, with the previous high-water mark being 134 two years ago. The score made yesterday by Lyon beat the championship figures established by R. L. Spotts in 1914 by four "birds." The former titleholder was fifteenth on the list yesterday.

Philadelphia won the interclub team race, the five men from the Quaker City scoring 927. C. H. Newcomb, their leader, scored 189. The other members of the team were: A. B. Richardson, 189; A. Hill, 187; W. Foord, 186, and J. C. Griffiths, 178. The New York Athletic Club team was only 5 points behind, its total score being 922. G. L. Lyon, winner of the championship, held the place of honor with 192. The long run prize went to A. B. Richardson with 131 straight.

The weather conditions were much more favorable for the marksmen than on Friday, there was a large attendance of club members and their friends, and interest was intense.

It was a spectacular contest, owing to the fact that the winner was in doubt right up to the minute when the last string of twenty-five birds were being disposed of. Throughout the afternoon A. E. Conley, the old crack live bird shot and former State champion, who comes from Buffalo, assumed the lead and it looked for a time as if he would win the title. He lead Lyon at the sixth string by 144 to 135, but immediately afterward he made four consecutive misses and Lyon once more went ahead. This was repeated on three different occasions, the winner managing to get the lead by at least one "bird" each time.

Conley's score was remarkable, owing to the fact that he had three twenty-fives in succession, but his shooting was not as consistent as that of A. L. Chamberlain, who beat him by a "bird" for second place. The latter's score was only 2 behind that of the champion's. Lyon's string was 23, 25, 24, 25, 24, 24, 24, and 23.

Another remarkable feature of yesterday's contest was that the four leaders all beat the best previous figures for the amateur championship event, which has been held at Travers Island since 1905, when J. H. Hendrickson won the title. Last night the visiting marksman were the guests of the New York Athletic Club at a beefsteak dinner. Many of them stayed over until today to avoid missing participation in this social affair.

The scores follow:

SUPPRESSED BY BRITISH CENSOR

Bitter Criticism in "Britain's Deadly Peril," by William Le Queux, Noted Author, Causes Drastic Government Action.

FOLLOWING closely on its publication has come the suppression by the British Censor, pursuant to orders from the War Office, of "Britain's Deadly Peril," by William Le Queux (London, Stanley Paul & Co.) News of the suppression reached here last Thursday. In his book the author, formerly a member of the British Secret Service, a close friend, according to his own account, of Lord Roberts and other high-placed Englishmen, and author of various works seeking to arouse his fellow-countrymen to the danger from German spies, devotes pages of bitter denunciation to the British Government. He tells how he personally has seen signals flashed at night by German spies from points in England, how he flashed like signals back and received answers, only to be rebuffed when he reported on such things to the Government.

One of his most striking accusations in the suppressed book is that Great Britain is actually feeding the German armies trying to crush her out of existence, actually providing them with necessities like cocoa and tea, while at the same time the prices of these and other foodstuffs in the British Isles are rising to heights placing them beyond the reach of the poor.

The censorship, he insists, is the root of all the evil now threatening England. Had Englishmen been allowed from the start of the war to get a clear idea of its tremendous import to them, he says, they would have waked up at once, forced the Government to prohibit exports through neutral countries to Germany, demanded and obtained the most drastic action against spies, and flocked in tens of thousands to the recruiting stations, convinced that every ablebodied Englishman was needed at the front, instead of sitting calmly at home, lulled by the noncommital, optimistic bits of news allowed by the censor into a feeling that all was going well, that the great danger was past, the Germans definitely forced back.

Taking up the subject of exports, Mr. Le Queux makes the sensational statement that, in December, January, and February last, exports of cocoa from England to neutral countries reached a total of 16,575,017 pounds, while for the corresponding period of 1913 they were only 3,584,003 pounds. Before the war, he points out, Holland was an exporter of cocoa to England; since the war she has been the principal importer. "There is a mass of indisputable evidence," he adds, "to show that nearly the whole of our exports of cocoa have found their way to Germany through this channel."

For a while, says Mr. Le Queux, the British Government stopped the export of cocoa; now, however, the prohibition is removed, and "the old game of supplying the German Army with cocoa from England will begin again."

"The German Army must also have tea," he continues. "Let us see how we have supplied it." According to him, during the first fortnight of war export was restricted and only 60,666 pounds were sent out of England, whereas for the corresponding period of the previous year 179,143 pounds were exported; during the next three months, the restrictions having been removed, 15,808,628 pounds were sent away—"the greater part of it by roundabout channels to Germany"—against 1,146,237 for the corresponding period in 1913.

After three months, he says, a modified restriction was placed upon the export of tea, but after reckoning the whole sum it is found that "during the time we have been at war we have sent abroad over 20,000,000 pounds of tea, while in the corresponding period of the previous year we sent only a little over 2,000,000 pounds!" He adds:

Now, where has it gone? In August and September last Germany received from Holland 16,000,000 pounds, whereas in that period of 1913 she received only 1,000,000 pounds. Tea is given as a stimulant to German troops in the field, so we see how the British Government has been tricked into actually feeding the enemy!

William Le Queux

Parallel with this policy of sending foodstuffs to Germany goes a serious rise in prices of food in England, says Mr. Le Queux. He gives the following table of prices before the war and now for common necessities of life:

	Last Year. S.	D.	Now. S.	D.
Bread, per four pounds	0	5½	0	7½
Butter, per pound	1	3½	1	4½
Jam, per pound	0	5	0	5½
Cheese, per pound	0	8½	0	10½
Bacon, (streaky,) per pound	0	11	1	0
Beef, English, per pound	0	9½	0	11
Beef, chilled or frozen, per pound	0	7½	0	8½
Mutton, English, per pound	0	10½	0	11½
Mutton, frozen, per pound	0	6½	0	8½
Tea, per pound	1	6	1	9½
Sugar, granulated, per lb	0	2	0	3½

Here is Mr. Le Queux's explanation of this:

It is quite clear, to my mind, that the prices of food are being forced up by gigantic unpatriotic combines, either in the country or abroad, or both. I do not think that mere shortage of supply is sufficient to account for the extraordinary advances that have taken place. Whether the Government can take steps to defeat the wheat "rings," as they did to prevent the cornering of sugar, is a question with which I am not concerned here. * * *

If we turn to coal we find the scandal ten times greater than in the case of flour and meat. It is at least possible that agencies outside our own country may be playing a great part in forcing up the prices of food; they can have no effect upon the price of coal, which we produce ourselves and of which we do not import an ounce.

Coal today is simply at famine prices. It is impossible to buy the best house coal for less than 38 shillings per ton, while the cheapest is being sold at 34 shillings per ton, and the very poor, who buy from the street trolleys only inferior coal and in small quantities, are being fleeced to the extent of 1 shilling 11 pence, or 2 shillings, per hundredweight.

This is an exceedingly serious matter, and it is not to be explained, even under present conditions, by the ordinary laws of supply and demand. Why should coal in a village on the banks of the Thames be actually cheaper than the corresponding quality of coal when sold in London?

There can be only one answer—the London supply is in the hands of the coal ring, which has compelled all the London coal merchants to come into line. * * *

The Government has promised an inquiry which may, if unusual expedition is shown, make a "demonstration" with the coal dealers just about the time the warm weather arrives. Prices will then tumble, the Government will solemnly pat itself upon the back for its successful interference, and the coal merchants, having made small or large fortunes as the case may be during the Winter, will make a great virtue of reducing their demands to oblige the Government. In the meantime, the poor are being fleeced in the interests of an unscrupulous combine.

Is there no peril here to our beloved country? Are we not justified in saying that the machinations of these gangs of unscrupulous capitalists are rapidly tending to produce a condition of affairs which may, at any moment, expose us to a social upheaval which would contain all the germs of an unparalleled disaster?

Turning to the British censorship Mr. Le Queux declares that, whereas Englishmen differ greatly in their opinions on other matters pertaining to the war, the methods employed by the Government to censor news have earned "the unanimous and unsparing condemnation of everybody." Englishmen do not, he says, object to the fact that news is censored, but to the way it is censored, and to the extent to which the suppression of news has been carried by the censors. On the Government's system of censorship he writes:

I contend that, in point of fact, it has throughout the war operated not merely to prevent the enemy from getting news which it was highly desirable should be kept from him, but to suppress news which the British public—the most patriotic and level-headed public in the world—has every right to demand.

We are not a nation of board-school children or hysterical girls. Over and over again the British public has shown that it can bear bad news with fortitude, just as it can keep its head in victory. Those of us who still remember the terrible "black week" in South Africa, with its full story of the horror of defeat at Colenso, Magersfontein, and Stormberg, remember how the only effect of the disaster was the ominous deepening of the grim British determination to "see it through"; the tightening of the lips and the hardening of the jaws that meant unshakable resolve; the silent, dour British grip on the real essentials of the situation that, once and for all, settled the fate of Krüger's ambitions.

Are Britons today so changed from the Britons of 1899 that they cannot bear the truth; that they cannot face disaster; that they are indeed the degenerates they have been labeled by boastful Germans? Perish the thought! * * *

From Nov. 20, 1914, up to Feb. 17, 1915—a period of three months of intense anxiety and strain—not one single word of news from the Commander in Chief of the greatest army Britain has ever put into the field was vouchsafed to the British public. For that, of course, it is impossible to blame Sir John French. But the bare fact is sufficient condemnation of the entirely unjustifiable methods of secrecy with which we are waging a war on which the whole future of our beloved nation and empire depends. The public was left to imagine that the war had reached something approaching a "deadlock." The ever-mounting tale of casualties showed that, in very truth, there had been, in that silent period of three months, fighting on a scale to which this country has been a stranger for a century.

Will any one outside the Government contend that this absurd secrecy can be justified, either by military necessity or by a well-meant but, as I think, hopelessly mistaken regard for the feelings of the public?

We are not Germans that it should be necessary to lull us into a lethargic sleep with stories of imaginary victories, or to refrain from harrowing our souls when, as must

WAR'S DEBASEMENT OF WOMEN

Jane Addams Calls It the Greatest Threat Against Family, Reducing Woman to Tribal Stage of Childbearing to Fill Ranks.

By Edward Marshall.

MANY women throughout the world have set their faces unalterably against war," said Miss Jane Addams of Chicago, just before she sailed for Europe to attend the International Congress of Women, now in session at The Hague, when I asked her to express what she conceives to be the views of American womanhood upon the European war and the unexpected task which it has placed before American womanhood.

This extraordinary woman occupies a remarkable place in many movements. Probably she is the best known woman in America.

Now she heads a movement planned to unite womanhood, in all parts of the world, in a great protest against Europe's saturnalia of slaughter. It is called the Women's Peace Party and is international in scope.

It began its existence at Washington Jan. 10, and is increasing in membership with astonishing rapidity. She summarized for me its preamble, about like this, reading from it and condensing as she read:

* * * Planned for, legalized wholesale human slaughter is today the sum of all villainies.

As women we feel a peculiar moral passion of revolt against both the cruelty and the waste of war; * * * as women we are the custodians of the life of the ages and we will not longer consent to its reckless destruction; as women we are particularly charged with the future of childhood, the care of the helpless and the unfortunate, and we will not longer endure without protest that added burden of maimed and invalid men and poverty-stricken women and orphans which war places on us.

As women we have builded by the patient drudgery of the past the basic foundations of the home and of peaceful industry; we will not longer endure * * * that hoary evil which in an hour destroys * * * or tolerate * * * that denial of the sovereignty of reason and justice by which war and all that makes for war today render impotent the idealism of the race.

Therefore we demand that our right to be consulted in the settlement of questions concerning not alone the life of individuals but of nations be recognized and respected, that women be given a share in deciding between war and peace.

"Among the articles of our platform are," Miss Addams continued, "limitation of armaments and the nationalization of their manufacture; organized opposition to militarism in our own country and education of youth in the ideals of peace; democratic control of foreign policies; the further humanizing of Governments by the extension of the franchise to women; 'concert of nations' to supersede 'balance of power'; action toward the gradual organization of the world to substitute law for war; the substitution of an international police for rival armies and navies; removal of the economic causes of war; the appointment by our Government of a commission of men and women, with an adequate appropriation, to promote international peace.

"In the manifestation of patriotism throughout the world, using the word in its highest and best sense," said Miss Addams, "women have played their important parts from the beginning. But the present European war is destroying the finer meanings of the word obtained through many centuries of effort; it is making a basic appeal to self-defense, the earliest and most primitive form of patriotism.

"The vast majority of the men now battling, bleeding, and dying in Europe are animated as they continue day after day, no matter what ideals may have sent them to the conflict, by the stubborn sense of combat; it is the archaic motive of self-preservation which keeps them at their desperate task. In the trenches, dealing death and risking it, they dare not give way to their more highly developed impulses, which even in the thrill of battle tend to assert themselves.

"In a few men of fine fibre the idealistic impulses may still persist, even in the heat of conflict; but to the average man, as has been fully testified to by the veterans of our own civil war, service on the battle line is destructive of delicacy, sympathy, and rational thinking.

"The appeal to the instinct of self-preservation, to self-defense, is the patriotism of the tribe; that which first led the men of one tribe to war upon the men of another who seemed to be threatening their territory.

"The nations now at war one by one have made this tribal appeal, going back to the earliest conception of patriotism, ignoring all the subtler motives, and finally swamping all the finer sensibilities of their citizens in this primitive emotion.

"Each nation is fighting to defend its territory, its ideals, its race integrity, from its neighbors who have grown large and threatening. But simply because morals cannot be cut up into sections, if the tribal appeal is so universally used to induce men to go to war, the tribal conception of duty is also gradually extended to the women and made the standard of their conduct.

"The reaction of this tribal conception of patriotism must of necessity tend to put women back into the position they occupied in the tribe, and in Europe they are therefore at the present moment rapidly losing much that they had slowly achieved through centuries of painful effort.

"It is the business of the tribal woman to bear men children who shall increase the power and prestige of the tribe. She has little right of selection as to the father of her children and little control over their future.

"At the present moment women in Europe are being told: 'Bring children into the world for the benefit of the nation; for the strengthening of future battle lines; forget everything that you have been taught to hold dear; forget your long struggle to establish the responsibilities of fatherhood; forget all but the appetite of war for human flesh. It must be satisfied and you must be the ones to feed it, cost what it may.'

"That is war's message to the world of women. Is it wonderful that they resent it, shudder at it?

"This war is destroying the home unit in the most highly civilized countries of the world to an extent which is not less than appalling.

"To cite one instance of what I mean: The French Chamber of Deputies, in anticipation of the effect upon the nation of the slaughter of its men, has passed a law declaring that during these war times there shall be no such thing as illegitimacy in France.

"War benefits go equally to the mothers who are married and those who are unmarried. The nation is chiefly concerned to make up the deficit of human beings!

"I am informed that in the French churches the 'foundlings boxes,' which had been taken away by law, have been restored. Their purpose is to offer mothers of unwelcome children an opportunity to dispose of them secretly, but still keeping them for the nation. This amounts to governmental and clerical encouragement of the dissolution of family ties.

"In Germany the same thing has occurred and, if reports seemingly from trustworthy sources are to be believed, has gone even further than in the sister nation with which she is at war.

"Every effort is being made throughout the German Empire to secure the children of their own soldiers for the strengthening of the nation's bleeding vitality, although it may mean the lowering of moral barriers all along the line.

"It is further reported that the German Government is preparing organizations of midwives and nurses to follow in the wake of the armies, to care for women who have yielded to the temptations of the time or have fallen victims of the lust of soldiers.

"Other provisions are being made openly for the removal from Belgium and France to Germany of as many children as possible. These are to be reared as Germans.

"Could there be a more definite and dreadful illustration of the tendencies of war to break down and destroy the family unit?

"But France and Germany are not unique in the effect which war has had within their boundaries upon the status of women. In the English training camps, upon home soil, I am informed that the authorities are conniving in the excesses of the soldiers, quite in keeping with the traditional provisions long made for English soldiers when in camp on foreign soil.

"In fact, all soldiers as they march away to war, even if they go no further than the training camp, march away from social control, from family and community restraint.

"Under the impersonal uniform, the men feel that freedom which lack of identification gives. The temptations which confront them in war time are stronger than any they have ever known, and they come to them at the very moment when customary restraints are abandoned.

"All such inevitable consequences of war mitigate against the age long efforts of woman to establish the paternity of her child and the father's responsibility for it. In the interest of this effort the State has made marriage a matter of license and record, and the Church has surrounded it by every possible sanctity. Under the pressure of war, however, both of these institutions have in a large measure withdrawn their protection.

"All that women have held dear, all that the Church has worked for and the State has ordered, has been swept away in a breath—the hot breath of war—leaving woman in her primitive, pitiable state of the necessity for self-defense without the strength with which to compass self-defense.

"I by no means argue that women are better than men; I never have maintained that, even in the heat of debates upon the suffrage question. But in certain regards they are more sensitive than men, and one of these concerns the sanctity of human life.

"Most of us really believed that war, with its barbaric violations of this sanctity, had become forever impossible among civilized nations and regarded the talk of war as the echoes of a vague horror of the past.

"But now women are faced with the tragic certainty that humanity must retegin its climb toward that higher development which we supposed already had been practically achieved.

"So long as a State, through the exigencies of war, is obliged to place military authority above all civil rights, women can have within it no worthy place, no opportunity for their development, and they cannot hope for authority in its councils.

"Thousands of them in Europe, as in the United States, had become so thoroughly imbued with the idea that the recognition of the sacredness of human life had at last become established throughout the world that the news of this war came to them as an incredible shock.

"Women are entitled in all justice to some consideration in this matter of war making, if only because they have necessarily been paramount in the nurture of that human life which now is being so lavishly spent.

"The advanced nations know very accurately, and we had begun to know in America, how many children are needlessly lost in the first years of infancy.

"Measures inaugurated for the prevention of infant mortality were slowly spreading from one country to another.

"All that effort has been scattered to the winds by the war. No one is now pretending to count the babies who are dying throughout the villages and countrysides of the warring nations.

"Women long have been responsible for the conservation of human life—for that sentiment which expresses itself in the State care of dependent children, in old age pensions; for that sentiment which holds every scrap of human life to be so valuable that the human family happen in all wars, things occasionally go wrong.

We want the truth, and we are entitled to have it!

I do not say that we have been deliberately told that which is not true. I believe the authorities can be acquitted of any deliberate falsification of news. But I do say, without hesitation, that much news was kept back which the country was entitled to know, and which could have been made public without the slightest prejudice to our military position.

Mr. Le Queux declares that the Germans today are far more enthusiastic in their attitude toward the war than the British. This he again attributes to the methods of the censorship.

"I do not believe," he says, "that the British public realizes, even today, the immense gravity of the situation." This has been felt most sharply, he writes, at the recruiting stations:

We have been at war for eight months, and we have not yet got the men we require. Recruits have come forward in large numbers, it is true, and are still coming forward. But there is a very distinct lack of that splendid and enduring enthusiasm which a true realization of the facts would necessarily evoke. Priceless opportunities for stimulating that enthusiasm have been, all along, lost by the persistent refusal to allow the full story of British heroism and devotion to be told.

As a concrete instance of this Mr. Le Queux cites the battle of Ypres last Autumn, when the British took a leading part in breaking the German drive toward the Channel ports. The full story of that fight, says he, "would have done more for recruiting in a week than all the displayed advertisements and elaborate placards with which our walls are so profusely adorned could achieve in a month!" He continues:

Sir John French's dispatch, as a military record, bears the hall mark of military genius, but it is idle to pretend that it is a literary document calculated to stir the blood and fire the imagination of our countrymen. Admirable in its firm restraint from the military point of view, it takes no account of the civilian imagination.

That is not Sir John French's business. He is a great soldier, and it is no reproach to him that his dispatch is not exactly what is required by the urgency of the situation. Moreover, it came too late to exercise its full effect.

Had the story of Ypres been given to the public promptly, and in the form in which it would have been cast by a graphic writer who understood the subject with which he was dealing and the public for whom he was writing, we should probably have been better off today by thousands and thousands of much-needed recruits. The failure to take advantage of such a glorious opportunity for the stimulation of enthusiasm by purely legitimate means convicts our censorship authorities of a total failure to appreciate the mentality of the public whose supposed interests they serve.

And as with successes, so with failures. It is the peculiar characteristic of the British people that either a great victory or a great disaster has the immediate result of nerving them to fuller efforts. We saw that in South Africa; it has been seen a hundred times in our long history.

Mr. Le Queux is of the opinion that the effects of the censorship have been worse outside of England than in it. While the Germans, he says, were conducting an active propaganda to influence foreign public opinion—in the United States especially—the British case was "sternly withheld." To show the vagaries of the censor, he cites a number of instances of unfair discrimination. Among these he tells how the censor allowed an article by Philip Gibbs, the well-known war correspondent, describing the operations of Sir John French's army, to be published in The London Chronicle, yet refused to permit it to be sent to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

In other pages he deals with the spy peril, and frankly questions the Government's statement that "every enemy alien is known and is now under constant police surveillance." He tells startling tales of signaling by spies from lonely spots on the English coast, denoting an activity among German hirelings in England worthy of much more drastic repression than that which the Government sees fit to employ. Unless severe measures are taken soon he predicts staggering disaster.

Accompanied by several officers expert at reading the Morse and other signaling codes, Mr. Le Queux motored by night into regions where suspected spies were supposed to be active. He tells as follows of one of his experiences near a house in Surrey:

On reaching our point of vantage I learned that suspicion had first been aroused by a mysterious and intense white light being shown from a window in the country mansion in question, which was situated upon so strategic a point that it could be seen very many miles in the direction of London. And there, sure enough, was the one brilliant light—at all other windows of the house the blinds being drawn—shining like a beacon all over the country. It had shone first at 6:30 P. M. that night, and, as I watched, it showed till 6:48, when it disappeared. After three minutes it was shown till 7:30 exactly, when suddenly it signaled in Morse the code letters "S M," repeated twice, and then disappeared till 9 o'clock, when again the same signal was made. The light remained full on for ten minutes, and was then suddenly switched off.

This was certainly remarkable. The officers with me—all experts in signaling—were unanimous as to the two letters, and also to their repetition. These signals, I learned, had been seen times without number, but until the smart young officer who had called upon me had noticed them, no action had been taken.

Having established that mysterious signaling was really in progress, I set forth upon further investigation. Taking my own signaling apparatus, a very strong electric lamp with accumulators and powerful reflectors, which would show for fifteen miles or more, I got into the car with my companions—who were eager to assist—and, having consulted ordnance maps and compass, we went to a spot high up in an exposed position, where I anticipated the answering light from the mansion might be seen.

We found ourselves in a private park, upon a spot which, by day, commands an immense stretch of country, and from which it is said that upon a clear day the Sussex coast can be seen. Here we erected our signaling apparatus and waited in patience. The night proved bitterly cold, and, as the hours crept slowly by, the sleet began to cut our faces. Yet all our eyes were fixed upon that mysterious house which had previously signaled.

For hours we waited in vain until, of a sudden, quite unexpectedly, from the direction of London, we saw another intense white light shifting from out the darkness. For a full half-hour it remained there, a beacon like the other. Then suddenly it began winking, and this was the code message it sent:

S H I S (pause) H 5 (pause) S H I S F (pause with the light full on for two minutes) I S I E (pause) E S T (light out).

Turning my signal lamp in its direction, I repeated the first portion of the mysterious message, and then, pretending not to understand, asked for a repetition. At once this was given, and, with my companions, I received it perfectly clearly! * * *

The following night saw us out again, for already reports received had established a line of signals from a spot on the Kent coast to London and further north, other watchers being set in order to compare notes with us. Again we watched the beacon light on the mysterious house. We saw those mysterious letters "S M"—evidently of significance—winked out in Morse, and together we watched the answering signals. All the evening the light remained full on until at 1:30 A. M. we once more watched "S M" being sent, while soon after 2 A. M. the light went out.

In the fourteen exciting days and nights which followed I motored many hundreds of miles over Surrey, Sussex, and Kent, instituting inquiries and making a number of amazing discoveries, not the least astounding of which was that, only one hour prior to the reception of that message on the first evening of our visit—"H 5"—five German aeroplanes had actually set out from the Belgian coast toward England! That secret information was being sent from the Kent coast to London was now proved, not only at one point, but at several, where I have since waited and watched, and, showing signals in the same code, have been at once answered and repeated. And every night, until the hour of writing, this same signaling from the coast to London is in progress, and has been watched by responsible officers of his Majesty's service.

After the first nights of vigilance I had satisfied myself that messages in code were being sent, so I reported—as a matter of urgency—to the Intelligence Department of the War Office—that department of which Mr. McKenna on March 3 declared: "There is no more efficient department of the State." The result was only what the public might expect." Though this exposure was vouched for by experts in signaling, men wearing his Majesty's uniform, all the notice taken of it has been a mere printed acknowledgment that my report had been received, while to my repeated appeals that proper inquiry be made I have not even received a reply!

Mr. Le Queux is by no means of the belief that a German invasion of England is beyond the bounds of probability, and he thinks that most English people have here also been lulled into false security by the methods of the censorship. Among those, he says, who appreciated this peril at its true value was the late Lord Roberts, yet many people met his warnings with "Poor Bobs! He is getting so old!" Mr. Le Queux is sure that it would be possible for the Germans, aided by their spies in England, to land suddenly at some spot on the east coast a sufficient number of troops to work terrible havoc before they were overpowered.

"And we must never forget," he writes, "that, if they ever get the chance, their atrocious treatment of the British population will be a thousand times worse than anything they have done in France and Belgium. That fact ought to sink deeply into the public mind."

Instead, however, of driving such things into the public mind, declares Mr. Le Queux, the Government is again "muddling through somehow," thwarting the efforts of civilians to organize themselves for home defense, everywhere fostering the unjustified feeling that all is well. For those responsible for this he foresees drastic punishment:

After this war there will be men—men whose names are today as household words—who must be indicted before the nation for leading us into the trap which Germany so cunningly prepared for us. Those are men who knew, by the Kaiser's declaration in 1905, what was intended, and while posing as British statesmen—save the mark!—lied to the public, and told them that Germany was our best friend, and that war would never be declared—"not in our time."

There will be a day ere long when the pro-German section of what Britons foolishly call their "rulers"—certain members of that administration who are now struggling to atone for their past follies in being misled by the cunning of the enemy—will be arraigned and swept out of the public ken, as they deserve to be. The blood of a million mothers of sons in Great Britain boils at thoughts of the ghastly truth, and the wholesale sacrifice of their dear ones, because the diplomacy of Great Britain, with all its tinsel, its paraphernalia of attachés, secretaries, (first, second, and third,) its entertainments, its fine "residences," its whisperings and jugglings, and its "conversations," was quite incapable of thwarting the German plot.

By our own shortsightedness we have been led into this conflict, in which the very lives of our dear ones and ourselves are at stake. Yet, today, we in England have not fully realised that we are at war. Illustrated papers publish fashion numbers, and the buttorflies of the fair sex rush to adorn themselves in the latest mode from Paris—the capital of a threatened nation!

Stroll at any hour in any street in London, or any of our big cities. Does anything remind the thoughtful man that we are at war? No. Our theatres, music halls, and picture palaces are full. Our restaurants are crowded, our night clubs drive a thriving trade—and nobody cares for tomorrow.

Why? Read the daily newspapers, and learn the lesson of how the public are being daily deluded by false assertions that all is well, and that we have great imperial Germany—the country which has, for twenty years, plotted against us—in the hollow of our hand.

The public are not told the real truth, and there lies the grave scandal which must be apparent to every person in the country. But, I ask, will the malevolent influence which is protecting the alien enemy among us, and refusing to allow inquiry into spying, ever permit the truth to be told?

Let the reader pause, and think.

Despite the cast-iron censorship, and the most docile press the world has ever seen, the German people must, on the other hand, today be suspecting the truth. Germans may be braggarts, but they are not fools, and it is safe to say that the hysterical spasms of hatred of Great Britain—by which the entire nation seems to be convulsed—have their origin in an ever-growing conviction of failure and a very accurate perception of where that failure lies.

In this frame of mind they may venture on anything, and it is for this reason that I believe they may yet, in spite of all that has happened, attempt a desperate raid on these shores.

What are we doing to meet that peril?

In no uncertain words Mr. Le Queux calls upon Great Britain to realize that her very existence is in jeopardy, to prepare for efforts against the Germans such as will hopelessly outstrip anything done so far in the war. He writes:

I have not the slightest doubt that before this struggle ends we shall see practically the entire male population of the country called to the colors in some capacity, and, unfortunately, that is an aspect of the case which is certainly not yet recognized by the democracy as a whole. * * *

I am convinced that our responsible Ministers should at once take the country fully into their confidence and tell us plainly and unmistakably what the man in the street has to expect.

THE ADVENTURES OF A ONE-DOLLAR BILL

I AM a brand-new one-dollar bill.

I cannot complain of the dearth of companions, for there are ninety-nine dollar bills with whom I am so closely packed that I can't even say "Hello, Bill!" to any one of them.

I am weary of being tossed around with the other 90 and 9 at the caprice of the paying teller of the bank, now on one side of the desk, now on another side.

Ah! What is this?

I gaze enraptured at a diamond ring on the fat chubby finger of a fat chubby man, whom the paying teller addresses as "Mr. Hood," and who stuffs my companions and myself into his trouser pocket.

At last I am to see the world!

Well, now! What do you suppose has happened?

The next morning Mr. Hood takes me out of his pocket and gives me to his pretty young daughter.

She has me in a sweet little chamois-lined purse, along with some nickels. They aggravate me, because they keep rubbing up against me and telling me their experiences in the slot machines.

Ah! She has taken me out of the purse, and I guess I am going to be exchanged for a box of candy, when some one says, "Rosie, what a surprise! Now, dear, I'll pay for the candy."

She does not place me back in the purse, but holds me in her sweet little hand while she talks to the young man. "Archie" she calls him.

I steal a glance at him and nearly fall on the floor. Archie Hartley is the paying teller at the bank where I first resided.

They are engaged, I gather from the conversation, but if she knew how he used to smirk at the pretty girls who came to his window in the bank, then I guess the engagement would be cancelled.

Oh, dear! I am back in the purse again with those plebeian nickels.

Suddenly I am conscious of being jerked out of Rosie's hand.

In a few minutes the purse is opened and an ugly looking face is peering at me.

"A dollar and twenty cents, Bill," he says to another hideous-looking man; "those swell-dressed girls put all their coin on their backs."

Now I am conscious of another companion. A gold watch that was removed from Mr. Hartley's pocket is abruptly thrust on top of me.

The case of the watch is open, and I see the picture of a pretty blonde. Rosie Hood is a brunette.

I wish I could tell her what a deceiver Archie Hartley is. Maybe I'll get the chance some day.

You remember, I said I was going to see the world. Well! I'm seeing it, all right.

Tonight I am in the hands of a Salvation Army lassie, who gives me to a clerk in a delicatessen store, and he gives me to a chorus girl in change for a two-dollar bill, and she gives me to her landlady, and the landlady stuffs me in a horrid tin bank.

I'll suffocate if I stay in this bank much longer.

Every once in a while a quarter or a dime falls upon me. It is an outrage! I have just made the acquaintance of a plugged nickel, and the way he has coiled himself up in one of my creases is a disgrace. I'd like to notify the Health Department.

Well! I am out of the bank, and am now reclining in a black bag. The landlady is taking me for a walk. I suppose she'll get rid of me before she goes home.

What did I tell you!

I am passed over the counter to a saleslady in exchange for a pair of gloves.

It seems that I am privileged to be at the opening of Hood's New Emporium.

I am all in a flutter! Is this the same Mr. Hood whose pretty daughter once owned me? I can only wait and wonder.

And now! What do you think! Can you imagine?

I am in the hands of dear little Rosie again.

She is saying, "Papa, this is the first dollar our new store has taken in."

And he says, "I think we'll frame it and hang it up in the office."

When he has gone that awful Archie comes in. I am wondering how I can expose his falseness to my sweet Rosie.

Oh! If I only had the power of speech! Who was it that said "money talks"?

Her father reenters suddenly and says, "Rosie, your purse has been recovered, and your watch, also, Mr. Hartley; and, by the way, Mr. Hartley, I observe that you are carrying the picture of a chorus girl in your watch. I need hardly tell you that your marriage with my daughter is now quite impossible."

Bully for Mr. Hood!

Mr. Hartley turns red, stammers a few words, and leaves the room.

There is no more for me to say, except that my wanderings are apparently over, because in a nice new frame, I remain on the wall of Mr. Hood's private office, where I can see Rosie almost every day.

dertaking of Russia to transfer to Japan all Chinese and Russian texts that are the basis of Russia's special rights in China. Russia held special rights such as no other country enjoyed. When Japan acquired these texts she set up a parallel claim with Russia and secured Russia's adhesion to her claim.

Komura was the author of this. He saw that, although Japan could get no indemnity from Russia, she could get vastly more by the joint possession with Russia of certain special rights which furnished the basis of a continental empire by which Japan could prosecute an indefinite expansion inland. So he framed a plan of state for a greater Japan as it exists today and as it is defined by Japan's plans at Peking, of which special rights on the basis of Russia's agreements with China are the cornerstone. He did this before he reached Japan from Portsmouth, and narrowly escaped with his life, although when he died his countrymen regarded him as the greatest Japanese statesman of his time.

It is Komura's policy and plan of state that is now in force on the continent in East Asia. Komura saw not only that good relations with Russia, with whom Japan would have to live in future, would necessitate the recognition of Russia's special rights within the borders of the Chinese Empire; that it was only through the isolation of Korea from China by a great war that Japan was able to acquire mainland territory, but that joint support of Russian special rights would be her salvation on the continent, without which the maintenance of a footing beyond the Yalu River after the annexation of Korea would be impossible, on account of the principles of the open-door doctrine.

It was only by the existence of an essential special right which Japan could exercise by reason of the privilege of equal right—one of the principles of the open-door doctrine—that Japan could intrench her authority and expand in China. Such a claim of right existed by which sovereignty in North Manchuria was divided by China with Russia alone.

Komura first secured from China the admission of the independence of Korea. The existence of the division of sovereignty in Manchuria was not known to the Government of the United States until 1908. The disclosure came in connection with our contention against Russia's right to administer the municipality of Harbin, in Manchuria, whereupon Russia informed Secretary of State Root of the existence of a certain "Article 6" of an agreement of 1896 between Russia and China, by which China delegated her sovereignty in the Russian railway era to Russia. Secretary Root then abandoned the contention, an act in turn acquiesced in by Secretary Knox, under whose sanction in 1909 a statement was issued referring to the fact that the open-door doctrine had become little more than a figure of speech.

In 1909, under the Taft Administration, Secretary Knox made an effort, awkwardly carried out, but heroic, to erase "Article 6," removing the solvent that was undermining the open-door doctrine, by the device of an international holding company of the great powers to take charge of both the Russian and Japanese railways. By this means it would have been impossible for either one or both of the two powers of Russia and Japan in North China to exercise sovereign functions either in the zone of the Russian railway, then jointly owned by them, or to extend these privileges to branch and other railways. It failed.

The United States Government did not learn of the importance of the secret minutes of the Portsmouth Treaty in this connection until 1909. The operation jointly of the secret agreement of the Portsmouth Treaty and of "Article 6" of the Russo-Chinese agreement of 1896, together with the joint Japanese-Russian policy, resulted in the building by Japan of two additional railways in Eastern Manchuria, the annexation of Korea, the alienation to Russia of all Outer Mongolia, the securing by Japan of concessions for four railways in Mongolia, and, according to all reports, the extension of the lease of the railways carrying the right of "sole and exclusive right of administration" in their zones to ninety-nine years. Russo-Japanese railway sovereignty carries with it control of all commerce and development and has removed all of Manchuria and Eastern Mongolia from that China known to us as the theatre of the principles of the open door, and converted it into a special joint sphere of influence of Russia and Japan.

Now, Japan, in the present crisis of the world, with a masterful diplomacy and arms, lord of a helpless nation of perhaps three hundred millions of people inhabiting a region in size and wealth of resources and in all favorable points second to that of no other people or nation, and realizing her opportunity, has demanded uncontrolled extension of special rights before which China is capitulating. Prefacing her demands with the sincere statement of a desire to maintain the peace of Eastern Asia, and under the intention of "strengthening the friendly relations existing between the two neighboring nations," she requires the right to dispose of Kiao-Chau, concessions for railways and mines, the control of railways, mines, and mining regions, the extension of territorial and railway leases, the lease of land, the right of residence and of business of all kinds, together with the extension of exterritoriality, the veto over railways and over security for loans, advisers to the Chinese, the disposition of islands or ports, a market for munitions of war, for war and arsenal materials and loans, and the right of police masters and of advisers to the Central Government.

Hon. Philander C. Knox.

Henry W. Denison.

Aside from industrial concessions, loans, leases, and police matters, Japan demands the extension of sovereignty and exterritoriality now exercised by her under special rights, in railway zones, and by equality of right in treaty ports, to the country at large in Manchuria and Eastern Mongolia. She demands what would be joint administration of the whole Japanese sphere north of the Great Wall, while under the circumstances of her leadership she proposes to place in Peking those advisers that can never permit to be wrought for China such achievements as Denison wrought for Japan. They would be Government agents imposed by diplomacy, and their business would be necessarily that of loosening the powers from China.

The situation affords a valuable commentary upon the European war, since it is evident that Japan never would have embarked upon so extensive and important a program if she had not believed in a long duration of hostilities in Europe. It has been an open question for at least six years as to whether the open-door doctrine would afford any real protection to China in an emergency. An emergency has arisen such as China never has seen. The only barrier to the realization of these demands during the period of the European war is the open door doctrine and its principles of equal rights of all nations in China, and the integrity of China's territory and the preservation of her sovereignty within it.

Arms and the Envoy.

China's position is more desperate than it has ever been in the history of her relations with the West. Her mistakes have been fundamental. All the big ones have been hers. After the failure of the proposal for the neutralization of the Manchurian railways which had cost us such humiliation, Secretary Knox had realized the ideal compact of the great powers in the "six power loan." But this compact China destroyed by weakness and perfidy. If she is lost it will doubtless be because in the effort to escape from her difficulties she repudiates all foreign direction and control.

It has been apparent for several years that China would probably never be able again to make such a great mistake as she made in refusing the terms of the joint loan of the six great powers for the development of industry and the reorganization of Government. Had she done so she would have been the means of creating the strongest possible guarantee of the principles of the open-door doctrine, since the joint administration of the six great powers over her finances and industrial regeneration would have prevented their individual aggressions. The only safety she has had has been due to the actual presence there of the great powers in force. Under these circumstances, in a sense China was more or less safe. The foreign powers exercised a control over each other, and in the so-called six-power loan the interests in support of the open door predominated. In such a time as this the encroachments of one of the six powers, like Japan, would have been automatically governed by the large joint interests of the other five. But China quibbled and lost, they are practically eliminated, and the result to her has been that she is left to face Japan alone.

One of the terrors before the Chinese is that which comes from the guilt of having long played them each against the other and against Japan. In this she must feel the penalty sensed by Kipling in the lines, "The sins ye do by two and two, Ye pay for one by one." Then there is the hollow magnanimity from her accusers because of her conspiracies with aliens that is worse than gall. There is in the negotiations, implied if not expressed, the stain of that reproach of truckling to foreigners which Korea once administered to Japan. Why did you do these things? You were the one who brought exterritoriality upon us. Why did you give away these concessions, these ports which we have had to fight to get back for you? are some of the questions China must listen to from Japan.

China has indeed taken certain measures. With respect to her situation she has not been entirely deceived. Several months before the outbreak of the European war President Yuan Shih-kai asserted that the year 1915 would be the crucial year in the history of the republic. The republic's only friend was the United States, while Japan was against it as being a canker in a weak organism. It was therefore deprived of the sanction of its powerful neighbor and rival. Against the menace of 1915, which would probably determine the fate of the republic, the President had been unable to fortify himself with the proceeds of any foreign loan, and, as allies were impossible to get, and without military defense and protection, China was left to her one weak resource against her enemies—the boycott.

Seeing the approach of this day of reckoning determined upon by Japan, all Chinese communities abroad were secretly warned that the Government at Peking could not officially countenance boycott or open hostility to Japan, but that it expected the utmost assistance which China's subjects could peacefully exert. But aside from this, China's only aid is that of friendly mediation of the powers, most of whom are fighting for their lives, even as China, and the sympathy of missionary bodies and friends.

Okuma.

Otherwise China must gaze at her antagonist, whose most conspicuous feature is Okuma, the Japanese Premier. In 1911, when it was shown that the revolutionary outbreak in China was going to overthrow the Manchu dynasty, Count Okuma declared it to be the end of China, for incontestable reasons which he enumerated. China lacked all the essential elements of salvation that had existed in Japan in a similar emergency. Her throne was not a rallying point upon which was centred reverent affection, and there was no large party of progressive leaders who, to hereditary prestige, added high intellect, profound foresight, and invincible courage. Moreover, she had no class of trained officials necessary to create a highly scientific organized Government of modern times which her continued existence demanded, nor did she have the enormous sums of money with which alone this program could be realized. In consequence China would plunge into debt and destruction.

These were the prevailing views in Japan. They were the views of Henry Willard Denison, who was acquainted with the views of every important public man in Japan. That China considered it an evil day for her when Okuma became Premier is testified to by a belief among many Chinese that Yuan Shih-kai attempted to arrange an understanding with Okuma before his elevation to the Premiership. Count Okuma is a popular leader, noisy and astute, cabling his views abroad, and it may be imagined what are the sensations of the Peking Government when it sees his policy meeting with popular approval without provoking one important native protest.

In America, while the press refuses to print Japan's demands, it sees it circulating the cabled views of Okuma, who says: "As Premier of Japan, I have stated and now I again state, to the people of America and of the world, that Japan has no ulterior motive, no desire to secure more territory, no thought of depriving China or other peoples of anything which they now possess. My Government and my people have given their word and their pledge, which will be as honestly kept as Japan always keeps promises." This emphasizes to China the fact that Japan erased seven different international compacts of the years 1895 to 1907, styled treaties, alliances, protocols, agreements, arrangements, and conventions, in annexing Korea; that Ito declared that Japan would not annex Korea, and that any statesman or politician who prophesies what his country is going to do, or his successors, is ridiculous, and only lets himself in for the laughter of posterity.

On printing the demands of Japan upon China seven weeks after China sought publicity, the American press follows it with the statement by Okuma that "The uneasiness and suspicion in the United States in connection with Japan's negotiations at Peking are based on misunderstanding and misinformation scattered broadcast by interested mischiefmakers."

"The negotiations between Japan and China are nearing a satisfactory conclusion," says Okuma. "I am now willing to state publicly that Japan is quite confident of the rectitude and good faith of her position. Japan is merely seeking to settle outstanding troublesome questions in a way looking toward permanent peace and good understanding."

Without questioning the good faith of Japan, China might feelingly point out that perfect peace and good understanding were obtained by the young man and the tiger.

There is no doubt that the most important crisis of years exists in Peking. The press correspondents report that the strain placed upon them has been one of the most severe experienced by them in any part of the world. An emergency has arisen in East Asia affecting China such as she never has seen. She faces a situation that, if Japan succeeds, plainly promises ultimately to deprive her of any effective intervention for her relief by Western powers, in which case she is alone with Japan. This will be the master fruit of Japanese diplomacy directed by Komura.

CHINESE "CHOPS"

AMERICAN manufacturers who are seeking to establish their goods in China are warned in a recent Federal report not to minimize the importance of the "chop," or trademark, in China. The Chinese attach great importance to the chop. A striking example of the unwillingness to accept a new chop is shown by the experience of a Shanghai importer. He had developed some sale for canned salmon among the Chinese and had sold a certain brand of American salmon.

This brand had a label showing a salmon with the tail turned up. A change was made in the label and the salmon was depicted with its tail turned down. When a new shipment arrived with the chop showing a salmon with down-turned tail, the importer found he could not sell the consignment to the natives.

"At this moment, none of the warring countries of Europe can cherish the aged and infirm. The State cannot give care to its dependents when thousands of splendid men are dying each day.

"And so little children and aged people are dying, too; in some countries in the proportion of five to every one soldier killed upon the battlefield. But the nation must remain indifferent to their suffering.

"The thousands of women whose ambitions are all centred in their children are definitely committed to the ascent of human life; that which leads a man to cherish the hope that the next generation shall advance beyond the generation in which he lives; that generous glow we all experience when we see that those coming after us are equipped better than we have been.

"We know that Europe at the end of this war will not begin to build where it left off; we know that it will begin generations behind the point it had reached when the war began.

"If we admit that this sensitiveness for human life is stronger in women than in men because women have been responsible for the care of the young and the aged and those who need special nurture, it is certainly true that this sensitiveness, developed in women, carries with it an obligation.

"The women do not believe that Europe really had reached a point at which the men of one nation necessarily had to kill the men of other nations or themselves be killed.

"We cannot admit that self-defense urged by the statesmen of each of the warring nations is valid excuse in every case.

"But, quite as each nation makes this plea, because Governments at last realize that offensive warfare will no longer be tolerated, and that it has become a thing of the past, many women throughout the countries of the civilized world are declaring that warfare itself is not to be tolerated.

"Never before in the history of wars has there been such a solidarity among women, such organization as has been achieved during the last century. Without a hint of sex antagonism women are availing themselves of the wider public knowledge concerning the reaction of war upon women and children, in order to make a clear indictment against war as such.

"Once before in the history of the world, in response to this sensitiveness, women called a halt to the sacrifice of human life, although it then implied the abolition of a religious observance long believed to be right and necessary.

"In the history of one nation after another, it was the mothers who first protested that their children should no longer be slain as living sacrifices upon the altars of the tribal gods, although the national leaders contended that human sacrifice was bound up with the traditions of free religion and patriotism and could not be abolished. The women led a revolt against the hideous practice which had dogged the human race for centuries.

"Many of us believe that at this moment throughout this world of ours there are thousands of men and women who have become convinced that the sacrifice of life in warfare is unnecessary and wasteful. Women in Europe—in the very countries which are now at war—are solemnly protesting against this sacrifice. The Women's Peace Party believes that we are endeavoring to express that which is grounded in the souls of women all over the world.

"Even as this war has horrors which no war ever knew before, so also has the public better knowledge of them than it ever before has had of the horrors of any war.

"All the censorships which the ingenious minds of military commanders have been able to evolve have not kept from women a very good idea of the actual state of things.

"While much which reaches us cannot be confirmed and certain horrors may have been exaggerated, enough has been confirmed beyond the shadow of a doubt to challenge woman's chivalry to her own sex.

"A change of woman's status always has been a by-product of war—the continued wars of France made a great change in the position of woman there. This was the beginning of the operation of small industries and commercial enterprises which are now so generally known in France; quite as the Southern woman was forced into new activities after the civil war in America.

"It is possible that this European war may change woman's position not only in industry and agriculture—which it is obviously doing—but that it also will make a distinct change in her political position. Certainly, everywhere, women will have to help to rebuild what has been torn down. That the whole conception of government has been momentarily thrown back into one in which woman has no place does not mean that the nations will not eagerly avail themselves of her services to recover as quickly as possible their tremendous economic losses.

"The Women's Peace Party was started in America somewhat as The Hague conference has been called by a group of European women—that women might have a medium through which to express their reaction against war.

"I have here a collection of open letters written by women since the beginning of the war, from England, from France, from Austria, from Denmark, from Ireland, from Russia, from Hungary—all of them protesting against the insanity and waste of war, and declaring the solidarity of women in the midst of it.

"The business of making public opinion for peace is surely women's work, if only because they feel the horrors of war more keenly than men do, and respond less readily to the martial appeal.

"Women are realizing, as never before, their obligations to embody in laws and institutions those moral and social forces which insure stability, form sound public sentiment, and make for security against warfare. For many reasons it is easier for women than for men to urge better international relations, because women can talk peace without being challenged for cowardice."

JAPAN'S GAME IN THE FAR EAST

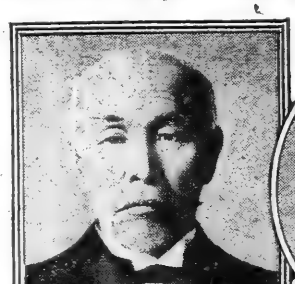
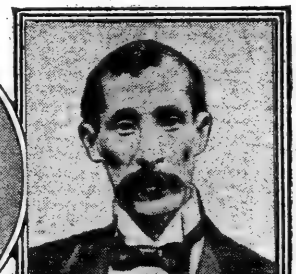
By Frederick McCormick.



Count Okuma.

Yuan Shih-Kai, President of China.



Baron Komura.

DIPLOMACY has taken up its abode in Tokio.

The world is witnessing the remaking of the Pacific and of East Asia.

The news fell unheard and unappreciated upon a hyphenated country and a hyphenated press. Feb. 11 The Associated Press of New York, The London Times, and The Chicago Daily News were offered the "scoop" of the great news of Japan's demands upon China. The London Times printed a brief summary. The Associated Press was afraid to offer the news to the hyphenated, and held it up a week, and in all the world only The Chicago Herald, Feb. 18, was bold enough to print the text of Japan's demands. It was March 31 before The Associated Press published the full text of Japan's program for remaking the Pacific Hemisphere. The Government at Washington placed a taboo on the subject and buried it. We have no right to know.

The testimony of her Foreign Office shows that Japan's diplomacy is based on two things—the foreign evils that flooded Japan the first ten years the country was open to foreign intercourse and the abuse of international right and justice by Russia, Germany, and France in depriving her of the Liaotung Peninsula in Manchuria after her war with China in 1896.

It took Japan more than forty years to eradicate the foreign evils that the floodgates of the Perry treaty admitted in 1854. We helped her. Through the aid of our advisers and during the life and man of the last of them, Henry Willard Denison, and by his multitudinous works in Japan, they were all removed except the claim of exemption from taxation of certain foreign property in Yokohama, on which matter he was working at his death. We helped Japan to recover control of her commerce, to recover jurisdiction over foreigners surrendered in her first treaties, and to correct all the inequalities in all her relations with foreigners, by which her position before Western nations had been that of an inferior. Some were unfair concessions, some special rights, whose privileged proprietors had become fastened like barnacles upon the State and were the cause of complications with foreign powers. With our help they were pried off like barnacles until the ship of State was free and Japan had it to herself.

Then the inequalities put upon her by Russia, Germany, and France she quickly adjusted by successful war with Russia, in which our help rendered through Denison and Roosevelt and our bankers, notably Jacob H. Schiff, who found half her borrowed war money, was pre-eminent, and also by the assault against German Kiao-Chau.

Japan then felt the call to "fulfill her destiny." That was, to her, the achievement of the next most desirable thing, namely, the prying loose from East Asia of the great powers as she had pried off the barnacles of favored foreigners and special privileges from her own administration. If she could do so, international affairs in East Asia would be free from unwelcome intervention and feel their freedom even as national affairs in Japan were free. Japan would then have East Asia essentially to herself—she would be no less than leader. That is Japan's present work. That she is applying the simple rule to the powers which she applied to her concessionaires and other unwelcome ones, and against Russia, and that the rule of special right which had been tried against her she is practicing against China, though, as Okuma says, for "permanent peace and good understanding," there can be no doubt. There is no contrary evidence. It is the substance of Japanese oft-professed "destiny."

In all respects Japan's diplomacy since 1905, by which she finds herself with the strongest allies in the world, standing in the open with no rival and no visible enemy worthy the name of an antagonist, may be found to be the masterpiece of statesmanship of this century.

There was a day when Japan knew not diplomacy. It was recent; in 1895 the conformation of the international world molded in the Chancelleries of the great powers was new to her. International complications were getting pretty close when they reached Korea. She was surrounded, and knew well enough by the most powerful of all human instincts, the military, that the gauntlet was down and she would have to fight her way out. She chose the land route, for which she was prepared—yet not prepared. In the conflict with her first opponent, China, she did not overlook the European powers in the background, but in her haste to seize territory she neglected to neutralize them. Consequently she had to submit to a revision by Russia, Germany, and France of her peace treaty with China. Japan had overlooked something. It was diplomacy. It was a shock—few but sympathized with her.

Today, nineteen years after, there is no evidence of the tyro. The nicety with which Japan has landed on her feet in the present circumstances proves that Diplomacy, the lost animal of that flock which she had gathered up and brought home from Western civilization in the past, had been found. After the Japan-China war she brought the animal home and tied him up between the Foreign Office and the residence of the late Henry Willard Denison, the American adviser. He was looked over, and those who love Japan most must admit that, black sheep as he was, Japan wickedly adopted him. In the next war, 1904-5, Japan had fortified herself with an ally, Great Britain, and isolated her opponent, so that the terms of her martial success when expressed in treaty would be final, as they were at Portsmouth.

How to get into the political line-up for the approaching European war, all of whose details were discussed in the field in Manchuria during the Russo-Japanese war by European military agents, staff officers, and journalists alike, was Japan's problem after 1905. Her interests lay in the direction of co-operation and friendship with her late enemy, Russia, and so did Great Britain's. This made the second Anglo-Japanese alliance unavoidable. As Britain's ally, Japan had no other course but to cultivate Russia's confidence. The four years' process of this love-making was one of the coyest of international courtships. Japan's overtures were several times most humiliating and excruciating. At one of the embarrassing meetings Prince Ito, one of the foremost men in the world, was coldly assassinated by the representative of a third party, and died in the presence of the Russian envoys. Russia humbled her pride reluctantly—it was one of the highest prices which she paid in the processes by which the coalition against Germany and Austria was brought about. But Japan succeeded, and the quadruple alliance of Great Britain, Russia, France, and Japan is the result, with Japanese present mastery in China and East Asia.

What were Japan's own reasons for understanding and co-operation with Russia? It is hard to teach the world these facts—it won't receive them unless they should come on a silver platter from the Foreign Office at Tokio or the one at Petrograd, when the surfeited noses of the press-wearied public would doubtless curl with olfactory ennui. But I again state them:

The secret minutes of the Portsmouth Treaty contain an article of agreement mutually recognizing the special rights of both countries in China, and the un-

VIVID STORY OF SINGAPORE MUTINY

Little Has Leaked Out About the Uprising of Native Troops There Owing to the Censor, but There Was Brisk Fighting.

Scene of one of the Bloodiest Skermishes—A Path in the Botanical Gardens.

STRAITS SETTLEMENTS, March 8.—On Wednesday, the 17th of February, the Press Bureau issued a communiqué stating that, owing to internal jealousies, a native regiment stationed in Singapore had "given trouble" and that a riot had resulted, but that the situation was well in hand and could not be termed serious.

As far as we in the East can ascertain, this brief, bald announcement is the only news that has been given to the outside world of the wave of bloodshed which has passed over this colony during the past month. The failure on the part of the authorities to give a more intelligent and detailed explanation of the situation in Singapore is a vivid indication of the significance and importance which they attach to it—an indication of their unwillingness to allow a true account of the affair to reach other British possessions, where it might be acted upon as a precedent by the native population.

Contrary to the mass of information offered for public consumption, India and Burma have been the scene of grave disturbances ever since the entrance of Turkey into the theatre of hostilities, and the knowledge of the happenings in Singapore, it is feared, would act as a spark to the already-laid fuse of riot and rebellion.

Singapore, which has just been the scene of a mutiny second only to that of the Sepoy rebellion, is a city of 386,000 inhabitants. Situated on an island at the extreme end of the Malay Peninsula, and at the point of convergence of all the trade routes between the Far and Near East and Australia, it ranks as the fifth largest shipping port in the world. On this account it has been very strongly fortified by the English Government, so strongly, indeed, that it is sometimes known as the "Gibraltar of the East."

At the commencement of hostilities in Europe it was from this port and Hongkong that the English and French China squadrons radiated in their endeavors to intercept that portion of the German fleet stationed in Asiatic waters. Some of the ships so engaged have been retained in this vicinity ever since, and it is due to this fact, and to this fact alone, that Singapore is not a mass of ruins at the present moment. Had their marines been unavailable it is hard to imagine what would have been the result.

On Oct. 10, 1914, the Fifth Native Light Infantry arrived in Singapore from Madras. It had been sent to replace the King's Own Yorkshire Light Infantry, which had been ordered to France. From the moment of its arrival indications of unrest and discontent were everywhere apparent—a condition of affairs, by the way, prevalent in more than one Indian regiment at the present time.

There had been some slight trouble, to be sure, regarding certain promotions which had taken place. That the resulting mutiny, however, should be ascribed to this is absurd. The fundamental causes lay far deeper and were of a far more complex nature, so complex, indeed, that space does not permit of their discussion here. Suffice it to say that this was the very regiment, along with three others, that years ago started the great Sepoy rebellion in India. Well has it lived up to its traditions!

As far as can be gathered at the present time, the thought of actual mutiny was not bruited about the regiment until news of its proposed transfer to Hongkong was received—around the first of January. It was this, added to the fact that the Singapore garrison had been depleted until 200 of the Royal Garrison Artillery and 50 sappers were the only regular European troops remaining, that gave rise in the native mind to the belief that actual mutiny was feasible.

These vagaries of thought rapidly crystallized into shape upon the receipt of word that the transport Nile was on her way out to embark the regiment for its new station. The Nile was due to arrive on Feb. 18. The rebellion was, therefore, scheduled to take place at midnight of the 17th—before a chance had been given the authorities to remove the supply of ammunition stored in the barracks.

Imagine the surprise of the mutineers when the Nile steamed into the harbor on the morning of the 15th, three days ahead of time. All their plans were upset and they were face to face with the necessity of completing new ones very rapidly.

By this time the military authorities had an inkling that trouble was in the air and it was decided to remove the ammunition and place it on board the Nile before nightfall. Accordingly, at 3 o'clock on the afternoon of the 15th, four motor lorries were sent to Alexander Barracks for this purpose. The first loaded up and whizzed away without the slightest murmur arising. It was as the second was being filled that the trouble started. As if by magic a squad of troopers sprang up and started to fire on the men loading the ammunition. The affray was short-lived. Almost immediately the mutineers were in possession of the lorry and its contents, its guardians killed. The fight was on.

Those of the regiment who were not under arms streamed into the barracks to get their guns. Those that were, commenced to supply themselves with all the cartridges they could conveniently carry. A squad of them ran to the southern end of the buildipg, where a portion of the interned Germans were confined. Taking the Europeans on guard by surprise, they succeeded in killing the lot.

The gates were then opened and the Germans allowed to escape, or not, as they desired. Two European officers of the regiment present in the vicinity at the time, Captain Boyce and Lieutenant Elliot, were shot down as they ran out of their quarters. The immediate surroundings, as far as the mutineers were concerned, were now cleared.

Alexander Barracks is situated on a slight rise about four to four and one-half miles from the town. To a force of men desiring to attack the town two courses of action are possible—that of approaching it direct by roads which follow the shore line, and are therefore subject to attack by sea, or that of executing what might be termed a flank movement and reaching the principal portions of the town via the residential section to the north and Tanglin Barracks. Opinion among the mutineers seemed to have been divided as to which was the better course to adopt, and, as a result, about half (approximately 550) went one way and half the other.

The news that mutiny had broken out among the Fifth Light Infantry reached headquarters in a very short time. It was immediately realized by those in command that a very critical situation had to be met and that the means at their disposal for so doing were seriously inadequate. However, there was not the slightest hesitation. Nobody funked or lost his head, and it is due to the prompt and efficient manner in which the early stages of the mutiny were handled that the European population of Singapore owe their lives and property.

A general alarm was set off and the entire garrison of the forts in the harbor ordered to proceed to the Government wharves. A company of Malay States Volunteer Rifles, stationed in the city itself, was ordered to meet and delay that portion of the mutineers advancing directly along the shore roads. Shortly afterward the Royal Garrison Artillery and the Sappers arrived from the forts and were moved up in support. A very severe ditch to ditch, house to house, tree to tree engagement ensued, in which the regulars were gradually forced to give ground.

Luckily, however, at that hour of the afternoon most of the men who were members of the Singapore Volunteers were in their offices or at their clubs and were, therefore, the more readily mobilized. Within an hour this corps (numbering about 150 men) had been placed on the firing line and had served to check any further appreciable advance of the Fifth Native Light Infantry in that quarter.

While these events were occurring every effort was made, by automobile and telephone, to warn the inhabitants of what was going on. All women were ordered to proceed on board the merchant ships in the harbor, and these were rapidly filled to overflowing. Every civilian who volunteered was given a rifle and a cartridge belt and they were sent in squads to hold various portions of the town.

By this time the H. M. S. Cadmus, which had been lying just outside the harbor, had landed its full quota of marines and bluejackets, with machine guns. These men were ordered to get in touch with that portion of the mutineers who had reached the northern part of the city and had captured Tanglin Barracks, freed the Germans interned there, and were occupied in killing all the Europeans they could find.

This was a more difficult proposition than appears at first glance. The area to be covered was very large and the custom of the East—that every house have a compound surrounding it—afforded an attacking force abundant cover and increased the chance of ambuscade tenfold. Therefore, but little was done in this direction other than holding all the streets leading to the more thickly populated area.

All during the night of the 15th the fighting was very severe, with varying results. More and more civilians kept volunteering and squads of these men were sent out as quickly as they could be equipped to bolster up the weak points in the lines or were held in the city for policing purposes. From the standpoint of military operations the honors up to this point were slightly in favor of the mutineers. The authorities, however, had gained a much needed breathing space, and that night was spent in "tagging down the rag ends." Every possible precaution was taken to prevent rioting on the part of sympathizers.

No sooner had the trouble broken out than Admiral Jerram, then in Singapore, had got in touch with all the men-of-war cruising in near-by waters. The Russian cruiser Aurel was located in Penang,

THE OASIS OF EUROPE--MONTE CARLO

Where Royalty Goes to Forget the War by Gambling Away Small Fortunes Daily and Where Opera and Pleasure Rule.

By Wythe Williams.

FOR the last sixty years there has been a custom so rigidly observed at Monte Carlo that it has become an unbreakable habit. It is known as the Marble Face. You notice it the moment you alight at the gare. The porters from the hotels all have it. The maîtres d'hôtel will never get over it. The croupiers in the Casino were born with it. It is an established fact. Also it is the greatest asset of the little independent principality of Monaco—even in war time.

While all the rest of Europe either reverberates to the sounds of war or wonders on just what date the steel and leaden orchestra will begin, Monte Carlo, embowered among its palms, oranges, and olive groves, turnips the Marble Face upon all who enter its portals, continues to play roulette.

I went to Monte Carlo last week. From stories I had heard concerning prices on the Riviera during war time, I figured that perhaps it might be possible for me to survive at least a few days in paradise. Immediately upon my arrival the Marble Face emitted speech.

"We are still the Pearl of the Riviera," it told me. "People come here, war or no war. We still have special trains every day. The Casino continues crowded." Having thus spoken the Marble Face resumed its ancient impassivity. "Rouge, impair et passe" came the voice of the croupier within the great gambling hall.

I went to the Casino shortly after the marble faced, gold liveried noblemen at my hotel took possession of both me and my baggage. Upon the door of my room was tacked the ancient notice that bills would be presented every three days. The hotel proprietor takes no chances against the roulette.

I found the Casino struggling along with ten double tables of roulette running from noon to midnight—and two tables of "trente et quarante" on the side. Down the street at the Sporting Club, where formerly it was only permitted that millionaires should be looted, there is now baccarat for the mob, the entrance fee of $20 being suspended "during the war." The play continues from early evening until as late in the morning as there is money in sight.

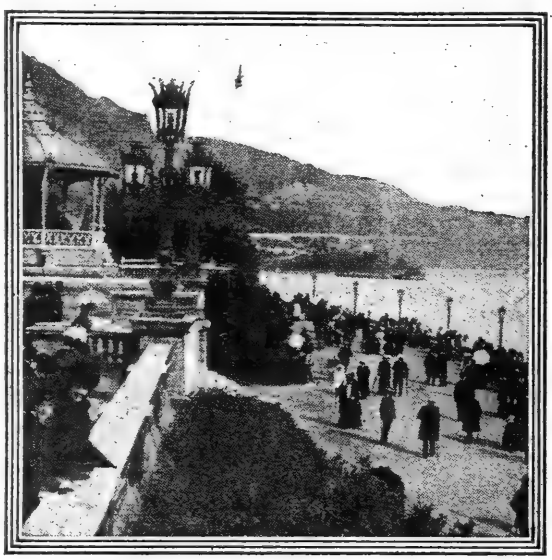
In the Casino proper there has been no change—except that large signs hang over the entrance to the main gambling hall, stating that no soldier or sailor in the uniform of any army or navy may enter. It is all very proper. I approached the offices of the "Administration" to secure an admission ticket good for the day. An official bowed me across the room to another official. This official was most polite—painfully so. It hurt him to inform me—but he did inform me—that it would be preferable that I enter the "Salle" clad in "dark costume" rather than in the Norfolk jacket and knickerbockers that I was wearing. I asked him whether it was that "dark costumes" are more appropriate for funerals. His eyebrows lifted—so did his shoulders. But his face was made of marble—so I retired to my hotel for the "dark costume."

Half an hour later I told the incident to an English acquaintance whom I encountered at one of the gambling tables. He explained: "It's this way. They want us to think that they think that they are gentlemen." So I tossed a five-franc piece on the funereal color and red won.

My English friend was invalided to the Riviera from the trenches. So he considered that he had a perfect right to gamble if he liked. "But for Heaven's sake," he whispered, "don't let anybody know that I am a soldier or I'd be chucked out of here in a hurry."

We took a stroll around the Salle. A huge crowd surrounded one of the tables. "There's a chap playing maximums," said my Englishman, "that's rather good for war time."

We crowded close to the table. A fat man of about 50 sat next to the croupier. He was entirely bald. His face was pasty and perfectly immobile. He was the ideal gambler. As he played I noticed an innovation caused by the war. For the first time in the history of the Casino there is no gold on the tables. Silver is used for the five-franc plays, but for the twenty francs there are small circular chips of celluloid. For the hundred francs the chip is yellow and larger. The five-hundred-franc chips are oval and the thousand-franc ones are jade oblongs. The fat gambler was covering the table with oblongs. We watched him for half an hour, when he decided to stop. He had won 70,000 francs, 40,000 of which he gathered in on the last coup. My surprise was great at witnessing such high play, but even greater when I learned that the fat gambler was a journalist—a newspaper proprietor from Italy.



The Terrace and Bay, Monte Carlo.

The next afternoon I saw the same man again at the tables—this time losing thousands. At the end of the afternoon the bank had his entire winnings of the day before and much more; but he was quite as impassive.

On this afternoon, as I wandered about the hall, I overheard some one say in English: "If you want to find her, you don't need to look at the people about the tables. Just look at the table itself. If it is covered with hundred-franc pieces you will know she is there."

I wondered who "she" might be—so I followed the advice to look at the tables. I found one near the entrance literally plastered over with money. A large crowd surrounded it. The player was a woman apparently about 50. She got up and seated herself nearer the croupier. She was tall and very thin. Her complexion was sallow and her cheek bones high. Her hair was gray and ruffled high over her forehead. She was dressed plainly—almost dowdy. She wore no jewels or ornaments of any kind. Her lips were set tight. Her bright blue eyes were fixed on the table. Piles of chips were before her. She mechanically picked up a dozen at a time and kept throwing them carelessly on the table during each coup almost until the moment the ivory ball ceased spinning.

Almost invariably she lost, and I calculated she averaged nearly a thousand dollars on each play. I kept wondering who she was. Finally she looked up, passed her hand over her face, and shrugged her shoulders with a combined gesture of weariness, impatience, and boredom. The croupier called out to "make the plays" and again she mechanically dipped her hand into the pile of money before her. But this time she kept looking at the faces of others at the table.

I recognized her as a woman I had seen some years before in Berlin. Her name is Anastasia, Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Schwerin. She is the mother of the Crown Princess of Germany.

I inquired about her and learned that she had lived in her villa at Monte Carlo since the beginning of the war, when she renounced her German title and washed her hands of her German relatives. She is now merely a "simple Russian Princess." I wondered how much it costs Russia to cover her gambling losses at the Casino.

On the same evening I met a young man walking on the terrace overlooking the Mediterranean. It was a wonderful night—the full moon making a path of silver across the sea. The air was as warm as July. The young man wore a light gray suit and was bareheaded. He carried a light stick, with which he struck at the orange blossoms just budding over the stone walls of the terrace. I noticed him rather particularly, and he glared at me as he passed. We were going in opposite directions, and as we both turned at the extremities of the terrace we again passed near the centre. Again he glared at me. I noticed his eyes, set close together, and almost black—his huge ears standing straight out—his bulging brow and dark close-cropped head. His stare grew so angry that I smiled and looked back at him—striding rapidly along the walk, on his thin, bowed out "cavalry legs." He again looked back at me and gave something like a snarl.

I met my English friend at the far end of the terrace. "Don't you know that young cub who is growling at you?" he asked. I replied that I did not. "Why, he is the famous bad boy of Europe," was the reply, "the young man who for pastime buried cats in the sand and shot at his officers; that young gentleman is his Royal Highness Prince George of Serbia."

"Why isn't he in the trenches?" I inquired.

"They won't have him," my Englishman informed me; "they are quite satisfied if he remains here."

Later in the evening I again saw the young scapegrace in the restaurant of the Casino. Two secretaries acted as his gambling commissioners. The Prince indicated what numbers they should play—supplied them with piles of banknotes—then brooded silently in the corner until they returned, usually empty-handed.

In the great hall outside, the official war bulletins are posted each evening. Later I saw his Royal Highness standing in front of the board. A cigarette drooped from the corner of his mouth. The news from Serbia was unencouraging. The Prince returned to the roulette.

At one table I noticed a thin-faced, fair-haired man sitting next to the croupier. His long, thin white fingers trembled each time he took money from the pile before him to place it upon the green squares. He kept a careful record of each coup. He sat there for hours, sometimes not playing for long intervals, then again putting on his money regularly. He was laboriously playing a "system." He has been there for weeks and each day occupies, at the same hours, the same seat, at the same table, beside the same croupier.

I knew him. He is a Scottish peer and the direct descendant of Kings. He is almost the last of his mighty line. His son is fighting in the trenches. He told me that the "system" makes him forget.

I found many strange personalities and things in this oasis of Europe which the war touches not. Although French is the national language, it is now seldom heard without an accent. Frenchmen have not sought any oasis, but indeed have gone to war. One afternoon as I sat under a palm tree in the famous suicide gardens I was astonished to hear two men sitting on an opposite bench talking German. But they spoke furtively. On another occasion, as I leaned over the terrace wall looking at the hazy mountains across the Italian frontier, I glanced down and found written in lead pencil on the stones "Deutschland über Alles."

For although only two miles long and but a half mile wide, Monaco is strictly neutral. To enter or leave it, it is necessary to have one's passport visèed by the French Consul—and only two streets back of the hotel where I lived was France.

I tried to discover the effect of the war upon the gambling hall. But the Marble Face prevented that. Hotel prices have gone down, Ciro's is deserted and the Metropole is closed, but apparently the Casino is to go on forever. There is no abatement of activity there. The trains from Nice and other points are always crowded, and of course there is also the Opera.

I met Caruso strolling in the gardens. He would not discuss New York. He was anxious to go home—to Italy. The prices on Caruso nights were greater than at the Opera in Paris before the war.

My days in Paradise were limited. I engaged a seat in the train for Paris—I engaged a seat because there is only one sleeper on the "Riviera Express." The astute gentlemen who control the sleeping car company still maintain their ante-bellum calm to the extent of charging $13 for a single berth.

Before the train departed I took a last walk through the gardens, heavy with the scent of the orange blossoms, and leaned over the terrace walls, looking out upon a scene that only exists at Monte Carlo and in fairy dreams.

A young American was leaning over the terrace wall. He seemed to be in trouble. I knew him; he told me that he had been cleaned out in the Casino. The "Administration" had followed its rules and given him a ticket home. It is an easier requirement than the former embarrassing investigations of suicides. The young man was greatly depressed. It was so necessary that he should recoup quickly. But there is no appeal from the dictum of the Marble Face. An appeal would only be a comic interlude.

So what matters the fate of nations or the world while the little ivory ball spins about the revolving wheel, while the croupier, with his mien of a corpse and in his raiment of an undertaker, still finds money in the teeth of his little rake?

Outside the Casino all remains as usual. The Mediterranean still sparkles, a marvelous blue under the tropic sun. The Maritime Alps tower overhead, their tops lost in impenetrable vapors; and a little higher are the everlasting snows. War matters not to Monaco. Its standing army of ten soldiers has not been mobilized.

WANTS JAPANESE TROOPS IN EUROPE

Stephen Pichon, Formerly French Minister of Foreign Affairs, Says They Should Be Invited to Join Allies There.

Stephen Pichon, author of the striking article translated below, which appeared in the French magazine La Revue, was for a time Minister of Foreign Affairs of the French Republic. He is now a member of the French Senate and head of the well-known Paris newspaper Le Journal.

By Stephen Pichon,
Senator, ex-Minister of Foreign Affairs of France.

IF some historian should collect the table sayings of William II., as Moritz Busch did those of Bismarck, Japan would surely occupy an important place therein. We know that the Emperor, who prepared for war with Europe with a tenacity of which we have new proofs every day, always tried to draw away the attention of the future victims of his premeditated aggressions by talk of the imminent "Yellow Peril."

He did not confine himself to talk about it; he even made pictures of it, which he amiably dedicated to his hearers, and which went the rounds of the Foreign Offices. At the time when the navy seemed to be his leading thought and he was making sonorous speeches on the naval power of Germany, he liked to exhort the nations against whom he was soon to loose war to defend themselves against the "hordes" of the Far East.

The newspapers subservient to him echoed the imperial thought, and the campaign was so well understood and organized that, in too many quarters, it was taken seriously. People claiming to be well informed all too often would whisper in your ear that it was necessary to be on one's guard against the military progress and territorial ambitions of the Mikado's subjects; that England, for example, would do well to distrust their propaganda in India, and France to look out lest they took possession of Indo-China.

Those who really understand Japan, her history, her needs, and the just aspirations of her people, have never attached more importance to such fantastic utterances than they deserved. But the delightful realm of the Rising Sun is so far from us, and so few Europeans have been there, that sophistries about it were not always easy to refute. Except in England, where the great movement of forty-seven years ago, which was the signal of emancipation for the inhabitants of the Japanese Islands and of their entry into European civilization, started, anxious looks were directed toward the great power which menaced the very existence of China in 1897, and checked Russia a few years later.

Nevertheless, in 1900 Japan played a leading part in putting down the Boxer movement, fighting shoulder to shoulder with the armies of Europe. Without her help the legation staffs and the personnel of the Christian missions in Peking might all have perished. This alone should have sufficed to prove that Japan did not wish to isolate her cause from that of the Western nations, but stood ready to join those willing to fight for the ideals to which she owes the form of her institutions and the new direction given to her destinies.

Japan has just given further proof of this by taking the side of justice and the free peoples against barbarism and oppression; by undertaking to dislodge Germany from Chinese soil which the latter had wrongfully and forcibly annexed. The feat of arms of Tsing-tao adds new lustre to the military annals, already so long and brilliant, of the "Land of Valor," whose acts are now beyond count.

The Germans, as was to be expected, received with indignant outcries the telegram announcing their expulsion from the Shantung Peninsula. They heaped insults upon the Japanese, denounced their "treason," their "infamy," their "savagery," and they thought to bring their outrageous insults to a climax by calling those who had vanquished them "the people with the slanting eyes." Tokio must surely have been amused, for in Japan jokes are by no means disliked, and the fantastic humor of a nation that is essentially artistic is easily pleased at the expense of heavy and clumsy pedantry.

The "people with the slanting eyes," as Japan is disdainfully dubbed in the land of the "square heads," is the same people which, in less than fifty years, has passed from feudalism to democracy, from the most backward institutions to the most modern legislation, from an army and navy in embryo to military and naval organization on a par with those of the greatest Western nations. If this nation has destroyed in the Far East something which the President of the Reichstag calls "a point of support for German Kultur," it has at the same time avenged a most cynical act, directed sixteen years ago against the rights and independence of China. Japan deserves well of the cause which the Governments of the Allies are upholding with her.

Is Japan to confine herself to this just act of reparation in the present great conflict? I am of those who believe that she could bring to us on the European continent help of incomparable value; and I am convinced that the Japanese Government would ask nothing better than to respond to the call of the Triple Entente if her help is asked for further battles.

All the newspapers comment on recent articles by Colonel Repington and Colonel Feyler, the first the military correspondent of The London Times, the latter editor of Le Journal, of Paris, and of the Journal de Genève, concerning the military resources which Germany can array against the Allies.

The number of men said to be still available corresponds more or less to that which the Berlin papers stated about two months ago. "It would be imprudent to reckon it lower than 4,000,000 men," says Colonel Repington. It goes without saying that this is a maximum, dependent on a whole series of conditions hardly likely to occur—equipment, ammunition, feeding, training, &c. But it would be dangerous and criminal for us not to take steps without delay for offsetting the possible addition to the forces in the field of this considerable reinforcement.

We must not deceive ourselves. Germany will fight to her last man and her last cent to escape the fate to which she must succumb. She will surrender only when absolutely forced to it. The enormous losses already suffered by her have weakened her greatly, she has been taken aback by the frustration of her strategic plans, the repeated checks to her offensive have impaired her strength in a military sense, but she is far from beaten. Her Landwehr and Landsturm troops cannot be compared with those pitted against us at the beginning of the war, and the 4,000,000 men constituting the maximum that she could place on the Russian and western fronts are wholly without military experience and qualities, unorganized, without rifles, artillery, ammunition. But, as Colonel Repington says, all the metal factories of Germany are working night and day making arms and projectiles, and every act of the Government is directed toward forming and utilizing new recruits for the early Spring. It is for then that our enemies are planning their most violent effort, the final and decisive effort against our armies.

It is to be noted that their efforts are always decisive, yet decide nothing. Their marches on Paris, Warsaw, and Calais were decisive, yet fruitless. Therefore, one must not be needlessly alarmed at their threats. But between not being alarmed at them and not taking them into account there is a big difference.

Nobody now doubts, I think, that the war will be a long one. To let the nation and armies believe that it will soon be over would be the height of imprudence. Patience must be our first virtue now, as it has been in the past; above all else we must not tire of a resistance which, up to the present at least, has been too successful to become tiresome.

We must, however, at once and without respite, work toward securing to ourselves every possible help, not only from our allies of today, but from those of the future. In order to drive the enemy from our territory by means of the siege warfare now being waged we need more than the heroic bravery and resisting power of our soldiers; we need many, many men, with powerful artillery and plentiful arms and ammunition.

For this reason I have asked and shall continue to ask for Japanese intervention. The tactical value of our commanders is not in question; that is universally conceded. But the victories which we have undoubtedly won, as well as those which we shall undoubtedly win, cannot have their full effect and deliver us from Prussian occupation unless they are followed up by troops so strong in numbers as to be irresistible. That, too, is the only way of cutting short the duration of the war and sparing us from sacrifices which will exhaust us for many years.

"Nonsense!" some will cry. "Is France, with her military past, her glorious history, the universal renown of her arms, to call upon a nation of the Far East to finish up the Germans? Is she not strong enough to do it with her own forces and those of her European allies? Such an appeal would be unworthy of her national energy, of her resources, of the heroism of her soldiers!"

Such reasoning would lead us far afield. It would make us ask ourselves why we are not fighting alone against the German troops; why we are allied with the Russians, English, Belgians, and Serbians; why we have in our armies Senegalese, Soudanese, Moroccans, Tunisians, Algerians, and Hindoos; why we do not do our utmost to make the war a Franco-German duel.

We would also ask ourselves of what use is diplomacy—whether it would not be better to do away with it, seeing that its purpose is to make political and military alliances, and to strengthen one nation by armed union and fraternity with foreign nations. Nothing is more futile or puerile than the idea that, in a battle for existence, the help of a great nation must be refused as something useless, as a sort of insult to national dignity.

Yes, we have a glorious military past; in fact, it is far more glorious than that of the Germans. The Great Elector and the Great Emperor William I., incessantly glorified by William II., are no fit rivals for Henry IV. and Napoleon, to cite only two examples. Our defeat in 1871, which the Kaiser celebrates on every possible occasion, is insignificant compared to the disasters of Prussia in the first half of the Napoleonic period. The Germans were in Paris for a few hours forty-four years ago, but we occupied Berlin and other Prussian cities for years after the battle of Jena. "There is no longer a Prussian army," said Queen Louise, great-grandmother of William II. Our Generals governed the conquered cities while the King withdrew as far as Königsberg.

But we must acknowledge that times have changed since then. We are confronted by an enemy who has been preparing to fight us without a moment's cessation since the days which I have just recalled. First, he prepared up to 1870; since then he has kept on. All his vigor, all his acts, have had war as their goal. All Germany's resources have been directed against us.

In France, on the other hand, people were unwilling to think of war. They let themselves be deluded by pacifist ideas, they neglected all warnings, they chattered, in foreign capitals, of chimerical rapprochements with representatives of a nation resolved to subjugate or to crush us.

To that nation's ever-increasing army was added her increase in population, which rose in proportion as ours decreased. So true was this that, had we faced her alone when she declared war on us, her numerical superiority and degree of preparedness would unquestionably have placed us in the most serious peril.

Fortunately, this did not come about. We and our allies were able to hold in check the armies that invaded our territory, to inflict reverses on them that destroyed their plan of campaign, to occasion losses which broke their offensive, and to make inevitable their expulsion from our soil as a preliminary to their decisive defeat.

But it is none the less true that they are still strongly intrenched on a portion of our territory. Northern France is still partly occupied, governed and ruined by them. We are winning back the ground

(480 miles away,) and ordered to proceed to Singapore as rapidly as possible. The French cruiser Montcalm, which had left Singapore the previous day, was recalled. A Japanese cruiser patrolling the coasts of Java was also instructed to head for Singapore at full speed. These ships arrived during the afternoon of the 16th, their marines were landed, and the crisis was past.

The mutineers were now considerably outnumbered and many of them were beginning to feel the effects of the awful struggle—on empty stomachs. As a result resistance weakened perceptibly during the night of the 16th, and by noon of the 17th all serious resistance had ceased. Many mutineers surrendered during the next few days.

Those that remained at large either spent their time in trying to escape across to the mainland, (where they were met by the forces of the Sultan of Johore,) or carrying on a guerrilla type of warfare in the less thickly populated portions of the island.

By the 19th the authorities had the situation well in hand, although over 600 men were still unaccounted for. The safe area was now considerably extended and an efficient system of patrolling created. The armed civilians were now relieved and replaced by regular troops, and that portion of the city including the business and a small part of the residential section was declared habitable.

On Sunday, the 21st, the Shropshire Light Infantry (territorials) arrived from Rangoon. With its advent the situation resolved itself into merely tracking down the mutineers group by group, man by man, and this work, with the aid of native trackers, proceeded very satisfactorily.

Perhaps no better idea of how affairs stood could be obtained than that published by The Straits Times on Feb. 22—the first publication of this paper, by the way, since the outbreak:

> All goes well in Singapore. Trouble which might have assumed very, very grave aspects was checked with surprising rapidity, and now that we have a British regiment and other resources at our disposal, a feeling of confidence has been restored. The situation now existing is simply that a number of the men of the Fifth Native Light Infantry are still at large, and, until they are accounted for, it is not considered safe to let Europeans occupy their residences. Passed by the censor.

From that time up to the present this policy of tracking down small parties has continued. On Feb. 27 only 147 mutineers remained at large. By the 1st of March this number had been reduced to 113, and by the 7th of March to 51. Of the latter number it is evident that a large proportion are in hiding, disguised, or have made good their escape.

Of the interned Germans (approximately 250) only thirty-five made use of their opportunity to escape. Ten of these have since been recaptured. The remainder, including a Lieutenant, a boatswain, and five sailors of the Emden, are still free, and a reward of $1,000 per man has been offered for their apprehension. Unless they succeed in reaching the coast of Sumatra—Dutch territory—it is only a question of time before they will be back in their quarters in Singapore.

And now let us consider what the results of this affair have been or are likely to be. In the first place a spirit of uncertainty and fear has been aroused in the minds of the residents of Singapore which is almost sure to outlast the war.

Every one realizes that had the trouble started at midnight, as scheduled, instead of at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, a general slaughter would have ensued. To every one has been brought home the danger of a similar occurrence on a large scale taking place in India. Singapore is out of the zone of real Mohammedan agitation; the general atmosphere of the place is peaceful; the bazaars are comparatively free from rumors of a dangerous nature; it is a station which has always been well liked by all regiments stationed there.

If this mutiny was possible under such conditions and at a place at which naval reinforcements were rapidly available, what might happen at some of the interior stations in India? Conditions there at present are far from tranquil. What may we expect in the future?

In closing, perhaps it would be fitting to relate the part taken in the recent disturbances by certain of the American inhabitants of Singapore. The most interesting case is undoubtedly that of the American missionaries.

These men of God were holding a peace conference in celebration of the 100 years peace following the Treaty of Ghent the afternoon the mutiny broke out. Suddenly news of the trouble reached the meeting. Without a word or prayer, I hear, every man reported himself at headquarters, obtained a rifle and ammunition, and started for the firing line, where they stayed forty-eight hours. Their action has been the talk of the place ever since, and I can safely say that hereafter an American missionary will be considered a welcome addition to any British colony in this portion of the world. I do not think I could truthfully have said this heretofore.

Another striking example is the case of Mr. Easeley of the Goodrich Rubber Company. Reporting himself for action with his Winchester in his hand and in a typically cowboy regalia—probably calculated to frighten any native soldier who might be encountered—he was sent to the scene of operations and has been there ever since. I believe he is now one of the men assigned to the search parties which are tracking down the few remaining mutineers.

AMERICA'S PART IN WORLD PEACE

Former Minister to Turkey and Member of Hague Court of Arbitration, Oscar S. Straus, Tells What We Might Do.

By Oscar S. Straus.

ANY discussion of America's possible contribution to the world's peace must at this time, in the nature of things, be purely speculative and hypothetical. Whether this war will end by the decided victory of the one side or the other, or whether it will be prolonged to a state of exhaustion, or whether, before such a state is reached and in recognition of the probability that such will be the result, the warring nations may come together by their representatives in conference to arrange for the conclusion of the war and for plans to secure by negotiation what they may have failed to secure at the cannon's mouth—these are questions surrounded with so much uncertainty at the present time that no one is justified in forming a definite conclusion.

President Wilson and his Administration, animated by the high and noble desire to conserve the moral influence of our country as a mediator and peacemaker, have made, and are making, every effort to maintain not only a strict attitude of neutrality, but also a spirit of impartiality on the part of our people. To quote the President's words from his recent address to the members of The Associated Press:

> Let us think of America before we think of Europe, in order that America may be fit to be Europe's friend when the day of tested friendship comes. The test of friendship is not now sympathy with the one side or the other, but getting ready to help both sides when the struggle is over.

And yet with all this effort on the part of our Government, which has been consistently urged by the President and followed since the beginning of the war and sometimes in the face of severe provocation, our Government's attitude has been misinterpreted, as is evidenced by the press not only in Germany but likewise in Great Britain and in the other belligerent countries.

This misinterpretation, fault finding, and even reproof has been officially expressed in a statement authoritatively given out a short time ago by the German Ambassador, protesting against our not observing our neutral obligations. Utterances in some of the leading British papers would indicate that our attitude of neutrality likewise does not satisfy public opinion in that country.

I refer to these facts because the attitude and the disposition toward us of the belligerent nations will have a direct bearing upon what contribution we may be invited or permitted to make in aiding in the establishment of peace among the warring nations and in the development of plans for securing the permanent peace of the world.

There is yet another important consideration which we will have to determine for ourselves before it will be possible for us to have a part or take a part in devising plans for the peace of the world. The American traditional policy has been expressed in two important State papers, in Washington's Farewell Address, and in President Monroe's message to Congress, which State papers have a prestige and authority second only to the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States.

Washington, in his Farewell Address, stated that Europe had "a set of primary interests which to us have none, or very remote relations." His thought was that it was the course of wisdom so far as possible to disassociate American from the ordinary vicissitudes of European politics.

Monroe, in his message, amplified the Washington policy as the changed circumstances and the immediate necessities demanded, by reminding the powers of the Holy Alliance of our policy in regard to European nations, that we would not interfere in their internal concerns, and that we would not regard their interference in the affairs of the Government of the States on the American Continent with indifference. This American policy in its double form was annexed to the signatures of the American delegates to The Hague Convention, and was spread on the minutes of the conference, and as such recognized by the nations of the world.

The question, therefore, naturally arises: Has America the right to demand participation in the conferences of the belligerent nations following the present war for the purposes of arranging for the future peace of the world? Another question presents itself: Even if we should not have the right, and in the event that we should be invited by the belligerent nations as the leading neutral power to participate in such a conference, can we do so without impliedly, if not expressly, relinquishing our traditional attitude of exclusive control over purely American questions?

This contingency will bring to the foreground the consideration, if not the wisdom, of a further extension, if not a reversing, of the American traditional policy as outlined by Washington when he said:

> The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is in extending our commercial relations to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

The question that would present itself—have not the world relations and the interdependent interests of nations since Washington's admonition was given, become so closely and intimately related that our duty to other nations as well as our own "enlightened self-interests" makes it imperative upon us not to "stop," but to unite with the nations of the world in such a policy, be it by international agreement, by entering into a league with the leading nations of the world, or by becoming a member of a world federation, or by uniting in such a joint arrangement, as in the wisdom of nations may be determined upon as the most practical and effective for the establishment and maintenance of the peace of the world?

From generation to generation we have been making radical changes in our internal policies, notably in the direction of the enlargement of the powers of the Central Government. The interstate commerce laws and the Federal Reserve act are themselves distinct evidences of those changes. A nation cannot remain stationary any more in its national than in its international relationship and policy. "New occasions teach new duties."

It is not improbable that the outgrowth of this war will affect the future policies not only of the belligerent nations but of neutral nations as well. Norman Angell says that if we do not mix in European affairs, Europe will mix in our affairs, and that the day of isolation for us, whether we like it or not, is over. He may be right.

It is much easier for a country when it is small in population and in interests to remain aloof than when it became one of the great powers of the world. Our country, with its population of a hundred million and its expanded world commerce, is too large a factor to stand aloof from world questions. In the event of a league or confederation of the leading nations, for us to separate ourselves by refusing to assume our share of responsibility might conflict with our national interests and our international duties, and have the result of placing ourselves in opposition to the world policies of the new world State. In such an event, would it not be better for such a world State as well as for ourselves to form an important part of it and help to shape its policies as one of the important constituent members than to conserve our traditional policies and stand aloof?

These are questions that not unlikely—I might say, very probably—will present themselves to the American Government at the outcome of the present war or even before, in contributing its mediatory offices in bringing the war to a conclusion.

Our country has as deep a concern, not only morally but economically and industrially, in the peace of the world as any one of the larger nations. A war such as this, or upon such a considerable scale, affects under the changed economic and commercial conditions and relationships of modern times the neutral nations only to a lesser degree than the nations actually at war. And, therefore, have we not the right and is it not our duty to cooperate to the fullest of our power in the perfection and the maintenance of a plan for the preservation of peace?

It is to be hoped that the extreme suffering and sacrifice that this war entails may have the compensation of developing supreme wisdom on the part of the nations. The nations of the world, to be at peace, must develop a broader patriotism as distinguished from a national jingoism, a more enlightened sense of justice which does not preach one gospel on one side of a national border and a different or opposite gospel on the other side.

In other words, so long as the standards of national justice and international justice are not in consonance, but on different levels, and in many respects directly opposed to one another, the security for peace must largely depend upon the doctrine of might. Until the international conscience is brought under the majesty of the law there can be no permanent security for international peace.

Perhaps the most guiding and impressive contribution that America can make to the world's peace is the successful experiment and example of its federated union of forty-eight separate Commonwealths, which affords to the world a striking illustration that its preservation is due to the fact that behind the right of each one of these Commonwealths, the smallest as well as the largest, stands the united might of all.

This greatest of all wars, involving directly nearly two-thirds of the population of the world, is a glaring and ghastly evidence that international relationship has to be reconstructed, that the plans heretofore devised of nations standing alone or separating themselves into two or three great divisions under dual or triple alliances and ententes has lamentably broken down, and instead of lessening the area and the horrors of war have had the opposite result and drawn nations into war that otherwise would have remained at peace.

Therefore, the federation or league of all the States in the American Union embodies the ideal, if not the plan, for a universal league or federation of the nations as the surest and safest guarantee for securing the permanent peace of the world.

GEN. CARTER SAYS U. S. SHOULD ARM

Believes Time Has Come to Put Nation on Safe Footing in Event of War--Outline of Plan for Federal Volunteers.

MAJOR GENERAL WILLIAM HARDING CARTER, U. S. A., at present commander of the forces in Hawaii, believes that the time has come for adoption of a definite military policy by the Federal Government and that there is "urgent need of nationalizing and organizing our military resources while there is no war cloud on the horizon."

He sets out his views in a book, "The American Army," just published by the Bobbs-Merrill Company of Indianapolis and New York. General Carter declares in beginning that nations "unable or unwilling to defend their rights" are accorded scant respect by the other members of the family of nations. "Helpless peoples," he adds, "rankling with injustice, may hold rebellious hearts, but the price of liberty still remains in strong battalions." He professes a deep respect for the altruistic views of those who have given their time and money to the furtherance of the world-peace movement, but his book shows that he is not at all optimistic as to the outcome. He writes:

A well balanced distribution of the influence of nations will, in the future, as in the past, depend upon the ability of each to guard its own interests. It is folly for one nation to expect favors from another. Nations play unceasingly at diplomacy, but grim-visaged war lurks ever in the background.

General Carter points out that no great nation has ever been able to establish and maintain a permanent form of government without an armed power to sustain it. Discussing the position of the United States, he writes:

It should require no argument to prove that in the emergency of war we would need for our first line not less than 500,000 men at once. The present force of regulars at many isolated stations within the United States, together with the estimated available organized militia, scattered through forty-eight States, would not aggregate in excess of one-fourth the requirement of the first call—mobilization is hardly the term to use regarding forces which have none of the larger tactical organizations complete in peace. There would result an immediate necessity for a call for untrained volunteers.

It seems very certain that we may count always upon less than 100,000 men of the forty-eight States being available as organized militia, with a limited field of action. If this force, which, to be available for war, must volunteer as individuals after war has been declared, is to constitute our main reliance, then some steps must be taken to increase it many fold. It would seem that as practical people Americans would no longer trifle with so grave a situation, but seek a remedy without delay.

It is clearly a national duty to provide for the contingencies of war before the occasion for the use of armies shall arise. The most serious questions of military policy now before the country for solution have arisen as the results of legislation having for its object the precedence of the organized militia over national or Federal volunteers. None of the schemes proposed by the representatives of the National Guard has admitted of allowing the President to exercise control over the State organizations during peace, and so much of the militia legislation of 1903 as did authorise the President to give orders in emergencies direct to commanding officers of the organized militia instead of calling upon the Governors of States was quickly withdrawn by a repeal of the statute.

There will be some convictions as to State rights hard to overcome, but our past experiences and the interests which have been acquired beyond our territorial limits demand that the military resources of the United States shall be nationalized, and that the impropriety and extravagance of waging war as an aggregation of forty-eight States should be recognised by appropriate legislation.

General Carter refers to the report of the late General Upton, who recommended that the military system of the United States should be made up of the regular army, Federal volunteers, and militia. General Upton's recommendations were indorsed by President Roosevelt and President Taft. General Carter writes:

The Federal volunteers are intended to be a force to be called upon only when a war exists which requires a reinforcement for the regular army, and to be composed of men not restricted as are the militia in their sphere of action. Such a force of Federal volunteers should be liable to serve for three years of the war, and be comprised entirely of men whose home ties would permit of that length of absence without embarrassment.

One primary and important reason for having the question of a Federal volunteer system settled without delay lies in its intimate connection with the proper organization of the regular army. It needs no argument to carry the conviction that the organized militia of the States will never comprise a proper proportion of the special arms, but will in future, as in the past, consist mainly of infantry.

The expense of maintenance of proper proportions of cavalry and field artillery is too great to be assumed by any State unless all the States shall agree to provide for their proportionate share. The work demanded of cavalry and field artillery in the regular army, to reach and maintain a recognized and proper standard of efficiency, makes it certain that militia organizations of those special arms cannot be made efficient for immediate war purposes in the limited time available for instruction. For these reasons, the organization of the regular army can never be based upon its use as a complete field army, for it must always comprise an undue proportion of cavalry, field artillery, and special branches to balance the infantry of the citizen soldiery, whether Federal volunteers, organized militia, or volunteers enlisted during war.

The legitimate conclusions are that the military policy of this nation should embrace as cardinal features of organization, first, the regular army; second, Federal volunteers; third, the organized militia, or National Guard. So long as the term National Guard is used for State militia, it will avoid confusion to use the designation Federal instead of national for the volunteers.

Under the policy herein suggested the military establishment of the National Government would comprise in peace the regular army and the Federal volunteers. The active State forces would comprise the organized militia, or National Guard. The Federal volunteers are intended to be organized in each Congressional district and to be proportioned among the several branches of the service as may be required by the war establishment, in connection with the regulars. Under this policy, the strength and character of the Federal volunteer organizations may be modified from time to time, without disturbance of the principles involved.

The proportions of the several branches of the regular army being fixed by statutes, the character of Federal volunteer organizations may then be determined by the probable needs of the combined forces and their distribution made with due regard to local conditions. Cavalry, for instance, may be more readily recruited and maintained in horse-raising districts than in more thickly populated agricultural sections or cities. Similarly with field artillery organization, some localities will be more favorable than others.

Under this scheme the General Government will be entirely responsible for the support of the regular army and the Federal volunteers, and the several States responsible for the maintenance of their militia, the National Government continuing to furnish necessary arms and equipments. The character of the organized militia, however, should be wholly changed so that there may be no cause for misunderstanding. The officers and men physically fit for and desirous of being a part of the war army should enter the Federal volunteers; the militia should be recruited and maintained primarily for State purposes and subject to call by the National Government solely as provided by the Constitution. In any war of magnitude our coasts would be threatened, and in order that the regular army and Federal volunteers may be available at all times for service as a mobile force beyond our borders, the organised militia may well constitute the main reliance for land defense of the seacoast fortifications.

Under such an arrangement of our military establishment the organized militia would gradually be recruited with men to whom the changed conditions of probable service would be acceptable, and those who have heretofore attached themselves to the State organizations with expectation of unrestricted active field service would be induced to enter the Federal volunteers, where there would be no doubt as to their status in event of war.

The inauguration of this policy would be in line with the best military judgment of the past century. It conforms to the Constitution without evasion or subterfuge. It contemplates a minimum peace establishment of regulars with a dependable support of trained Federal volunteers, and a constitutional employment of the organized militia, and should commend itself to patriotic Americans who desire a military establishment proportioned to possible contingencies, maintained without necessity for either amending or evading the Constitution.

Our course for some years has been misleading and improper, and a reconsideration and revision of practice as well as of law are demanded by the highest considerations of wisdom, public policy, and statesmanship. The time for accomplishment of national military purposes has arrived, but there may be differing opinions as to the fundamental objects and means of attaining them. These problems regarded as in greatest need of immediate and definite determination involve the employment of the national and State forces in their appropriate spheres.

Unquestionably the best interests of the nation demand that the army of the United States shall consist of the regular army and the Federal volunteers, maintained both in peace and war. The batteries, troops, companies, battalions, and regiments of Federal volunteers should be organized in Congressional districts and in such numbers as may be proportionally and equitably allotted by the President, the total force not to exceed the strength authorized by Congress, and the officers of such organizations to be appointed by the President. The organization and discipline of the Federal volunteers should be provided for in regulations approved by the Secretary of War, under an enabling act of Congress. All laws providing for the use of the militia in conflict with the Constitution, as interpreted by the Attorney General of the United States, should be formally repealed and no further attempts made to provide for the use of the National Guard and organized militia for general war purposes. It should be clearly understood that those who desire to serve in war without regard to State or national borders must attach themselves to the Federal volunteers.

The effect of this system, besides providing a Federal force of potential war power, would be to relieve the States of the unequal taxation now involved through maintenance of miniature armies by some States while others go to the opposite extreme. Much of the militia duty in States could very properly be performed by constabulary, as is now done in Pennsylvania, and leave the National Guard to its proper employment—that of preparation to suppress insurrection and grave disorder and to resist invasion.

The establishment of a body of Federal volunteers is a practicable military scheme and its full development will create a war asset of recognized and permanent value. The ultimate saving in pensions alone would, in a great war, meet all the expenses incurred for its maintenance in peace. As trained men pass out of the Federal volunteers they would remain in their own communities available to aid in organizing and drilling subsequent increments of volunteers, when called forth to war. The dictates of expediency, common sense, and economy all combine to suggest the desirability of such a plan to meet the crisis brought on through the inability of the President to call upon the Governors for their militia for service beyond our borders.

The territorial distribution of Federal volunteers should embrace every Congressional district wherein should be established the local depots for receiving and training the recruits required in war to maintain the organizations in the field at maximum strength.

No danger to the liberties of the people lies in this scheme—on the contrary, it contains the only fair distribution of the debt of personal service in the hour of the country's need. Being a Federal force, the expense incident to the organization and maintenance of proper arms, equipments, and supplies to be in readiness for active service will of necessity be borne by the General Government.

At the present time there are 435 members of Congress, apportioned on a basis of 212,407 of population, and, while the population in each district is not exactly the same, for the practical purposes of apportioning Federal volunteers, they may be so regarded. Infantry constitutes the basic foundation of all armies, and we should begin by establishing one regiment of Federal volunteer infantry in each Congressional district. With this force as a foundation, authority should be granted to the President to add other organizations, line and staff, of the types and character of those maintained in the regular army, the whole to constitute a force so proportioned as to be capable of mobilization as brigades, divisions, and corps or field armies.

All enlistment contracts in the Federal volunteers should be for two years, with privilege of re-enlistment, and an express provision that in event of mobilization for active service all enlistments shall be automatically extended for three years, or the period of the war if terminated in less than three years.

The proposed army of regulars and Federal volunteers will cost more than the existing force of regulars and organized militia, but the one will be an asset of highest potential value and probably equal to any emergency likely to arrive without warning, while the other is unequal to the smallest military contingency within the forecast of statesmen and students.

The system of Federal volunteers has encountered active opposition from the higher officers of the National Guard, and this may always be expected. Until public opinion on the subject of national defense becomes more masterful than this narrow but concentrated opposition, no change may be expected. In so grave a matter Congress is entitled to the generous approval of a non-partisan public opinion, because the policy will call for continuing appropriations to be balanced, however, later on by that preparedness for war which makes for lessened obligations for pensions and claims in the years to come.

wrested by them from us only foot by foot. All our fights usually result in larger losses to them, but the fact remains that every day we are losing excellent Frenchmen.

There can be no doubt that the arrival of strong reinforcements, powerfully armed, of tried worth and irresistible training, would allow us to storm positions which we now can retake only slowly and at heavy cost. Such reinforcements are to be supplied to us by our English allies. But when? While waiting, what is to prevent our securing Japanese intervention in some form?

I have mentioned the military reasons for utilizing Japanese intervention to such an extent as to make possible decisive blows against the Austro-Turkish-German armies. Is it necessary to add that, if Japanese forces had co-operated, during the last four months and a half, in other places besides the waters of China and Oceanica, many regrettable things would have been avoided?

Since the Mikado had declared war on Germany and was fighting her on the Chinese coast and the Pacific Islands, why was advantage not taken earlier of his powerful fleet for preventing the raids of German corsairs which caused such great damage to the shipping of the Allies? Why did not Japanese ships co-operate from the start with the squadrons pursuing the Emden, Scharnhorst, Gneisenau, Nürnberg, Dresden, Karlsruhe, Königsberg and the rest of the ships which were sinking English, French and Russian cruisers, gunboats, destroyers and passenger ships? It must be admitted that no great amount of negotiation would have been needed then to give to such naval aid a wider scope than the limited field to which the Japanese operations were confined.

The British Admiralty acknowledged through its most official mouthpiece—Mr. Winston Churchill—the full importance of the part played by the Japanese Navy in the pursuit of ships destroyed by the British fleet off the Falkland Islands. Is it too much to say that the victory of our allies would perhaps have come earlier if the alliance with Japan had been put to more advantageous use?

Let it be clearly understood that I am reproaching nobody. I have not the ridiculous idea that I know everything; I am not conversant with the inside diplomacy of today. I simply comment on established facts and draw therefrom conclusions which can scarcely be challenged.

What I say about the navy applies equally well to the land armies. If the goal set themselves by the nations which have been provoked and attacked by the Austro-Turkish-German forces is to be attained without delay, superior forces must be arrayed against them without delay, in order that this enemy who will not surrender until he is beaten to a finish may be harassed without pause. We must not hesitate, therefore, at any of the means which may legitimately be employed for making victory certain.

Japan would not be fighting for the advantage of this or that nation, if, in accordance with the noble language of her Emperor, she worked to assure the final triumph of the nations united against German militarism and corrupt barbarism of the Turks. No, Japan would fight for the rights of nations and the principles of civilization. It was that cause which the armies of the Mikado espoused in 1900, when they marched against Chinese barbarism, and I feel sure that they consider it an honor to continue along this path.

There can be no two opinions as to the value of the help which Japanese armies would bring to the Allies. This help would be decisive. Nobody doubts it. Our enemies know it quite as well as France, England and Russia. All that is needed is to decide upon the form in which we could avail ourselves of this help.

It is no longer a matter of public opinion, but of diplomacy. I am perfectly sure that I voice the real sentiments of the French—expressed almost unanimously in the press—when I ask that active negotiations be undertaken for the purpose of bringing about the collaboration of Japanese armies with the English, French, Russian, Belgian and Serbian armies. I am not so sure that there exists, in quarters on which depends the successful outcome of such negotiations, a sufficient realization of the urgent need of complete, immediate and resolute unity of opinion regarding the arrangement that should be made with the Mikado's Government.

It will not be necessary that Japan be paramount in the affairs of China. For years she has kept her place and measured her acts as an ally of the great Western nations. For thirteen years she has been England's ally. In 1900, I repeat, she had the prineipal rôle in the rescue of the Peking Legations. Since 1907 she has had treaties with France and Russia. Last August she declared war on Germany, and, not content with driving the Germans from the Shantung Peninsula, she took from them the Marshall, Caroline and Marianne Islands, pursued her Pacific squadron, and contributed to the destruction of ships which had caused serious losses to the British Navy. Her course in all these events, which were less Asiatic than European, has been governed by something more than a desire to assure for herself a dominant position in the Far East.

If the allied Governments really desire it, and pursue their desire firmly and in earnest, I am convinced that their alliance with the Empire of the Rising Sun, proclaimed recently by the Emperor Yoshihito in his speech from the throne, will be strengthened by new co-operation on the fields where the war's decisive struggles are to be fought.

England is the logical choice for spokesman, since she has the oldest and most far-reaching treaty with the Japanese Government. I think that the diplomats should draw up in London the terms of that agreement, which would give us another strong ally to add to those we already possess for finishing off our common enemy.

But, after all, it is a secondary matter whether Great Britain, Russia or France takes the initiative. The essential thing is that it be taken by joint action of the interested Governments, and that it be the work of diplomats thoroughly alive to all the advantages accruing from such an initiative.

One of the principal Russian newspapers, The Novoye Vremya, has just published some Port Arthur correspondence, including interviews with Japanese statesmen who express sentiments analogous to those expressed in France. The Russkoye Slovo, of Moscow, in a leader entitled "The Quadruple Alliance," predicts closely related military action by the Governments at Petrograd, London, Paris and Tokio. I know that this desire is in accordance with that of the leading political men of Russia. Why then hesitate from putting it into practice?

The famous telegram of William II. to the Mikado proved how important he would have considered the separation of Japan from the Powers with whom she is now fighting against Teutonic hegemony. He did not hesitate—he, the habitual denouncer of the Yellow Peril, he who said in 1905 at Wilhelmshaven that the Japanese would be a scourge of God like Attila and Napoleon!—to propose to the victors of Tsing-tao whatever peace they should adjudge satisfactory provided they sided with him. He brought upon himself the reply which this amazing step deserved. But it showed how anxious he is to prevent an extension of the alliance with Japan to fields where she could bring us such an increase in strength as to preclude further German resistance.

Negotiations for Japanese intervention, to be sure, must be conducted with as much caution as firmness. It concerns not only our interests, but those of our allies, interests which affect all international relations.

I admire those persons who, pretending to be well-informed, know beforehand what the reply of the Mikado's Government will be. To know it, one must first consult the Mikado's Government. Granted that M. Delcassé is undoubtedly concerning himself with these highly important negotiations and working for their successful result, it is none the less true that at the present writing (I am not trying to blame our Foreign Office) Japan has not yet been asked to make known officially her point of view and terms.

What is known officially (and, on this point, beyond question,) is that Japan would not demand any concession of territory as the price of her support. To have doubts on this point is to be ignorant of the very A, B, C, of Far Eastern affairs.

It is likewise known that the proposals Japan would make would be perfectly acceptable, and could not arouse serious objections in any quarter. I will go as far as to say that, contrary to the general belief, these proposals would be such as to calm those countries harboring fear that increased prestige of a powerful neighbor in the Pacific would make the latter more exacting in her expansion policy.

This is all that may be said as to the state of affairs. Beyond that it is the affair and secret of diplomats. It is their task to establish the entente between the three Governments which, before dealing with the Tokio Government, must agree on a common course of action.

Are there any difficulties in any quarter? Possibly. London, it has been said, is not enthusiastic over the extension to Europe of the Japanese Alliance—yet it was England who had the ability and foresight to recognize before anybody else the value of that alliance. Any arguments which may be brought to bear on the Foreign Office in order that the treaty with the Mikado may preserve its Far Eastern character must crumble in the face of a situation which, according to the current opinion in England, is jeopardizing the very existence of Great Britain.

It is necessary to make one of two choices: To abandon certain dreams and certain interests which are, after all, secondary, or to abandon the very necessities of life. This, I feel sure, will finally be realized in the United Kingdom. I take the liberty of believing (and this is no mere supposition) that this conviction has already firmly established itself in the minds of many Englishmen whose opinion in such matters is especially valuable.

The London Times a few days ago, apropos of the naval victory in the Atlantic, alluded to the "powerful aid" which the Japanese navy had given the British forces in sweeping German influence from the Pacific and Indian Oceans. We asked Japan for aid, it said, according to the terms of our treaty, and it responded to this people like a chivalrous and honorable nation; for this reason it considers its participation in this war as the inauguration of a new historical era for itself and an era of important changes in its relations with Western powers; by taking part with those fighting for the principles and traditions of European civilization, Japan has proved her aptitude and right to rank among the great powers of the world.

We speak exactly the same words. Coming from the great English paper, they are especially valuable. They prove that British public opinion is not opposed in principle to the idea which we are bringing forward.

This is a great point. Negotiations conducted by M. Paul Cambon with all the resources upon which he knows how to draw, and with the will to succeed, will convince the Government of King George. But not a moment must be lost. Every delay complicates the difficulties of the undertaking and may render the situation more serious. Germany's plans against England, which are far from being negligible, will have no chance of success if military action by Japan forestalls the German Admiralty.

The harmony between Russia and ourselves, of which proof has already appeared, must greatly facilitate the triple agreement needed. To sum up, it is a question which interests all three allies equally, since they are sacrificing the best part of their wealth and blood.

Should the idea exist here and there that it will be sufficient to prolong the war, since the Triple Entente's victory is certain on account of the exhaustion of the enemy's resources (as is indeed the case) this idea must be combated to the utmost, for it is most dangerous and may have deplorable consequences. How about the ruins along the path of the German armies, the atrocities committed by the officers and soldiers of the two Emperors, the heaps of bodies on the fields of Belgium, France and Poland, the abominable catastrophes that are desolating Europe and from which it will take her so many years to recover? How about the sacrifices still before us, were the carnage to continue despite the fact that we might shorten it greatly by making a new alliance to coincide with the entry of one or two more European nations into the fray?

That is the way people in London should talk to each other—and they are doing it—that is the way people are talking in Paris. Japanese intervention is both practical and possible. I have never denied the obstacles in its path. I have simply maintained that they are not such as to be beyond the powers of diplomacy and of the means at our disposal. I maintain it once more.

I admit that the official participation of the yellow world in the solution of problems which for one hundred years have tormented Europe is somewhat of an event. The presence of Japanese envoys at the congress which will later on decide the questions brought up by the war is calculated to surprise the conservative and hidebound agents of Foreign Offices. But, so far as I am concerned, I shall be neither astonished nor troubled. In order to assure to us the possession of Alsace, Richelieu, who was so pitiless toward Protestants, asked aid of the heretics, Gustavus Adolphus and Bernard of Saxe-Weimar. In order to assure ourselves of a victory which will spare us bloody vicissitudes and protect the reconstructive forces of our land, we must not hesitate at summoning any kind of help.

I am sure that this is the opinion of the Government of the French Republic. By asking that Government to hasten to translate its opinion into action, I am convinced that I am not doing anything at variance with its sentiments and policy.

FROM HERE AND THERE

An Austrian in Russia.

THE New York representative of an Austrian manufacturing firm was talking to a party of friends, the war, as usual, being the subject of conversation.

"The Vienna firm I represent," he said, "is composed of a father and two sons, and is of sufficient importance to employ a thousand workmen and sell its goods all over the world, though it is not doing any business outside of Austria at present. One of the sons went to the war as a Captain.

"Not long ago I had a letter from the Captain by way of Vladivostok through American friends there. The young fellow told me that in a battle with the Russians his entire regiment had been caught in an ambush or an enfilading fire and every one of them, except thirty-six, had been killed. The thirty-six were captured, and he was one of them, but he had not escaped the deadly hail of bullets. One had struck him in the mouth and passed through his head, coming out back of his ear; a piece of shrapnel had struck him on the right side of the face, destroying the right eye, taking away most of his cheek and jaw, cutting off the right ear and destroying the hearing; another piece had gone through the upper part of his chest and the adjoining shoulder, and a bullet had pierced his thigh.

"That would seem to be almost enough reason for a man to die on the field of battle, but the Captain did not. Instead he was able in some fashion to walk, and the Russians made him walk six miles to a railroad station, with other prisoners. The medical treatment he received was hardly worth mentioning, though, evidently, it was enough to keep him together.

"At the railroad he was loaded into a rough car, and for twenty-two days he was on his way to some point or other where, after a day or two, he was loaded up again in the same kind of transportation and given a trip of thirty-three days. At the end of this journey he was landed in a hospital at Vladivostok, thousands of miles from where he started, and suffering torturew all the way. Still, he did not quit living, and when he wrote me he was able to get out and move around.

"He said the prisoners were practically at liberty about the town, but that really did not mean much, because it was so cold that they were around very little during the day, and if a man tried to get away and remained out all night he was certain to freeze. He had not been able to tell any of his story to his people at home and had managed to get a letter to me through the American Consul.

"I have written to his people, but I hadn't the heart to tell them all his awful story, and for that reason I did not forward his letter as I had received it. I am now making an effort through the State Department at Washington to have him released, or something done to better his condition, though he does not complain at all as one might suppose he would."

An Huge Map of New York.

A MAP of Greater New York, 25½ feet long and 25 feet wide, has recently been completed. The scale is 1 inch to 600 feet, the area mapped being nearly 1,200 square miles. Because Staten Island extends so far to the southwest a large piece of New Jersey and many square miles of water have been included.

A reproduction of the map is being made on the scale of 1 inch to 1,000 feet, while another, on the scale of 1 inch to 2,000 feet, is, according to the plans, to be sent to the San Francisco Exposition.

Three years ago Nelson P. Lewis, Chief Engineer of the Board of Estimate, undertook the task of having the new map made. He has gathered his material from the Borough Presidents, who have charge of the topographical records of their districts; from the Department of Docks and Ferries, and from the Street Cleaning Department. He obtained assistance from the States of New York and New Jersey, and from the United States Government. The railroad companies helped him with information as to stations, routes, and so forth.

Three Characteristic Pictures of John Bunny.

PANTOMIME REVIVED BY JOHN BUNNY

Art of Silent Comedy, After a Lapse of Centuries, Appears in Moving Pictures of Famous Actor Who Died Last Week.

By Joyce Kilmer.

THERE was a clown named Joseph Grimaldi. And when his agile limbs and mobile features were stilled by death there lingered in the minds of the thousands who had laughed at him in Sadler's Wells and Covent Garden only the memory of their mirth.

There was a clown named John Bunny. Last week he died. But we still may see, and our children's children may see, the gestures and grimaces that made him a welcome visitor in every quarter of the globe. For by grace of the motion-picture camera, John Bunny's art endures.

It is art, this power of conveying ideas without the use of words, of exciting laughter by actually being, instead of saying, a joke. It is the difficult and venerable art of the clown, the art of the shaven-headed mime in variegated robes whose antics drove care from Caesar's furrowed brow, the art of Garrick's harlequin friend, John Rich, and of the mirth-compelling Pinkethman, whose "frolic gestures" won the praise of Alexander Pope.

Of course, John Bunny could play in speaking parts. Before he found his real vocation, before the motion pictures claimed him as their great comedian, he trod the boards of the "legitimate" stage, and with no small success. He ran the theatrical gamut from minstrelsy to Shakespeare. Annie Russell, Maude Adams, Weber and Fields—these are a few of the stars whose radiance he augmented during the first twenty-five years of his professional life. But today the regular drama offers little opportunity to the true clown, and it was not until he appeared on the screen that John Bunny reached his own public—that is, the world.

The word clown has fallen of late years into unmerited disrepute. Impressionistic critics of the drama attempt to disparage a comedian by calling him a "mere clown." They might as well call Mr. Sargent a "mere painter," or M. Rodin a "mere sculptor." What they mean is that the comedian of their discontent is not a clown at all. For the grotesquely clad men, with whitened, expressionless faces, who tumble about the circus ring, have no right to the exclusive possession of their title. Indeed, few of them are genuine clowns in the best sense of the word, for most of them cause laughter by obvious horseplay, not by the true clown methods of elaborate pantomime and striking facial contortions.

The greatest comedians have been the greatest clowns. Even the most brilliant lines, spoken most winningly, fail of their effect upon the audience unless the speaker has a clown's power to act with his features. And if a clown be great enough he may safely dispense with words—as John Bunny did.

The English pantomime, even in Thackeray's day, had fallen from its once high place. The lovely Columbine remained and the sprightly Harlequin and the grotesque Pantaloon. But there were songs and dialogue, the entertainment was simply a sort of vaudeville, not genuine pantomime at all. It was not until the huge, clicking camera made lasting the gestures of the actors that the art of pantomime came back to its own.

There is a word used by men and women who have to do with this great branch of the world's amusement which deserves immortality. It is the verb "register." An actor registers grief, or amusement, or astonishment. That is, he assumes an expression which, when recorded by the camera and exhibited, will convey his emotion to the audience. In that one word there is a valuable treatise on the dramatic art. The inferior actor is content with expressing an emotion. The true actor registers it.

And what a sense of permanence is in that word "register!" Alfred de Musset and many another sentimental poet lamented the ephemeral nature of the actor's fame. The painter, it has been said, the writer and the sculptor, live in their works. But the actor's art perishes with him; when he dies, the memory of his expressive face and graceful form goes into the oblivion that keeps the echoes of his golden voice.

John Bunny Gay and Grave.

Well, we have changed all that. The number of people who lose their cares under the spell of John Bunny's magic today is greater than it was a year ago. The motion pictures have made the actor's chances for immortality equal with those of his fellows in the other arts.

Enemies of the motion picture (there really are such people) say that the humor of such entertainments is not true humor, but vulgar and barbarous horseplay, requiring no art. Any one, they say, can get a laugh, as Charles Chaplin does, by being knocked down by an automobile or by being grossly fat like John Bunny.

The adequate answer to a critic who makes such statements as these is "Go out in the street and get knocked down by an automobile." This may be the remark which actors (and sensitive producers) commonly feel like making to dramatic critics, but in this case it should have no tinge of bitterness. Go out in the street and get knocked down by an automobile. See if the people laugh at you as they laugh at Chaplin. They will laugh at you only if you are artist enough to be knocked down humorously—as Chaplin is knocked down.

And, as to John Bunny's success being due to his fatness, that criticism is generally made by people who never saw "Autocrat of Flapjack Junction" or "Love's Old Dream," or by rival actors. It is true that your true clown always is quick to utilize his physical peculiarities as accessories to his acting. The jesters of Marie de Medici made fun of their own hunched backs or dwarfed forms. John Bunny had as good a right to turn his fatness into dramatic capital as Sarah Bernhardt has to do the same thing with her slenderness. It is a principle of subjective artistic expression—the same principle as that by which Heine made his little songs out of his great woes.

But the physical peculiarity alone is not enough. John Bunny was gifted by nature for his rôles. But he would have been a great clown even had he been built like John Drew. He would have made his shapeliness what he made his unshapeliness—something ridiculously amusing.

If fatness alone was the source of his success, how crowded his profession would now be! But this is not the case. Thousands, perhaps, of motion-picture audiences have watched Mr. Taft serenely cross the screen, or mutely seem to make a speech. Undoubtedly, they have thereby been edified. But they have not rocked from side to side with unextinguishable laughter, and thereafter burst into shouts of mirth at the mention of the ex-President's name.

No, people did not laugh at John Bunny because he was fat, or because he fell from horses and automobiles and aeroplanes, and submitted to various picturesque forms of assault and battery for their amusement. They laughed at him because he was fat humorously, because he fell from vehicles humorously, because he was a great clown—that is, a master of a difficult and important branch of dramatic art.

The motion-picture producers may not be aware of the fact, but they have performed a valuable service to the stage in reviving the art of pantomime. The actor in the spoken drama will be less likely to be a mere voice when he sees his brother on the screen act with his whole body.

Is it possible that the importance of the human voice has been exaggerated? Certainly the mechanical reproduction of the spoken word has not captured the world's attention as has the reproduction of motion. The phonograph, of course, brings the lovely notes of the singers to ears that otherwise would never thrill with melody. It has been used as an instrument by which a political speaker might address at one time twenty audiences scattered across the continent, and it has delighted with humorous dialogue those who were far from theatres. But as an interpreter of great literature, the needle revolves impotently upon its waxen cylinder.

There have been successful attempts to synchronize the phonograph and the motion-picture machine, to cause the words to accompany the action. It may be that these devices will one day be widely popular. But I hope not. For that would destroy the greatest value of motion-picture acting, the silent but complete expression of thought. The motion picture is the renascence of pantomime.

When Colley Cibber looked through his jeweled quizzing glass at a strange dumb-show drama newly brought to England from merry France, a representation of the legend of Venus and Mars, he said that it was "form'd into a connected presentation of Dances in Character, wherein the Passions were so happily expressed, and the whole Story so intelligibly told, by a mute Narration of Gesture only, that even thinking Spectators allow'd it both a pleasing and rational Entertainment." It was this "pleasing and rational Entertainment" which developed into the great English pantomime, which popular custom (always fond of tradition and ritual) honored by association with the mighty festival of Christmas.

And the English pantomime's greater descendant is to be seen on many a modern film. Still the vivacious lover flees from the comic policemen and the irate father, still Columbine is fair, although she bears a less beautiful name and has changed her airy spangled draperies for a modern garb.

Why has no enterprising producer given us a real old English pantomime in the films, with all the conventional characters? What a Columbine Mary Pickford would make! and how excellently would Charles Chaplin's deft stumble suit Harlequin! There could be transformation scenes that would delight the genial ghosts of Lamb and Thackeray. But who would be clown—now that John Bunny is dead?

The written word sometimes loses its power to bring laughter as the years roll by. Topical allusions, phrases, and sentiments that amuse us will bring no mirth to the hearts of our grandchildren. But there are certain things that are elementally funny, that make all people laugh who have any laughter in their souls. And one of these things is the face of John Bunny.

HOPE FOR A HAY FEVER CURE

Injections of Pollen Extract Are Used Successfully to Immunize Several Patients and Modify the Symptoms in Others.

By Van Buren Thorne, M. D.

THE conquest of so-called "hay fever" has proved to be one of the most baffling of medical problems. Despite the fact that it is rarely, if ever, a fatal ailment, its distressing features are such a source of acute suffering to those afflicted that physicians and the victims of the disease have banded themselves together in various parts of the world, under the name Hay Fever Associations, grimly determined to solve the problem of a cure.

This dogged pursuit has been going on now for more than forty years, or since the time when the origin of the disease began to be understood. It is caused by the pollen of plants, which, as dust, comes into contact with areas of abraided mucous membrane or skin of persons in whom it acts as a poison.

The majority of human beings are not susceptible to its influence; but to those who are affected by it the seemingly innocuous grains of dried pollen from timothy grass, goldenrod, and a great many other flowering plants, are just as real poisons as are strychnine and arsenic to the average man. The scientific name for hay fever is pollinosis.

The great advances which have been made in the last few years in therapeutic procedure have been due almost entirely to research work in the seclusion of the laboratory. It is not a matter of surprise, therefore, to learn that a distinct advance has been made in the treatment of hay fever, as the result of a long series of laboratory experiments.

The physicians whose preliminary announcement gives rise to the hope that when they shall have perfected their method of treatment by further experimentation, a real cure for this annoying affection will have been evolved are Dr. Seymour Oppenheimer and Dr. Mark J. Gottlieb of this city. Their communication, which is entitled "The Active Immunization of Hay Fever," was issued from the Physiological Chemical Laboratory of Columbia University, College of Physicians and Surgeons, and the Laboratory for Clinical Research. It has appeared in the New York Medical Journal.

They started the treatment last year, but apparently it was so late in the season before they were ready to put their theories into practice that only eleven patients were treated. That is, they had no opportunity to deal with the Spring cases, but only treated those who presented themselves before and during the season for Autumnal hay fever. There were five cures recorded. Four patients were very much improved. Two patients apparently received no benefit, for reasons which will appear later.

The investigators concluded, as the result of a long series of experiments which involved a consideration of the actual meaning of the symptoms following pollen infection, that patients might be treated by any one of four methods.

First, it should be possible to make the patient immune to the poisonous factors of the pollen by injecting a dose of pollen extract just before the time of year at which he usually began to have hay fever, and then by injecting a second dose about twenty or thirty days later. These two doses should be sufficient, they argued, to excite in the blood enough of the so-called antibodies to offset, or act as an antitoxin to, the toxic properties of the pollen during the regular seasonal attack.

A second method which could be used in combatting an actual attack was by injecting a large quantity of serum known to be immune during the attack. This method they actually demonstrated in one of their patients.

They took two ounces of blood from a vein of a patient who had received forty-five injections of ragweed extract. After examining this patient to see that he was not suffering from any disease which could be transmitted to another through his blood, eight cubic centimeters of the serum obtained from it was injected "into a patient thirteen years of age, during a violent attack of hay fever. Before the expiration of thirty-six hours all symptoms of hay fever disappeared from this little patient and no signs of the disease returned during the entire season."

A third method of treatment that suggested itself to the physicians was by injecting very small amounts of pollen extract at intervals of ten days, or even shorter periods, so that only minute quantities of the protective antibodies are formed, and the patient's tolerance to pollen invasion is raised.

Still another method of treatment is by injecting small quantities of the protective substance made outside the body to produce the same results as in the third method.

One of the most interesting features of the series of experiments is the method of ascertaining just who are likely to become subject to attacks of pollinosis, (besides those, of course, who actually have experienced hay fever,) as well as the method of establishing just what particular pollen produces the symptoms. Some persons are susceptible to more than one variety, and in that case several individual tests may be necessary. It is possible that the failure of some investigators to get good results from attempted immunization was due to the fact that they did not realize that persons suffering from hay fever were not alike susceptible to pollen infection.

The authors mention three methods by which it is possible to determine the kind of pollen which is operative in a given case. They took a series of weak pollen extracts and instilled a drop of each into the corner of the eye. If one of these instillations produces congestion and swelling of the mucous membrane of the lid, that is the one to which the patient is sensitive. It might develop, as has been suggested, that several varieties of the extract might produce redness and swelling. In that case, in order to carry out the method of treatment in a classical manner, it would be necessary to immunize the individual against the onslaught of all the pollens to which he is sensitive.

Another way of learning the cause of the annoying ailment is to inject small quantities of the extracts of different pollens into the skin. The one which causes redness and swelling at the point of introduction is the one against which he must be immunized.

The simplest way in which to make the diagnosis, however, is to scrape the skin a little and to rub on the raw surface a very little of the pure pollen itself, and the variety which acts as a poison to the patient will cause a wheal to develop at the point of scarification. The procedure is harmless and painless, and the physician does not have to wait long for diagnostic results.

The authors describe hay fever as

> A disease which manifests itself in the spring, from the latter part of May or the early part of June to the early or middle part of July; and in the Autumn, from the middle of August to the end of September or early October.

The Spring attacks last about a month, while those in the Fall average about six weeks.

Some investigators, among them the present authors, uphold the view that hay fever is what is known as "a condition of anaphylaxis." This really means that the person who is liable to have an attack of pollinosis is in a condition of "increased susceptibility to an infection or to the action of any foreign protein introduced into the body, following a primary infection," (Stedman.) More briefly, anaphylaxis may be described as the opposite of immunity.

It follows, therefore, that what the authors do when they confer immunity upon the individual by any of the methods mentioned above, is to stimulate in the blood the production of a protective antibody which is inimical to the poison produced by the breaking down of the pollen protein, which poison is known as anaphylatoxin. The condition produced, which is opposed to the action of the poison, is called anti-anaphylatoxin.

Dr. Oppenheimer and Dr. Gottlieb apparently recognize two factors in pollinosis, namely, some pathological condition of the upper respiratory tract, which results in denuded areas of the mucous membrane, and heredity, for they say in their preliminary report:

> There must be, at the time of sensitization, an abrasion of the mucous membrane, so as to make absorption possible. In all likelihood, there exists in the patient an individual susceptibility to this particular disease, which seems to have some relation to heredity, for this and other allied ailments are frequent in given families.

Among our patients are two brothers with hay fever; a brother and a sister with hay fever; a woman with hay fever whose son suffers from asthma; two cases in which a father and one or more of his children suffer from hay fever; a young woman with hay fever who had intense eczema as a child and whose mother suffers with eczema that is rebellious to treatment.

Pollen grains of many varieties are capable of producing this condition, and not all individuals are sensitive to the same pollen. Among the most common plants in this country whose pollen induces hay fever are timothy, redtop, and blue grass, and ragweed and goldenrod. The grasses cause the early or Spring variety, whereas ragweed and goldenrod produce the late or autumnal variety.

Our experience has been mainly with the autumnal variety of hay fever. The majority of our patients were susceptible to ragweed alone; a few were markedly sensitive to ragweed and also slightly to goldenrod.

In the actual treatment of patients, the authors' object has been to immunize their patients by injecting gradually increased doses of pollen extract to produce tolerance to the anaphylatoxin formed in the body. They began by injecting from one to five units of pollen extract, the dose being gradually increased until redness appeared at the site of the injection. This dose was continued until no more redness was seen after the injections. Then the dose was gradually increased as before.

The authors explain that one unit of pollen toxin is the amount of pure pollen dissolved in one cubic centimeter of extract at a dilution of one part to twenty million. Hence it will be seen that one unit contains an exceedingly small quantity of pollen.

An interesting account is given by the investigators of the method by which they obtained the material for the vaccine preparation. First, they dried the flowers, then stripped off their stems and crushed them by hand. Next, the mutilated flowers are put into muslin bags of a suitable size to be shaken in a very large bottle. The bottle is then connected by a cheesecloth covered funnel and rubber tubing to a suction flask which has over its outlet a silk filter. By this means the fine powder was collected in the flask. This plan worked fairly well with ragweed, but was of no use with goldenrod.

The experimenters argued that in all probability goldenrod flowers needed a greater pulverization to free the pollen from the antlers. Accordingly, they put the flowers into a mill and a fine dust was obtained. Following this, the physicians undertook some sedimentation experiments with goldenrod flower powder to determine what concentration of alcohol in water and alcohol with ether in water would give the greatest concentration of pollen in the sediment.

They found that a 20 per cent. solution of alcohol in water would effect the sedimentation of the most pollen, and this was used. They started with powdered flowers containing about 8 per cent. pollen, and 15 per cent. pollen was found in the sediment. The physicians write:

> This method is not satisfactory, for the following reasons: In allowing pollen to remain in aqueous solutions of alcohol for sufficient time for it to sediment, the pollen grains are liable to be ruptured, with an escape of their contents. This was actually the case, as many pollen grains were found ruptured on microscopic examination.

The pollen was extracted by grinding it up for several days with sand, and a sufficient amount of 5 per cent. common salt solution with one-half per cent. carbolic acid added to prevent the growth of germs. This mixture was heated for seventy-two hours at a temperature of 37 degrees Centigrade and then filtered by suction.

The filtered extract was then precipitated with eight parts of absolute alcohol and filtered quickly to avoid any denaturization, if possible, of the active principle by so strong a concentration of alcohol. The resulting precipitate was dried and weighed. This precipitate is partly soluble in 0.85 per cent. common salt solution and physiologically active in very weak solutions.

Further tests show that pollen extracts in solution deteriorate on standing. The report continues:

> The dried precipitate was dissolved in 0.85 per cent. sodium chloride (common salt) solution, with one-quarter per cent. of carbolic acid, and serial solutions made. With these solutions the patients were treated by hypodermic injections.
> The method described above for obtaining pollen from the flowers was found to be extremely cumbersome, and the results obtained hardly justified the work expended. We are now working on a method less laborious and time-consuming.
> The fact that the extract is not completely soluble shows that there must occur some denaturization by the alcohol; and for this reason we are now endeavoring to perfect a method of extraction in which no such factor enters.
> Eleven cases were treated in 1914, before and during the season for autumnal catarrh. Six cases were treated in advance of the attack. One of these was cured for the season, four had very mild symptoms, and one was not improved.
>
> Five cases were treated during the attack. The symptoms of four subsided after receiving from one to four injections, whereas one patient received no benefit.
> Altogether, there were five cures for the season. In four cases there was marked improvement. In two cases there was no improvement.
> Of the two cases that were not improved one had a polypoidal degeneration of the middle turbinate, (an affection of one of the bones of the nose,) with underlying bone necrosis. The patient had distinct asthmatic attacks every night, and it was impossible to say whether the attacks were due to his hay fever or his local nasal condition.
> The other was a physician who reacted to both ragweed and goldenrod pollen. He received in all thirty-three injections, alternating the ragweed extract and the goldenrod extract. He came very irregularly. It is possible at times that the treatment was too intensive. His physical condition was so poor that possibly he could not develop a tolerance.
> Nine of our cases reacted to ragweed pollen and two reacted to that of both ragweed and goldenrod. Both of these latter cases received both goldenrod and ragweed antigen (pollen extract) hypodermically. One was cured, but the other was not improved.
> When a patient is sensitive to more than one pollen, individual doses of each extract should be administered, in order to determine when the tolerance is sufficiently raised for each. Mixing the antigen (pollen extracts) is too empirical.

The authors describe two methods of determining when a patient has become sufficiently immune to warrant discontinuance of the treatment. The first is called the "complement fixation" test, but it is a method which does not admit of ready explanation so far as the layman is concerned.

The second and simpler method is by observing the size, intensity, and duration of the wheal produced by skin scarification at different times, namely before and during the treatment. The authors have not employed the first method as frequently as the skin method, but they announce that they propose to utilize the complement fixation test more extensively in the future. They state:

> The scarification method is the one we have generally used to diagnose and determine the degree of immunity induced. The wheal produced by the initial vaccination is measured, its time of appearance and its duration noticed. After five or six treatments the patient is revaccinated, and the wheal is observed as before, and compared with former results. When the wheal is very small or does not appear, the patient is sufficiently immune, and probably will go through the season with very mild symptoms or none at all.
> Naturally, the question arises whether such immunization is permanent. We believe it is safe to say that, while immunity may not be successfully carried over to the succeeding year, recurrences are much milder, at least, and the patient requires less reimmunization.
> An attack the following year can probably be overcome by very few injections.
> The best time to begin treatment is probably about ten weeks before the attack may be expected to occur. Regularity in attendance at about weekly intervals is important.
> At the time of our initial work, we were not prepared with as large a variety of pollens as we now possess for the continuance of this work, along broader lines, which we hope in the future will enable us to bring about a large precentage of cases influenced by our attempts at immunization.

Susceptible persons who are affluent enough to indulge every whim are in the habit of going to the mountains or elsewhere where pollinosis is not to be feared when the time for the seasonal attack approaches.

In addition to the pollen-bearing plants mentioned which can induce pollinosis in susceptible individuals, these are active: Wheat, barley, oats, and rye in the Spring, and thistles, corn, and daisies in the Fall.

clean I'd go for the devil in that just as soon as for the devil in anything else. It is the greatest game in the country, but I won't stand for it being played on Sunday. There I draw the line, as I always have done. I'm the baseball players' friend, but I'll put my foot down when they try to play the game on the Sabbath. I'm still an enthusiast—I love it—but my enthusiasm has its limitations."

Mr. Sunday rose and paced the room, and again I studied the odd little figure in the silken bathrobe and the undershirt. His movements reminded me of those of a perky bird. While I had studied him he had most certainly studied me in a detached sort of manner. His eyes seemed to enter my chest and go right through my back, making their way easily through a starched shirt.

The queer homeliness of the room was in itself a field for observation. One might have imagined Mr. Sunday in an "elegant" library, in spick-and-span attire, dictating to secretaries—as I have seen many second-rate actors do. Here was a sort of attic room, with a very plain brass bed, some particularly unimpressive furniture, and a general atmosphere of loll and lounge. There were a few newspapers of New York and Paterson vintage, and they had apparently been run through at random.

Mrs. Sunday apparently felt that she had done her duty as a stage "mommer," and she left us to attend to a few "reporters" whom she invariably sees and barricades from the tired, but not reluctant, Billy. These applicants for "copy" are left entirely to Mrs. Sunday, and Billy is not approachable.

I told him that I had once interviewed Pope Pius in Rome, who kindly blessed the drama, for the delectation of my readers, and I fancy that this was not displeasing. Just the same, I don't believe that Mr. Sunday has any vanity. He expressed not the slightest desire to know how I would "put things," as many vain people do. He didn't suggest a "Say this" or a "Say that." He was like an enthusiastic boy, glad to talk when he knew that he had an appreciative listener; in me he had.

"The years that I have known you!" he said again, as I rose to go, for poor Mr. Sunday did look a bit played out, and I thought it rather criminal to talk so long, when he was due to preach to boys and girls. "Come and hear me, if you can get near the place, when I open up on amusements. Oh, there'll be a big crowd. Remember, that even if I don't go to the theatre, I'm not a bit of a crank, and I read all that there is to read about it. I try to keep myself well posted, and I believe that I do so. Then, remember that I abstain for the reasons I have told you.

"Boys and girls can't discriminate in the matter of plays offered. I could, but I find that the wisest policy is to be a total abstainer. It is really a lifetime since I have been near a theatre, but I am proud to think that the last actor I saw was dear old Joe Jefferson. What a fine actor he was! How I used to enjoy him, and Denman Thompson. The popular actors of today, of course, I have never seen. Can you find your way out? I won't come down."

So I left Billy Sunday smiling a farewell. He had interested me enormously on account of his vitality. I'm so used to talking theatre in a slipshod and haphazard sort of style that it did me good to hear Billy's vehement views.

Mrs. Sunday had disappeared. She had seen Billy through, and had carefully listened to every utterance of importance. A clever woman, "Ma," and a very emphatic one!

I went back to Manhattan to a matinée, at which Tottie Coughdrop sang ragtime songs, and did some particularly soothing dance. And as I sat in the crowded theatre I thought of Billy and his Jeffersonian reminiscences, and of the drama, as it should be, and might be, but alas! won't be, for all the fulminations of preachers and reformers.

Among those present were no "high-grade" folks!

WILLIAMS COLLEGE CELEBRATES

The 250th Anniversary of the Birth of Its Founder, Col. Ephraim Williams, Will Be Observed This Week

CELEBRATION of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the birth of Colonel Ephraim Williams, founder of Williams College, will be observed at the Williamstown institution on Thursday.

The commemoration will begin at the morning chapel service. At noon President Garfield will be host at a large luncheon, and afterward the academic procession will be formed. This will include the Trustees and Faculty, led by Dr. F. C. Ferry, Dean of the college, as head marshal, followed by the whole student body. The procession will march to Grace Hall.

President Garfield will open the exercises with an address, paying tribute not only to Colonel Williams, but also to other benefactors—Mrs. Currier, A. C. Houghton, J. Stewart Kennedy, F. F. Thompson, and Morris K. Jesup. After other addresses the procession will form again and march to Currier Hall, where portraits of Colonel Williams and the other benefactors will be unveiled.

Williams College began life as a college in 1793, but was established as a free school two years before, while its foundation was assured thirty-five years previous to that. It was then that Colonel Williams, by his will, left his property in trust for the establishment of an institution of learning in Western Massachusetts. Colonel Williams served in the French and Indian wars, and with him served such men as Israel Putnam.

Like many soldiers of that day, the Colonel was not a man of letters. This fact was the cause for his bequest. He lamented his lack of learning and he felt that he could do no greater service for his comrades and their children than to insure for them a chance to obtain what he had missed. It was with this motive that he left practically his whole estate for the establishment of the "free school."

His whole estate, however, amounted to a sum which would now seem diminutive for the establishment of any sort of a school. Even at the time it was inadequate and had to be carefully husbanded for thirty years before the Trustees felt warranted in taking any action. It was not until 1785 that the first step was made, when the Legislature passed an act enabling them to put in operation the wish of the testator.

The Trustees held their first meeting shortly after this act was passed. They decided that additional funds were necessary, and appointed a committee to procure them. They also voted that the school should be open to all citizens of the United States and their children, and showed their intention of establishing something more than an ordinary free school by voting that the school building should be constructed of bricks and be eighty feet long, forty feet wide, and three stories high.

The additional funds necessary were eventually raised, chiefly by subscription from the town's inhabitants and a lottery which the Legislature granted them permission to operate. The school building was then finished and school was opened in 1791, with the Rev. Ebenezer Fitch, a Yale graduate, as preceptor, and Mr. John Lester as assistant. It had two departments, in one of which the regular college studies were taught; in the other more elementary courses were given.

The school was popular and successful from the beginning, students attending from various neighboring States and even from Canada. It was seen that the institution was on a firm basis, and the year after its opening the Trustees petitioned the Legislature to have it incorporated as a college. The petition was granted and the name of Williams College first became known in 1793.

The entire outward equipment consisted of the single building, which was then called West College. This structure still exists, and it is used today as a dormitory, extensively remodelel. The first faculty was made up of the President and one tutor. West College was in itself chapel, library, recitation rooms, and dormitories, just as the President was in himself a whole body of professors. For thirty years recitations used to be held in students' rooms, one member of each class giving his room for that purpose, and receiving a slight compensation therefor. A single room served for the chapel until Griffin Hall was built.

The year 1795 witnessed the first commencement, when a class of four was graduated. The next year there were six, then ten, then thirty. In 1795 also the college published its first catalogue—the first of its kind in the country, it is said. For many years these catalogues were printed on single sheets in handbill form, greatly contrasting with the present-day volumes.

Commencement soon came to be the big event of the year in Western Massachusetts, and all classes flocked to the town at that time. The gayety and riotousness which prevailed without the buildings contrasted strongly with what went on within; for outside every one gave himself up to the enjoyment of the season. Barrels of cider were always in evidence, and stronger drinks were not hard to find. It was exceedingly rare when the day did not witness at least one or two fist fights.

An early commencement is described by Nathaniel Hawthorne. He says in his American Notebooks:

> Wednesday, August 15th, 1838.—I went to commencement at Williams College. At the tavern were students with ribbons, pink or blue, fluttering from their buttonholes, these being the badges of rival societies. There was a considerable gathering of people, chiefly arriving in wagons and buggies, some in barouches, and a very few in chaises. The most characteristic part of the scene was where the peddlers, ginger-bread sellers, &c., were collected a few hundred yards from the meeting house. There was a peddler there from New York State who sold his wares at auction, and I could have stood and listened to him all day long.
> A good many people were the better or worse for liquor. There was one fellow named Randall, I think, a round-shouldered, bulky, ill-hung devil, with a pale, sallow skin, and a sort of grin on his face—a species of laugh, yet not so much mirthful as indicating a strange mental and moral twist. He was very riotous in the crowd, elbowing, thrusting, and seizing hold of people; and at last a ring was formed and a regular wrestling match commenced between him and a farmer-looking man. Randall brandished his legs about in the most ridiculous style, but proved himself a good wrestler, and finally threw his antagonist.

The rapid growth of the college in its early days is somewhat surprising when it is considered how shut-in from the world it was, and how difficult of access the students found it. News was received from Boston and New York once a week, and at about the same interval from Troy and Albany. This news came by way of messenger, either on horseback or in a one-horse wagon, and except for this no public vehicle ever entered the town. Students frequently had to rely on the kindness of passing farmers to make their journey to and from home.

With all these difficulties of access, at first glance the college presented little to reward the struggle in getting to it. The buildings were plain, and not one of the rooms was painted, papered, or had a carpet. It is doubtful if the furniture for any room cost over $5. The only water to be had was from a spring at the foot of the hill, and the students had to draw it.

Toward the latter part of Dr. Fitch's term, a slight decline in the reputation and prosperity of the college set in. Some attributed this to its location, and a movement grew up to change to some more advantageous place. Dr. Fitch resigned. He was unwilling to have the decline of the college attributed to any lack of ability on his part.

The Rev. Zephaniah Swift Moore, who succeeded him, was in favor of removal, and continued to agitate the question. Finally, he declared he would resign if the removal were not effected. A proposal was then made that the college unite with a projected literary institution at Amherst. This was declined by the Trustees, but a committee was appointed to consider the advisability of moving to some place nearer the central part of the State. The committee reported that removal to Northampton seemed expedient.

Hampshire County at once began to raise money for the new institution, and petitioned the Legislature for permission to have the change made. The inhabitants of Williamstown and vicinity naturally opposed this, and so strong was their influence that the Legislature refusel the petition. But the opposition declined to abide by this decision. Funds were raised and a college started at Amherst, of which Dr. Moore accepted the Presidency. So great was his influence at Williams it was feared that the whole body of students would follow him. Half of them did so, but the rest remained, and with the immediate accession of the Rev. Edward Dorr Griffin to the Presidency of Williams came renewed strength and prosperity.

Williams, though always remaining a college and not seeking expansion into a great university, has been the birthplace of various ideas which have had wide influence.

The present Haystack Monument in Mission Park is a lasting reminder of such ideas. This monument stands on the spot where the movement in the United States for the Christianization of the heathen world had its origin. The story is that four students were caught there in a shower one day and took refuge in a haystack. As they talked the subject of Christianizing the heathen came up, and, carried away with the idea, they determined to make it their life work. As days passed these four, Mills, Richards, Hall, and Nott, came to this same spot from time to time with their associates to ponder and pray. From these little gatherings grew the great Board of Foreign Missions and the American Bible Society.

In Williams also originated the first college society for the study of the natural sciences. For some reason, perhaps the fact that the college is located amid scenery of a remarkably attractive character, there have always been in the Faculty some members ardently devoted to the study of nature, and their enthusiasm has kindled an equal spirit of enthusiasm in many of their pupils.

For several years in the early days of the college the Linnaean Society existed among the students. This developed into the present Lyceum of Natural History, whose object is "the study of the natural sciences, and the prosecution of antiquarian research." Frequent expeditions have been made by this society under the lead of one or more professors, sometimes into distant lands. Former President Chadbourne, when a professor, went with the society to Florida, and on another occasion led an expedition to Greenland.

The first observatory erected in this country for astronomical purposes was built at Williams. It owes its existence chiefly to Professor Hopkins, who contributed largely to the expense of building it. The observatory is not used for practical work now, a newer and better-equipped one having been erected.

Among the names of famous men who went to Williams is that of James A. Garfield, President of the United States, who was an enthusiastic supporter of his Alma Mater. It was to a Williams anniversary that he was traveling when he received his fatal wound. Justice Field of the Supreme Court of the United States, and William Cullen Bryant also graduated from Williams.

The college has at present an enrollment of about 500 students. The senior class contains 106 men, and will be the second largest class to be graduated from the institution. The largest was last year's, which numbered 124.

BILLY SUNDAY ON THE THEATRE

Once Thought of Becoming an Actor, He Says, and Has No Quarrel with It as an Institution.

By Alan Dale.

PATERSON smiled radiantly in the morning sun, which, of course, is no criterion. One may smile, and smile, and be a villain as we know on good authority. Perhaps these very smiles on the part of the New Jersey town were merely suggestive of the iniquity through which the exhortations of Billy Sunday were trying to penetrate.

Still, Paterson didn't look a bit wicked to me, as I walked through its placid streets on my way to Mr. Sunday's home, at Park Avenue and Twenty-eighth Street. Its budding gardens were trim and neat, its houses ornate and seemly, its people subdued and polite. I passed the ugly and rather forbidding-looking structure known as the Tabernacle, with its bare boards and scaffoldings. Opposite I saw that they sold soft drinks and "eats," in regular picnic style. Brave youths, at crudely reared counters, evidently catered to the earthly appetites of Mr. Sunday's congregation as they emerged from his services, hungry but not ashamed.

As I approached Billy Sunday's dwelling, however, all signs of the preacher's vogue vanished. It was very still and demure. Two or three little girls played in the street, and laughed and talked. They pointed out the house to me, and then went on playing and laughing and talking.

A maid, who evidently had a sense of humor, as well as red hair, admitted me to the Sunday household, and ushered me into a little reception room. She asked me if I had an appointment, and seemed relieved when I answered in the affirmative. Then a secretary appeared, gave me the happy eye, and told me that although Mr. Sunday was very tired, he would see me.

Reporters came and went, but were not admitted to the inner sanctum. They seemed very busy, with missions of all sorts, and the faded little house presumably inspired them.

Billy Sunday was at the top of his house in his bedroom. He rose as I entered, and gave me a warm grip. His piercing eyes read me like a book. Mrs. Sunday, in a white cotton gown, was with him, and scarcely left him for a moment.

Sunday is a dramatic looking person, not unlike the late Eben Plympton, on a small scale. Even meeting him casually, his impressive manner would be the first noticeable thing. No actor that I have ever met is so suggestive of extreme vitality and enthusiasm.

Billy's smile is really a delightful experience. It is warm, eager, cordial, convincing, and true. It is fraternal, kindly and permeating. He let it loose on me, and I felt as though I had known him for years. He wore a silk robe over an undershirt, and his little bullet head, closely cropped, looked almost droll. Mrs. Sunday, very much less cheerful, appeared to be his manager, or, she suggested my pet bane, the "stage mommer." She sat around, just as "Mommer" Janis has done when I have chatted with little Elsie.

"I've known you for years, Alan Dale," said Billy Sunday, with his beaming regard, as I sat down beside them in the little towzled upper bedroom. "Oh, I'm well posted on actors and theatre people. Once upon a time Thomas W. Keene wanted me to join his company. He was anxious for me to play Shakespeare, and in those days I was very much interested in the profession. I used to give imitations. I was fond of recitations at the 'exercises' we had every Friday.

"I knew 'em all—Nat Goodwin, and Bill Hoey, and John McCullough, and Lawrence Barrett. You see, as a baseball player, I used to have admission to all the theatres. I don't know whether baseball players have that privilege yet, but they used to do so in my day."

Billy Sunday snapped out his words, as though he enjoyed uttering them. He spoke with great rapidity, and his eyes were happy and interested. The magnetism of the man filled the small room. I think I am an authority on what actors call "magnetism," and if I were reviewing Billy Sunday's words from the actor's point of view, I should say that he "got over" and got over tremendously.

"I have no quarrel with the theatre as an institution," said Mr. Sunday magnanimously. "My fuss comes in with the things that the theatre does. I keep myself fairly well posted on the doings of the theatre, but I never go. It is twenty-nine years since I was converted, and I have never been inside a theatre in that time. The last actor I saw was Joseph Jefferson. I was very fond of Joseph Jefferson and Denman Thompson. Today I stay away. I never go near a theatre. Ah, how well I remember it all in the days of Clara Morris, and Fanny Davenport, and Madame Modjeska."

He called Modjeska "Modjesky," and seemed amused at the utterance of the name. He reminded me of an extinct critic, reviewing the good "old timers," and harking back to the days of yore, which for some occult reason, seem to be so much superior to those in which we live.

"I abstain from the theatre for the same reason that Paul abstained from eating the meat that had been offered in sacrifice. Paul said, 'If my eating that meat offends you, I won't eat it.' That's my plan. The best thing for me to do is to abstain from the theatre. I am not bigoted. I am not cranky. This is my policy, and I have carried it out for twenty-nine years.

"I believe that the theatre could be a great force for good—a great educational issue, but look at some of the plays! Consider them. Realize what they try to do, and the appeal that they seek to make. As I say, the theatre as an institution is all right, but the way it is run is not all right."

Billy Sunday was warming to his subject. His voice was rather tired, and a trifle hoarse, but his words had the ring of sincerity. I don't think that there is the slightest doubt in the world as to the supreme sincerity of this much-advertised little man. That is the way he impressed me, and I have sampled some of the best advertised creations in the world.

"When I talk on the theatre, I quote people who know all about it," he said in his rapid-transit manner. I don't let anything escape me. I quote Zangwill, who says that the average playwright makes his plays with the object of pandering to the lust of the mob. I quote Mr. Charles Burnham of the Theatrical Managers' Association who has spoken of plays that no decent man and woman would go to see. Who does go to see these plays? Not men and women. No. Boys go with girls whose skirts are short to their shoetops, and listen to the gutter lines that are spoken."

Billy Sunday paused in reflection. Mrs. Sunday nodded approval, and seemed to like the trend of the chat. And, by the bye, Mrs. Sunday appeared to be a sort of inspiration, a feminine Svengali, as it were. She listened attentively to every word that Mr. Sunday uttered, and gave it a kind of tacit sanction. I should say that Mrs. Sunday—"Ma," as they call her—is a remarkable woman—all the more remarkable because she has the appearance of a placid "hausfrau," and you could imagine her going no further than the larder and Mr. Sunday's socks.

"High-grade folks go to the theatre," continued Mr. Sunday—and I couldn't repress a smile at the idea of our beautiful and ornamental "first-nighters" classified as "high grade," just as though they were provisions. "They go to see an actress like Maude Adams. There is a player who reflects honor on womankind. With actresses like Maude Adams, and with plays like those in which she appears, I have no quarrel at all. Miss Adams, and actresses of her stamp, ennoble the theatre. She gives the best and the most elevated. There should be a censorship, of course, but it is a very difficult question. One can scarcely cope with it. I know that it has been discussed a great deal. You gentlemen of the press are really in the same business as I am. We stand together, or we should do so. We are all advocating the same principle."

I laughed. I explained gently and delicately to Mr. Sunday that "criticism" today was not viewed with fervor; that the truth was distinctly taboo—at least in Manhattan. I told him a few things that seemed to interest him a good deal. In fact, I think I gave him a few valuable hints. Critics may be and should be powers for good—in some cities I believe they are—but not in dear little old Manhattan. Here we are under a cloud, calumniated, maligned, and our motives aspersed. If, we tell the truth we have some venomous reason for so doing. Our good faith is impunged, our veracity attacked, and there are none to stand up for us.

"Billy Sunday didn't seem a bit surprised, but he was very much on the alert. He professed familiarity with some of the points that I set forth, but Billy is a fighter, and he wouldn't sit down and throw up the sponge as we do.

"The movies are taking it all away from the legitimate," said Billy, with a smile, as though he rather relished the idea. "Their great vogue is explained by the fact that they appeal to the eye, instead of to the ear. The eye is a very much more important factor than the ear. The real stage assumes less importance all the time, as the pictures grow and grow."

"And there are bad pictures, too," said Mrs. Sunday, as we discussed the crime and the crookery that the "movies" are so fond of exploiting.

"Amusements are an important topic," said Billy Sunday, "and I am going after them, and when I do you won't be able to get near the place. I must fight the devil in the theatre as I fight him in the rum-shops. I've been so busy with booze that I haven't had time to get to the other thing. You see, I go to the very root of the matter.

"In the question of drink I know the exact effect liquor has upon the organs of a man. I always try to attack a thing scientifically. Of course, I don't fight the theatre like I do booze. The theatre has great possibilities for good, and its appeal should be made in the right direction. You quite understand why I don't go to the play, don't you? It is better to abstain than to compromise, but I can never forget that I had every inducement offered me to become an actor."

I wondered if any living actor could "hold" the mobs that Billy Sunday holds. The elocutionary powers might be, and probably would be there, but the hypnotic effect would be lacking. I could imagine Billy Sunday in "Julius Caesar" delivering Mark Antony's address as no living actor has been able to deliver it, although most famous actors have bent their powers to the task.

"My acquaintance with actors and actresses is a big one," said Mr. Sunday. "You would be quite surprised if you knew all the celebrities that I can claim as friends. But I'd sooner be a baseball player than an actor.

"Baseball is the cleanest game in the world. I love it. If I didn't think it using the track for an automobile, may also be arranged for.

"It will be possible, in connection with the Speedway, to have a great flying school also. The situation is ideal for flying. It will be the simplest of matters for the aviators to get a good place to rise within the oval and soar out over the grandstands. We have no overhead wires in connection with the plant; all the wiring connections for telephones, telegraph, and every other purpose are to be carried in conduits underground, and this will leave the air free for the human birds. We expect to have a permanent exhibition of actual machines and models from the earliest to the latest types.

"There is still another development in connection with the Sheepshead Bay plant to which I am giving serious thought. This is in connection with open-air entertainment of a non-sporting character. For instance, why not open-air opera, on a scale which never has been attempted? My experience at New Haven encourages me very much to hope for the extension of things of this sort. Up there outdoor performances of a dramatic nature have been most successful. In fact, I had planned with Granville Barker that we should have a performance of 'Iphigenia' in the Yale Bowl.

"I believe it would be entirely practicable to give outdoor performances of this kind in the Speedway oval, and I can see no reason why its scope should not be extended to opera out of doors. Imagine what a wonderful setting could be given to 'Aida,' for example, in this way! It would be a performance such as the Khedive of Egypt enjoyed when he had Verdi compose this work and give it, but it would be raised to the nth power. I am sure that opera of the best quality given outdoors would attract a host of people. It could be done, I should think, easily with the top price of $1.50 a seat.

"I am giving most earnest thought to the plans for the beautification of the great grounds we have acquired and especially to all those features which will make for the comfort and safety of the host which we will be able to accommodate. It is a huge responsibility to care for a city of 175,000 people. In such a population, concentrated as it must be, every contingency must be provided for. The problem becomes more serious almost in arithmetical progression with each thousand of capacity that you add above 50,000. When the 100,000 mark is reached the difficulties are still further increased.

"At Sheepshead Bay we shall have a large corps of physicians and nurses, rest rooms, hospitals, and all the apparatus of a large city. It is no mean task to select and secure the little army of ticket takers and ushers required alone. They must be men of the right stamp. I am moving slowly, but I hope to make as few mistakes as possible in these vital particulars.

"While we hope, naturally, that this big undertaking will be a profitable one, I prefer to look on it rather as the establishment of a great public centre for the cultivation of the best in sport and outdoor life. We hope to handle it in such a way that it will be of immense value to the community."

The Sheepshead Bay Speedway and all that it stands for has received the substantial backing of many of the country's men of mark. Among the subscribers to the stock of the company may be mentioned Percy R. Pyne, 2nd, Horace M. Kilborn, George F. Baker, Mortimer L. Schiff, Frank Bailey, Henry M. Swetland, Charles H. Sabin and James Blair, Jr., of New York; Stanley Field, James A. Patten, John N. Scott, Watson F. Blair, J. M. Cudahy, James Deering, John Stuart and Chauncey B. Keep of Chicago, and Carl C. Fisher of Indianapolis.

FIRST CHIEF OF NAVAL OPERATIONS

The Brilliant Record of Captain Benson, Just Appointed to This Great Post Recently Created

THE most important position created by the last Congress, so far as the national defense is concerned, was that of Chief of Naval Operations, a position that in the navy of the future will in importance be second only to that of the active head of the Navy Department.

For weeks past the eyes of the navy have been focused on Washington, whence was to come the name of the officer who was to be selected as the first Chief of Operations of the Navy. Everybody had a guess, it seemed, as to who the fortunate officer would be.

A majority were of the opinion that the honor would be conferred on Rear Admiral Cameron McRae Winslow; others even surmised that Admiral Fletcher would be relieved of the command of the Atlantic Fleet to assume the duties of the new position; still others guessed that Captain William F. Fullam, Superintendent of the Naval Academy, would be the choice of Secretary Daniels. A few suggested that Rear Admiral Henry T. Mayo, commanding the First Division of the Atlantic Fleet, would be the proper officer to fill the big shoes necessary in holding down this newest and largest of navy jobs.

But everybody guessed wrong, and intense was the surprise, ashore and afloat, when Secretary Daniels announced in Washington last Wednesday night that Captain William Shepherd Benson had been selected for the place. But the surprise was a happy one, and naval officers hereabout are a unit in declaring that in picking Benson for his Chief of Operations the Secretary made what may be properly termed "a ten-strike."

In the service everybody knows and respects Captain Benson, who, it may be pointed out, will hold the rank of Rear Admiral with his new position. Outside of the navy, however, not many people are familiar with the record and the attainments of this talented officer of the United States Navy. Now and then in past years the name of Benson has appeared in the newspapers, but up to the present he has never been what is popularly known as "in the public eye."

The new Chief of Operations is a Georgian. He was just the ordinary Georgia lad whose boyhood was passed in the stormy era that marked the close of the civil war and Sherman's famous march through Georgia to the Sea. He was 10 years old when Lee surrendered at Appomattox and 17 years of age when he was appointed to the Naval Academy as a midshipman from Georgia. It was in the early Fall of 1872 that Midshipman Benson arrived at Annapolis, one of the first of the Southerners to enter the institution following the conclusion of peace between the States. He was a popular midshipman and in 1877 he was graduated.

His first duty afloat was as a junior officer of the old Hartford, then the flagship of the South Atlantic Fleet. For two years he remained on the Hartford. Then he was transferred to the Essex of the same fleet, and when he was detached from that ship and ordered home it was to be assigned to the famous old Constitution, on board of which he was to participate in the last voyage ever made by that historic unit of the ancient navy.

When the last cruise of the Constitution ended Benson had his first service ashore. That was in 1881. He was by this time recognized by his brother officers as one of the level-headed young men of the service, an officer of great executive ability, of splendid judgment, a strict disciplinarian, modest, just, big-hearted.

For six months Benson was on duty at the navy yard in Brooklyn and then Washington ordered him to sea a second time. For a few months he served on the Alliance, in the home fleet, and when that tour ended he packed up his baggage and transferred to the Yantic, on board of which he was to take part in the historic expedition for the relief of Major Gen. Adolphus Washington Greely, the army officer and explorer, whose experiences in the polar region are among the most tragic in the history of arctic exploration.

With a party of twenty-five soldiers General Greely had sailed from St. John's, N. F., in the Proteus on July 7, 1881. General Greely, then an officer of the Signal Corps, U. S. A., undertook his perilous journey as a result of an international plan for scientific investigation and exploration in the arctic, agreed upon at an international conference held in Hamburg in 1879. The sufferings of the members of the Greely expedition form one of the most heart-rending narratives in the long record of work in the frozen north. Of the twenty-five men who had sailed out of St. John's, eighteen perished from starvation, and the remaining seven, including General Greely, suffered hardships almost beyond description. It was as a member of the Greely relief expedition that Benson was first mentioned in the newspapers.

On June 22, 1884, the Schley relief expedition arrived off Cape Sabine in the arctic, where Greely and the six other survivors of the ill-fated expedition were found. Among those rescued was the famous Sergeant David L. Brainard, now Colonel Brainard, U. S. A., and one of the warmest personal friends of the new Chief of Operations.

On the return of the relief expedition Captain Benson was once more given shore service and assigned to duty under what was then known as the Navy Advisory Board at South Boston. Then followed a short tour in the hydrographic service. In January, 1888, he was ordered to New York to join the dispatch gunboat Dolphin, in those days the ship that President Cleveland used when he wanted to be alone, get away from the politicians, think out big public problems, or hunt ducks on the coast of South California.

On board the Dolphin, Benson made his first voyage around the world. He had by this time become one of the best known of the younger officers of the navy, so far as the service was concerned. The Dolphin returned from her globe-circling journey in September,

Captain William Shepherd Benson.

1890, and practically all her officers were relieved and assigned to shore duty. Benson was sent to the Naval Academy as an instructor.

From 1890 until 1893 he remained on duty at Annapolis, and then followed a service of a year at the Washington Navy Yard, which in turn was followed by two years of duty with the Coast Survey, as a member of which the new Chief of Operations participated in some of the most important work ever undertaken by that branch of the service.

A short tour on the Dolphin in 1896 was followed by a second assignment to the Naval Academy. In 1898 he was sent to New York to join the staff of the old Monongahela. In 1901 he was again ordered to Annapolis, this time as Commandant of Midshipmen, and for three years the disciplinary department of the great institution was under his charge. It is generally admitted throughout the navy that the brigade of midshipmen never served under a more capable Commandant.

Captain Benson is one of the original dreadnought commanders of the navy, having commanded for several years the great dreadnought Utah, then a unit of the First Division of the Atlantic Fleet. He has also in recent years served as Chief of Staff of the Pacific Fleet, and his last assignment, and the one he relinquishes in order to go to Washington as Chief of Operations, was that of Commandant of the Navy Yard at Philadelphia.

The regulations that will govern the activities of Captain Benson as Chief of Operations provide that he shall advise the Secretary of the Navy in practically all matters of prime importance in the control, development, and maintenance of the efficiency of the various fleets and shore stations. These regulations are ten in number. They indicate the great importance of the new position and the heavy burden that Captain Benson shoulders in assuming his new duties. These ten regulations are:

1. The Chief of Naval Operations shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, be charged with the operations of the fleet and with the preparation and readiness of plans for its use in war. (Act of March 3, 1915.)

2. This shall include the direction of the Naval War College, the office of Naval Intelligence, the office of Target Practice and Engineering Competitions; the operation of the radio service and of other systems of communication, of the naval defense districts and of the Coast Guard when operating with the navy; the direction of all strategic and tactical matters, organization, manoeuvres, target practice, drills, and exercises, and of the training of the fleet for war, and the preparation, revision, and enforcement of all tactic drill books, signal codes, and cipher codes. The orders issued by the Chief of Naval Operations in the performance of the duties enumerated in this paragraph shall be considered as emanating from the Secretary of the Navy and shall have full force and effect as such.

3. The Chief of Naval Operations shall be charged with the preparation, revision, and record of regulations for the benefit of the navy, naval instructions, and general orders.

4. He shall advise the Secretary concerning the movements and operations of vessels of the navy and prepare all orders issued by the navy in regard thereto, and shall keep the records of service of all fleets, squadrons, and ships.

5. He shall advise the Secretary in regard to the military features of all new ships and as to any proposed extensive alterations of a ship which will affect her military value, and all features which affect the military value of dry docks, including their location; also as to matters pertaining to fuel reservations and depots, the location of radio stations, reserves of ordnance and ammunition, fuel, stores, and other supplies, with a view to meeting effectively the demands of the fleet.

6. In preparing and maintaining in readiness plans for the fleet in war he shall freely consult with and have the advice and assistance of the various bureaus, boards, and offices of the department, including the Marine Corps Headquarters, in matters coming under their command. After the approval of any given war plans by the Secretary it shall be the duty of the Chief of Naval Operations to assign to the bureaus, boards, and offices such parts thereof as may be needed for the intelligent carrying out of their respective duties in regard to such plans.

7. The Chief of Naval Operations shall, from time to time, witness the operations of the fleet as an observer.

8. He shall have as senior assistant an officer not below the grade of Captain.

9. He shall ex officio be a member of the General Board.

10. During the temporary absence of the Secretary and Assistant Secretary of the Navy the Chief of Naval Operations shall be next in succession to act as Secretary of the Navy. (Act of March 3, 1915.)

WORLD'S LARGEST SPORT ARENA

It Will Be on the Old Sheepshead Bay Race Track and Will Seat Three Times as Many Persons as the Huge Yale Bowl.

Everard Thompson.

WHAT is to be the most comprehensive, as well as by far the largest, public arena for outdoor sports in the world is being constructed on the site which saw many a gala meeting of the "sport of kings" before horse racing was frowned upon in this State, the Sheepshead Bay race track property, which has recently been sold by the Coney Island Jockey Club. The Sheepshead Bay Speedway Corporation, which has taken over the four hundred-odd acres of turf and meadow which compose this unique property within the greater city, has begun construction on the most extensive sporting ground that has ever been planned.

In the long list of sporting activities which are to take place where the brilliant colors of the jockey caps flashed under the wire in other days are included automobile track racing, football, baseball, track meets, polo tournaments, tennis, and aviation. The facilities for sports will be almost unlimited and crowds many times larger than at any other arena will be able to be accommodated. The ultimate seating capacity of the steel and concrete grand stand will be 175,000. When it is remembered that the huge Yale bowl at New Haven has a seating capacity of 61,000, some idea of the magnitude of the new undertaking can be gained.

The primary idea behind this new speedway is to give New York an opportunity to see automobile racing of high quality within an inclosure. Some of the motor road classics, such as the Vanderbilt Cup races, have been held on Long Island in the past, but it has never proved possible to police these contests in a satisfactory manner, and, although the project has been agitated a number of times, a track has never been provided in this vicinity until now where really fast automobile contests could be held. The result has been that the only long track race for motor cars held in this country each year has been the 500-mile international event at the Indianapolis Speedway. It is expected that the track at Sheepshead Bay will prove to be for the United States what the famous Brooklands track is for England, only more so.

Present plans call for two chief long-distance races, probably at 500 miles each, to be held each Spring and Fall and to be open to contestants from all countries. The first of these races will be held during the first week of October this year. When the operation of the track is in full swing there will also be matinées, match races, and other automobile contests each week during the season. It is expected that the more progressive automobile manufacturers will co-operate strongly with the management of the new speedway because of its value to them as a testing ground or great outdoor laboratory for the perfecting of motor types.

The history of the Brooklands track in England has made it abundantly apparent that a scientifically constructed speedway, where very high speeds are obtainable, can have an important influence on motor car design. The testing which the cars receive in contests under these conditions leads to constant engineering modifications with the bringing out of refined and improved types each year. Indeed, the development of the long stroke, small bore, high speed automobile motor may be said to be due in great measure to Brooklands.

The developments of the current season in this country with the bringing out of eight-cylinder motors and revolutionary types of transmission have made it plain that a dead level has not yet been reached in automobile engineering, and those who are back of the enterprise at Sheepshead Bay feel that the speedway they are building will play a big part in the forward movement of the American automobile industry.

Some of the varied plans which are in contemplation for the use of the new grounds were explained last week to a representative of THE TIMES by Everard Thompson, who is manager of the enterprise and in full charge of all the arrangements. Mr. Thompson, who has been the active factor in the management of Yale athletics for a number of years and had much to do with the coustruction of the new Yale bowl, has resigned his active connection with Yale in order to take charge of the Sheepshead Bay Speedway. He was captured the other day at the Claridge in one of the few peaceful eddies which he has in the tide of job seekers in connection with the new undertaking. As he puts it, everybody in New York, or, at any rate, everybody in Brooklyn, seems to want a job, and he is besieged.

"The plan for this arena for outdoor sports," he began, "is on the largest scale that ever has been attempted. There are so many angles to it that one hardly knows where to begin. Of course, it is primarily a motor speedway, and motor races will be the great feature. We hope, in fact, to make it a sort of Brooklands and Hendon in one and on an extended scale. Hendon, you know, is the great English aviation ground, and aviation is to play a big part at Sheepshead Bay. But I will tell you more about that later.

"As the basic reason for the undertaking, perhaps the automobile end should be discussed first. We have settled on the design of the track, which can be best described as two straightaways of a half mile each, and two turns of a half mile each, although those distances are not exact, for some 750 feet of each straightaway is taken up by what is called an easement curve, which permits the cars to enter the true curve at a much higher speed than would be possible otherwise. The total circumference of the track is two miles. I believe that cars will be able to average ninety miles an hour for long-distance races.

"The track will have a number of unique features. In the first place it will be of wood. This material has been decided upon for several reasons. All the racing drivers want wood, because it is so fast. You see, when you are building a track with scientifically banked curves it is impossible to get a surface of concrete or brick without slight waves. Now, these waves are not noticeable at moderate speeds—fifty or sixty miles an hour. But when you get up to ninety miles an hour they give a car a terrible jolting, and when you reach speeds of 125 or more miles an hour, which we expect on this track, they would be prohibitive—the car would be in the air much of the time.

"With wood, however, an absolutely true surface can be secured. Also wood can be shaped to fit the precise curve desired, and it has the added advantage of being easily kept in repair. The wood used will be long-leaf Georgia pine, cut to 2 by 4 inch measure and laid on edge so as to get the advantage of the edge grain. It will be treated with creosote to give fire and weather resisting qualities. The foundation will be concrete on the straightaways, merging into concrete and steel on the turns. The steelwork is now under construction and the ribs are being bent to the exact concave shape which has been decided upon for the curves.

"These curves are interesting. They are portions of a true curve with a radius of 850 feet and have been designed so that the maximum speed of which a motor car is capable can be held. The possible speed at which they may be negotiated increases as the track is climbed.

"Thus, at the foot of the track on the curve the speed would be about forty miles an hour; a little higher up about fifty-five miles an hour, then sixty-eight miles, then ninety miles, until finally, at the steepest part of the track, 125 miles or more becomes practical. The track is to be 70 feet wide and will accommodate thirty or thirty-five cars with ease. Much of the work of design has been performed by Blaine Millier of Indianapolis, who did a great deal of the work on the Indianapolis Speedway.

"Great care has been taken with the safety features of the track. On the inside there is a 30-inch wall of concrete, while at the outside the spectators are also protected from possible mishap. The height of the outside edge of the track on the curves is 25 feet.

"The grandstands will be by far the largest in the world. The ultimate capacity will be 175,000. They are to be of steel and concrete construction, with flooring of creosoted wood. The construction is of the double-decked type, and at the highest point the stands will be 90 feet above the ground, or approximately the height of a seven-story building. The portion of the stands to be built for this Fall is 1,800 feet long. The stands will be entered by concourses crossing above the roadway level, so that there will be no crossings at grade in the entire plant. Automobiles entering the parking space in the interior of the oval will do so through tunnels which pass under the track.

"There will be five such tunnels, each 30 feet wide, which will be able to take care of the capacity of the parking spaces—20,000 cars—in about a hour. As may be seen from these figures, 175,000 capacity and 20,000 cars parked, the whole project is of Gargantuan stature. In order to handle crowds of such huge proportions an army of attendants will be required. I have calculated that we shall need 1,500 men as ushers and attendants on the day of a big race.

"Naturally the plan and possibilities have been carefully thought out before we embark on so large a proposition. I believe that provision for such enormous crowds will be entirely justified, however. You see, the track enjoys a unique location. It is within an hour's trip of 8,000,000 persons. It is thirty minutes from the heart of Manhattan, and the transportation facilities are of the best. In addition it is, of course, within the five-cent fare zone. We are not in the least worried about establishing a clientele. Our anxieties are confined to perfecting the best methods of taking care of it."

Mr. Thompson paused for a moment meditatively.

"Motor racing is not to be the only activity on the speedway grounds," he continued. "Not by any means. The possibilities are almost unlimited for the development of sporting fixtures of the best type. Take football, for example. Of course, we cannot get Yale, Harvard, or Princeton to play there, for their agreements and traditions both put that out of the question. But we can have very good games, nevertheless. At present New York has only an occasional chance to see college football at one of the baseball parks when the season is over. Such games as Dartmouth-Carlisle and possibly Cornell and other university contests can easily be played at the speedway. I have hopes also of being able to arrange for the playing of a Western against an Eastern team there. I expect to arrange for high-class football games each Saturday afternoon during the season.

"For such contests as football games we will have unusual facilities. The field will be laid out at one end of the inner oval and, of course, the seats in the regular grandstand at that end will be used. In addition, we are to have a sectional, knock-down wooden grandstand, which can be quickly erected in the oval facing the curve. This will have a maximum seating capacity of 40,000. It is a very flexible arrangement and seats for 10,000, 20,000 or any desired number up to the maximum can be provided. With this stand will be used the same care that used to be exercised with the old wooden stands at Yale. There a very high factor of safety was always maintained. In fact the factor of safety was 8 to 1, whereas bridge builders use at most a factor of 5 to 1. I realize that in matters of this kind 'safety first' is the only maxim to go by.

"Much of the property which the speedway controls is in fine turf; indeed all of it save for a little marshy ground at one end which is to be filled in. When this has been done we will have a wonderful acreage of turf as level as a table. With this natural equipment much can be accomplished. For instance, we propose to develop fine polo fields where matches of all kinds can be played. It will also be possible to put in a great number of splendid tennis courts on which matches of any degree of importance could be played before a gallery of unprecedented size. You see the space within the oval of the track measures 4,000 by 1,600 feet and this gives us all the room in the world to hold all sorts of sporting contests.

"One of the features to be developed is track athletics. I do not know that we can arrange to have the next Olympic games at the speedway, but if Europe recovers from the war with any material and any spirit for the Olympic meet and the meet comes to this country, we shall be prepared to hold it. We are going to have the finest track in the oval that money can build and I hope that it will become a centre of an almost municipal character for track meets. It should be a focal point for all the hundreds of schoolboy meets, for instance, which are held at odd spots around New York during the season, in which there is so much interest.

"Although it not our purpose by any means to compete with organized baseball, we will also have ball fields of the best type, and hope to include baseball games outside of the regular league schedules in our program.

"One of the important activities at the speedway will be aviation. I do not mean trick flying or stunts in the air of a hippodrome character, but straight flying and flying contests of different kinds. It must be remembered that there is a very large floating population in New York every day which has never seen an aeroplane in action. We expect to have races and matches of various kinds and to have two or three machines of different kinds in air much of the time. Some combination races

N. Y. SCHOOL GRADUATES IGNORANT

Business Men Find Many of Them Cannot Figure, Write, or Spell When They Begin as Wage-Earners.

THE public schools of New York City are producing in large numbers boys and girls holding grammar school certificates who cannot write legibly, can not spell simple words, can not add, substract, multiply or divide accurately, can not handle the simplest fractions correctly, can not locate cities and States, can not talk or write grammatically. Many of these young people are entering the great business houses of the city and are either failing completely, so that they have to be discharged, or are unable to win the positions which should logically be theirs, because the public schools have not given them the necessary grounding in fundamentals; or are only able to attain such positions after learning what the schools omitted to teach them.

Such are observations resulting from many years of business experience in New York City made by Mr. M. Friedsam, President of B. Altman & Co., as expressed to a TIMES man last week. Comments have been aroused both in educational and business circles by a brief address delivered by Mr. Friedsam two weeks ago before Hoi Scholastikoi on the inadequate results which are being obtained, for the purposes of commercial life, from the system now in vogue in the elementary schools, and Mr. Friedsam was asked to elaborate his views for THE TIMES.

"In the thirty-five years during which I have been connected with the Altman Company I have observed from 15,000 to 20,000 boys and girls from the elementary schools who have entered the establishment as employes," said Mr. Friedsam, "and from that observation I am, I believe, in a position to draw some deductions as to the practical value of elementary school education.

"No man has a higher admiration for the work, speaking generally, which is being done for the youth of the United States by the American public school system than myself, and what I am going to say must not be considered as aligning me with the enemies of the public schools, or with narrow fault-finders. That is far from my thought. It is as a friend of the public schools that I speak. I am a product of the public schools myself; so are the executives of the business with which I have been so long associated.

"But as a friend of the school system I would like to see that system made even better than it is. As a friend I cannot close my eyes to the fact that the schools are not giving our children the kind of education which is needed to equip them to enter the struggle of business, the kind of education which children who have their own way to make in the world have a right to expect, indeed to demand, from the schools sustained by the community for their welfare.

"The difficulty is that the children of today are not getting the grounding in fundamentals—in the three Rs—which should be given if the elementary schools are to be conducted on the highest plane of practical efficiency; which is absolutely necessary if the boys and girls from the grammar grades are to enter business without serious, often fatal, handicaps.

"Take writing. It is a repeated cause of amazement and regret to me and to other men in the managerial end of this establishment to read the applications for employment received from grammar school boys and girls. Illegible, misspelled, ungrammatical, untidy—some of them to a degree which is almost unbelievable when it is considered that they are written by grammar school graduates—such are characteristics of hundreds of letters which have been received by us. Some of the children show such habits of carelessness that they do not spell correctly the names of the very streets upon which they live.

"Take arithmetic. You should see in our accounting department, the stacks of checks which are added incorrectly by public school pupils who can not do the plainest of plain addition, and whose work has to be redone by the adding machines. Many of these boys and girls, approaching manhood and womanhood, simply can not figure—they can't add, or substract, or divide. A simple row of numbers floors them. Yet how can they be expected to know multiplication and addition? They haven't been taught; elementary arithmetic hasn't been pounded into their heads as it used to be pounded into the heads of children years ago.

"And as for fractions—there is a deep and dark mystery indeed for the average youngster we get from the public schools. Fourteen and three-quarters yards of ribbon at 15 cents a yard—that is a problem in mathematics quite beyond many holders of grammar school certificates who are seeking to make a living in a business where such problems are presented hourly.

"Take geography. The children don't know common facts about their own country. Names of State capitals, boundaries of States, locations of great industrial cities—such are often almost as mysterious as that darkest of mysteries, fractions.

"The deficiency of some graduates of grammar schools is almost incredible. It has often happened that in passing through the store other executives or I have noticed some particularly bright looking boy or girl. Stopping, we have asked a few personal questions, and then begun a little oral examination—'What's one-fourth of 104? What's the capital of Colorado? Spell account.' And many times, before that examination was over, the examiner has been thoroughly embarrassed by the mental agony of a grammar school graduate who could not answer the simplest questions.

"Yet these children have a smattering of a lot of subjects which are of no practical value to them. Does it not seem as if it would be wiser to teach a child who has to become a wage earner how to write legibly and to add than to give it a mite of knowledge about clay modeling or teach it to make a custard?

"That is the fault of the public school system as we men in business study its finished product—there is too much scattering of energy on non-essentials and not enough concentration on essentials. If the fundamentals—arithmetic, grammar, spelling, reading, writing, geography—were hammered into the pupils they would enter their struggle in life infinitely better equipped than is the case now.

"Again, this hammering at fundamentals—insistence on learning a few subjects thoroughly—would, I believe, have a more beneficial effect on the characters of the boys and girls than have present methods.

"We note a lack of driving power, of sustained effort, perseverance, a want of thoroughness, seriousness, in the boys and girls who come to us, which indicates that they have never really been trained thoroughly in any direction, they have not had the splendid mental discipline of being made to do one thing well, absolutely well. Their education has been too thin, superficial, spread over too large an area to give them the depth and grip they should have. It seems to us business men that there is not enough hard common sense shown in the planning of the courses in the elementary schools, and that there are too many fads.

"And conditions have become worse in the last decade. During the past ten years we have found that the ability of the boys and girls to figure accurately, to write legibly, to use language rightly, is less than it was twenty years ago. The children today show, too, less sense of responsibility, less ambition to learn and progress than the children then.

"Despite all the cries of unemployment and lack of opportunity which are being so frequently voiced in various ways, the hardest task today for us employers of labor is to get in sufficient numbers boys and girls—capable, earnest, ambitious boys and girls—with a thorough knowledge of the three Rs. These are extremely few. The reason? Because this is not the product which the public schools manufacture. Years ago conditions were quite different. Then the difficulty lay not in getting a competent, educated boy, but in making a choice between the throng of applicants filling this description.

"Do not think that the managers of this business are unique in our experience. Executives of many of the largest commercial houses in New York have often talked with me about the product of the public schools, and I have yet to talk with a large employer of labor where figuring and writing are needed who does not hold views largely similar to mine.

"In my opinion the condition is such that the Board of Education ought to take up the question in a comprehensive way. If the board would appoint a committee to study conditions in the great commercial houses of New York, to get the evidence of large employers of public school graduates, to see for themselves just what the boys and girls are called upon to do in practical life and how inadequately the schools equip them to do it, I believe the board would find it had on hand so much surprising information that it would be worth while seriously to consider radical changes in the elementary school system.

"I do not for a moment wish to be understood as blaming or in the least degree criticising the teachers or the present Board of Education. It is the system—the result of a growth extending over a long period—which is wrong. Nor do I blame the children. The children could be just as efficient as the children of twenty or thirty years ago if they were trained to be so.

"As an institution, I have nothing but respect and admiration for the public school system, and if I am critical it is because I believe, as some of the members of the Board of Education—including President Churchill, for whom and for whose opinions I have the highest respect—believe that criticism from men in the business world should be of practical advantage to the educators, for this reason: The latter, in large part, can observe the pupils only as they are being prepared for the future; the business man can observe them after they have been sent out from the schools and are in positions where opportunities to use the training that they have acquired are offered. From these observations, employers can oftentimes suggest to educators improvements, which, in the ordinary course of events, would never come to the attention of the latter. It should be noted that in the last two years the board has begun to work along the lines of suggestions here made, but still further changes are necessary for the best practical results.

"I think that some of the difficulty comes from the idea, which seems to have found favor to a considerable extent, that the elementary schools are merely preparatory for high schools, and these for colleges. Yet that is an idea which should not, in my view, be the basis of the elementary schools, unless the community believes it wise to manage those schools in the interest of 5 per cent. of the pupils. More than 95 per cent. of the pupils of the elementary schools do not go through the high schools. That 95 per cent. might wisely, it would appear, be given the kind of education best calculated to aid them to meet life. After all, it is for life that schools are preparatory; not for institutions of learning.

"Now, what is the consequence to the public school boy and girl who comes to business unequipped? In many instances, because of a lack of knowledge of reading and writing and arithmetic, he or she is not able to hold a job where these are required. In other instances he or she fails to be given the promotion which logically should be obtained, and has to remain permanently on a low rung of the ladder. In still other instances, but in a minority, by sheer hard work and determination and ability the boy or girl makes up through courses of study while in business for the deficiencies of public school education.

"Of course, there are a considerable number of instances in which boys and girls enter business from the elementary schools adequately equipped, able to add, talk grammatically, handle a pen so that what they write can be read, and even do fractions. But the percentage who can not do these things is appallingly large, and it is on behalf of these unequipped that I speak, believing that the average boy and girl should be given a better chance in the world than the public school is making it possible for them to get.

THE TRAGEDY OF HUGO'S DAUGHTER

Great Novelist's Child, Adele, Dies in Madhouse, After Amazing Adventures, in Which New York Police Figure.

NEVER, even in the sombrest pages of "Les Misérables," did Victor Hugo describe a career so tragic and so grotesquely terrible as that of Adèle, his youngest and favorite daughter, who died in a Paris sanitarium the other day. She was 85 years old, and had been mad for many years. Many of the events that led to her insanity are mercifully shrouded in mystery, but enough is known to create profound pity for this wretched daughter of a genius.

It was in 1865, when the Hugos were in exile at Hauteville House, on the Island of Guernsey, that Adèle took the step which resulted so disastrously for her happiness. She married, against her father's wishes, an English artillery officer. As to the manner of her marriage there are several conflicting rumors.

The obituary notices of this unhappy woman have said that she was kidnapped. But the fact that she was at the time 35 years old makes that term a misnomer, unless she was so deficient mentally as to be considered a child. And the biographers of the poet say that "Dédé," as her father called her, was vivacious and intelligent.

The truth of the matter seems to be that Adèle was legally married to the English officer, according to the laws of England. But since the marriage was contracted without the consent of her parents, it was invalid in France.

Some of Hugo's biographers, unwilling to dwell upon this family tragedy, state that Adèle and her officer went to Nova Scotia, where the husband died soon after their arrival. Then, they say, the widow returned to Europe with her mind hopelessly afflicted.

Well, she did return to Europe with her mind a wreck, but not until several years had elapsed. And what happened during those years is one of the greatest mysteries of literary history—as puzzling, in its very different way, as the famous mystery of the years which Walt Whitman spent in the South before the publication of "Leaves of Grass."

Stevenson believed that the newly married couple went to Nova Scotia. But a story more worthy of credence is that they went, first of all, to India. The officer was stationed at Singapore, and there this ill-assorted pair established their home.

Rudyard Kipling, Richard Harding Davis, and many another writer have described the moral degeneration which sometimes occurs when Europeans settle in the tropics. Something of the sort seems to have brought about the ruin of this little family. The subaltern found it difficult to support his wife on his scanty pay—he had expected, it may be supposed, that her wealthy father would forgive them and provide a handsome dowry. Financial difficulties did not, however, render him thrifty; instead, they caused him to seek the oblivion of brandy and soda. Soon he had become a sodden drunkard, brutal and degraded.

The unhappy Adèle, it may be thought, as she cowered under her drink-crazed husband's blows and patched the tattered garments of her two sickly children (both of whom obtained the blessing of an early death) often longed for her father's indulgent care and for the unclouded days of her maidenhood in the queer, happy Guernsey household. Nor is it likely that she was profoundly grieved when the subaltern, after several attacks of delirium tremens, blew out his brains.

Several weeks after her husband's death Adèle was found by some English tourists in the native quarters of Singapore. She was quite mad. She was dressed in rags and covered with grime, and no one will ever know to what depths of degradation she had sunk. She had totally forgotten the officer and her dead children, but she remembered that she was Victor Hugo's daughter and informed her astonished visitors of that fact.

They had read "Les Misérables," and were eager to serve its author's daughter. So they rescued her from the unsavory natives and took her into their own home. When she had been bathed and made presentable her resemblance to Victor Hugo made her account of her parentage obviously true. So her newfound friends communicated with Victor Hugo, who at once sent to India a physician and nurses to bring his daughter back to him.

This is the orthodox version of the story. But there is a popular tradition to the effect that this mad woman of illustrious parentage was rescued not by English tourists but by American policemen, that the scene of her sordid and terrible adventures was not Singapore but New York City. It is said that a drunken and disorderly woman was arrested who, in reply to all questions, would do nothing but scream out in French and in broken English the statement that she was the daughter of Victor Hugo. From New York, according to this version of the story, she was sent back to her father's care.

It is doubtful that this story will ever be authoritatively verified or denied. It may be, of course, that the unfortunate creature made her way, by some strange means, from Singapore to New York, and that not weeks or months but years elapsed between the time of the officer's death and of Adèle's return to the parental custody. It is certain, at least, that she was for a time lost and that her parents caused the four quarters of the globe to be searched for her. The discreet silence of Victor Hugo's biographers has tended to cause their readers to exaggerate rather than to minimize the importance of this extraordinary affair.

When Victor Hugo received the wreck of his daughter, he placed her in a sanitarium at Vincennes. At first he was pathetically hopeful for her recovery. So long as he lived, he visited her regularly once a week and spent hours in the attempt to find in this frantic creature traces of his lost "Dédé."

After Victor Hugo's death it was found that August Vacquérie had been appointed guardian and trustee of Adèle. He was the brother of Charles Vacquérie, who married Adèle's sister Leopoldine and died with her in a boating accident during the honeymoon tour. Charles Vacquérie placed Adèle in the famous sanitarium at Suresnes, which was founded by the late Dr. Charcot.

In this establishment, which is in a pleasant suburb of Paris, Victor Hugo's favorite daughter spent most of her long life. Charles Vacquérie died and the guardianship of Adèle passed to Hugo's friend, Paul Maurice; Maurice died and Gustave Simon succeeded to the trust. Still Adèle lived, alternately listless and frantic, surrounded by all the aids to comfort which modern science can give a woman of great wealth—for she was a woman of great wealth. Her death has brought a tremendous fortune to those amazing persons, Jeanne Charcot and Georges Hugo who, being the children of Victor Hugo's eldest son Charles, are Adèle's niece and nephew. Adèle was the last to survive of Victor Hugo's children, and she was the principal owner of the copyrights of her father's works. In 1907 she received—or, rather, her guardian received for her—about $50,000 for the right to bring out a special cheap edition of Hugo's works. Besides the copyrights she inherited a considerable amount of money, and, of course, her only expense has been her maintenance in the sanitarium.

There, it is true, she had every luxury possible to a woman in her condition. She occupied a villa of her own within the sanitarium grounds, had a private companion whose sole duty was to attempt to amuse her, and a staff of servants in addition to the regular sanitarium attendants. She wore costly clothes, but insisted that they be made in the style fashionable at the time of her marriage. The public got occasional glimpses of her at the open-air theatre at the Pré Catalan, in the Bois de Boulogne, and in the Jardin de Acclimatation. But usually when she attended the play or the opera she sat with her companion in one of the baignoires, or lower loges, where she could not be seen. It was in this seclusion that she occasionally witnessed revivals of her father's dramas.

Adèle Hugo (since her marriage was not recognized in France she was always spoken of by her maiden name) was not so totally deprived of reason as to lose all desire for personal artistic expression. During the long days at Suresnes she frequently attempted to compose an opera, but her mental disease kept her from any sustained effort in this direction. She was able, however, sometimes to play on the piano snatches of compositions learned during her happy childhood.

Adèle was the godchild of Sainte-Beuve, the illustrious critic who was once Victor Hugo's close friend and later, according to literary gossip, his rival in the affections of Mme. Hugo. She was born in July, 1830, in the wild days of the Revolution which bears the name of that month. "Hernani," that most amazing of all Hugo's plays, was produced in that year before huge crowds of its friends and enemies, who applauded and hissed in violent competition. It was just at this time that the great author exchanged the Royalist enthusiasms of his youth for the Republicanism which grew more extreme and fantastic as the years went on. In the following year Hugo locked himself up in his study with a large bottle of ink, a pen, and many reams of paper and produced, in a fabulously short time, "Notre Dame de Paris."

Writers usually have picturesque households, if tradition is to be believed, but surely there have seldom been stranger environments than that in which Adèle Hugo grew to womanhood. There have come down to us amazing stories of the Hugo ménage after the exile to Jersey and later to the Island of Guernsey. The great poet and novelist had forsaken the religion of his youth, but he was a firm believer in spiritism and spent much of his time in "table-turning."

Hauteville House was beautifully furnished, with furniture and tapestries which Victor Hugo himself had gathered from the capitals of Europe. There the poet lived with his children and his devoted wife. But near by was a pleasant little house in which dwelt his famous mistress, Juliette Drouet. There was nothing clandestine about this arrangement; "Mme. Drouet," as she was called, was on the friendliest of terms with Mme. Hugo and the little Hugos. Victor Hugo, of course, was at work every day, (he completed "Les Misérables" at Guernsey,) his elder son was writing novels, his younger son was translating Shakespeare, and his wife was writing her fragmentary biography of him.

Victor Hugo was perhaps the first to utter, as he was certainly the first to emphasize, the phrase "the rights of the child." The enemy of discipline and subordination, it is unlikely that he spent much time in the moral instruction of his children. It is unlikely that he did more than to urge upon them the importance of liberty and the brotherhood of man, and to trust his wife to keep them from disturbing his literary labors.

There is one phase of the life of the Hugo family on Guernsey which forcibly suggests Barrie's play "The Admirable Crichton." Every Thursday all the children of the neighborhood—most of them being of peasant blood—were invited to Hauteville House, where they were given a meal, entertained with games in the garden, and sent home with presents. In order to emphasize his theories of social equality, Victor Hugo caused his wife and children to serve the tables at which these poor little guests dined, and he himself assisted in this somewhat histrionic act of charity. Sir James Matthew Barrie may have had this custom in mind when he wrote the first act of his delightful comedy.

Victor Hugo's children, brought up in these fantastic surroundings, were destined to tragedy, though it would perhaps be going too far to say that all their misfortunes were due to their training, or lack of training. And even in the third generation startling eccentricity appears. The inheritors of Adèle's great fortune, Jeanne and Georges, are the children of Victor Hugo's eldest son, Charles, who was Lamartine's secretary. Jeanne married Léon Daudet, the son of the famous novelist. They were divorced after a few years of marriage and Jeanne's brother, Georges, took sides with Daudet against his sister. On one occasion he publicly insulted her at the Comédie Française, and was thoroughly beaten in the foyer of the theatre by her second husband, Dr. Jean Charcot.

Georges Hugo is now living in Florence, and his only source of income for several years has been an allowance doled out to him by Gustave Simon on behalf of poor, old, crazy Adèle. One condition of his receiving this money has been his staying away from France, and it is likely that he will return to the country of his nativity now that he has come into his fortune. To the amusement of his fellow-countrymen, he has adopted the title of Count, apparently with no vestige of a right to do so. In fact, his grandfather was particularly fond of flaunting his peasant origin in the face of the world.

Georges has had an exciting, though not very creditable, career. He was at one time a member of the French Navy, which he was obliged to leave because of misconduct. He married a wealthy woman, Mlle. Pauline Menard-Dorian, squandered most of her fortune and abused her abominably. She divorced him.

One of his most notorious escapades was in connection with a suit brought against him by a great Parisian merchant for goods furnished to a fashionable married woman whose lover he was at one time. He had indorsed the lady's account with a definite written promise to pay. He gave as his reason for refusing to pay the bill a statement that he was no longer on terms of intimacy with her, and urged that his responsibility for the account was an immoral obligation and therefore could not be enforced by law.

There are other members of the Hugo family in existence—Georges' two children, for example, who are in the custody of their mother, and Clementine Hugo, the illegitimate daughter of Leopold, Georges' nephew. Clementine, who calls herself the Countess Hugo, is now serving a long sentence in an Italian prison.

in the curriculum of the elementary or high schools.

At the Tenth International Congress of Art Historians, which met in Rome in October, 1912, Professor E. Baldwin Smith of Princeton reported that out of the 400 colleges teaching the liberal arts for a period of four years only ninety-five offer courses in the history of art, and only sixty-eight maintain a special chair of art history and archaeology. To this list Columbia University must now be added, Mr. Hugo Reisinger having bequeathed to it $1,000,000 to establish a chair of art history. Thus of the 1,000,000 students in the American colleges and universities only 163,000 have the advantage offered of an art course, and a still smaller number the privilege of adequate departments in this field. As it is, only a small portion avail themselves of these privileges where they exist. How to bring the university into closer touch with the arts and interest a larger number of advanced students in the public questions connected with the fine arts is another matter for inquiry at the forthcoming convention.

Concerning the industrial arts The Survey brings out the following facts: In The American Art Annual for 1914 is a list of seventeen schools of industrial art, and thirty-five in which the handicrafts are taught, with seventy in which classes in design are conducted. The total enrollment amounts to something over 4,000. The largest of these schools is the Pennsylvania School of Industrial Art, with over 1,200 students. More than 11,000 students have passed through this school in the last ten years, and it is calculated that at least 75 per cent. of the number have found lucrative employment along the lines of the instruction given. "I would say," writes the head of the Art Department of the school, "that practically all of those who really desired to find employment and qualified themselves are occupied and earning a reasonable compensation."

At previous meetings of the American Federation of Arts attention has been called by Ralph Adams Cram and Lloyd Warren to the need of trained workers in the industrial arts in this country, especially those arts allied to architecture, and to the fact that the majority of these workers at the present time are foreign born. From the manufacturers it is learned that there is a great scarcity of capable American designers with an adequate knowledge of technical processes, and that for this reason American manufacturers are not able to compete with those abroad. At present there are no public schools of industrial art in the country, although classes in industrial art have been established quite recently by the School Board in New York City.

In her monograph for the Bureau of Education Miss Levy says that art education as a whole in the United States lacks co-ordination, and suggests that we seem to have begun at the wrong end by having many schools for academic art in contrast to few for industrial art. She proposes the following scheme of art education: Drawing in the elementary schools as a means of developing appreciation; technical ability to be gained in the secondary schools; industrial art schools to develop design for specialized uses and to teach mastery of technical processes, and academic schools for the few showing unusual talent. A revision of the present system unquestionably is necessary, if we are to utilize the talent of the public school pupils in the practical ways that open on all sides to skilled craftsmen and designers. It will be interesting to get the expert opinions that no doubt will be expressed on the occasion of the convention.

Point will be added to the discussion by the exhibition to open in Washington at the time of the convention. This exhibition will consist of examples of American industrial art and design assembled under the auspices of the American Federation of Arts and the United States National Museum, with the co-operation of the leading manufacturers and makers of the country. The showing will be extensive and should stimulate interest in education directed toward activity in this field. The four leading tapestry makers of the country are to occupy the foyer of the museum building. There will be work in silver, bronze and stained glass, pottery, upholstery, rugs, lace, linen, wallpaper, wood carving, jewelry, furniture.

A Modernist Exhibition.

It seems a long step from industrial art as taught in the schools to the highly synthetic art of the modernists, but it is a step easily taken. Nothing is clearer concerning the work of the modernists than its essentially decorative character. The present exhibition at the Montross Galleries lays special emphasis on decoration. Mr. Davies's large composition hovers between complete abstraction and the associative values which he formerly brought into his work with much discretion. It is decoration, and the use of darting poignant color on a neutral ground is admirably understood. Nevertheless, one feels that the scale is somewhat large for the design. It is not a design that can spread over so large a surface without loss of significance. There are spaces that say nothing. Elmer L. MacRae has tried the experiment of covering a decorative panel so intricately and with so much concern for the flatness of the surface plane that a picture could be hung against it as against a well-designed wallpaper and not fail in its effect. Possibly Mr. MacRae thinks the designing of such a panel "higher art" than the designing of wallpaper, but our respect for him forbids our thinking so, and the mind may be permitted to dwell on the exquisite pleasure he could give to hundreds of people if he would develop his work in the direction of industrial design. It has the same blithe, delightful charm that informs the industrial designs of one or two of the modern French artists, those of Georges d'Espagrat in particular. In some of the exhibits a rare quality of humor is displayed. George Overbury Hart is keenly and somewhat cynically witty in his bowling alley, and contrastingly tender in his treatment of a little Samoan girl, whose innocent profile he has done in water color. His attitude toward the island types that lured Gauguin and John La Farge to opposing interpretations has a charm due to its casualness. Other pictures are by Walt Kuhn, Morgan Russell, Charles B. Sheeler, Charles H. Walther, William Glackens, Maurice Prendergast, Henry Fitch Taylor, (who also is delightfully witty in "The Blue Tap Room,") and Maurice Sterne. A number of the things have been seen before, but they repay study.

The Architect and Country Life.

An article in The Craftsman places the responsibility of a return to country life with the architects. It says:

"If we are to turn the tide of progress outward from the cities, if we are to seek release from our cramped streets and darkened windows and find health and happiness among the fields and woods and in gardens of our own making, then it must be with the assurance that our new home and those of our neighbors not only will be in a beautiful environment, but will be beautiful in themselves from an architectural point of view.

"To accomplish, as individuals and as a nation, this wonderful return to country living, we must look to the architect. In his skill and sympathetic vision, even more than in our own eager desires, lies the successful solution of this great modern problem. He must help us to shake ourselves free from the shackles of city environment and traditions, and emerge from the narrow chrysalis of our walled-in lives into a freer and more wholesome existence. Only through his technical knowledge and wise co-operation can we hope to achieve the sort of homes that will make rural life really worth while.

"An important rôle, therefore, will undoubtedly be played by the architect during the next few years in furthering to success the country-life movement. His mission is indeed a vital one, for when country homes are made both convenient and aesthetically satisfying, when architectural loveliness is found not merely in the rare, isolated dwelling, but in whole groups and colonies of homes, country living will be invested with a new charm."

THE ART OF EXHIBITING ART

at Home and Abroad

The Question of Art Education in Schools and Colleges to be Taken Up by American Federation of Arts

THE exhibition season for art schools and art classes has opened and seems to offer renewed opportunity for constructive criticism. The principal defect apparent to the experienced observer is found in the department of publicity. We are not apt to think of our institutions of learning as particularly shrinking from public notice, and nothing probably is further from the intention of those furthering their cause. Nevertheless the public knows practically nothing of the really important work carried on in the art courses of public and private schools and in the special schools dedicated to teaching art. Theoretically it knows something, though little, but practically, in a way, that is, to connect it with actual use and experience, it knows nothing.

There are exhibitions, of course, any number of them. They are arranged, in many instances rather hurriedly, from the most creditable work performed during the school year, and one in fairness must admit with more and more attention to proper mounting and spacing of the individual exhibits, but very seldom in a way to make the visiting public see the reason for the existence of the work into which so many valuable hours and so much fresh interest have been put.

Pictures and designs are shown on panels of screens or on wall spaces objects are shown in cases, many of a kind together, and the visitor passes from one to another, the receptive sense becoming steadily more dull and tired until the last things seen, which very well may be the best things, swim in a blur of impressions in which they have no defined place and from which it is impossible to detach them. This is not true of the school exhibitions alone, but of the arts and crafts exhibitions as well, of nearly all exhibitions except a few arranged by private decorators or clubs for commercial or charitable purposes.

To a certain extent the repetitive effect is inevitable in exhibitions of paintings, drawings, and sculpture—what may be called the academic exhibitions. In the case of the industrial and decorative arts it is neither necessary nor expedient, as the exhibition thus arranged does not exhibit. It only places objects in an environment for which they should never have been intended and in which they play no genuine part.

Pratt Institute is now holding its annual exhibition of the excellent work done in its School of Fine and Applied Arts. A general education in color and form problems is attempted and achieved in this school, and the pupils pass through a varied experience in applying their knowledge to different problems. In consequence an unusually wide range is covered by the annual exhibition, which is tastefully arranged after the usual exhibition fashion, with something more than the usual attention to harmonious and appropriate grouping of the exhibits. The attentive visitor will notice individual objects of a decidedly high order of craftsmanship and will be delighted that our American students can produce in their formative years work of such workmanlike character. But the effect of such interesting and attractive handiwork, upon his own home, upon the homes of his neighbors, upon the social and personal life of the community, probably does not occur to him.

Now let us see what would be the result of a logical plan of exhibition in the showing of all this material. If we should take over even one floor of one of the thirteen buildings of which the institute is now composed and cut it up into model rooms such as you may see in almost any large and enterprising decorating establishment or department store, if we should furnish these rooms to the most important and least important detail with the work of the students, if we should not admit anything that was not the work of the students, we should know just where we stood in a practical sense. The public also would be saved the labor of constructive imagination. It would no longer be obliged to look at a book-end or a mirror frame and from these segregated bones of house decoration reconstruct the corner and room and house in which they might appropriately be placed. The gain for both student and public would be great.

Chalk Portrait of Verhaeren, by J. S. Sargent, to be Sold for the Red Cross Fund at the Knoedler Gallery.

First, and possibly most important, the student would be roused to a sense of the multitudinous variety of uses to which his trained sense of color and form and his skill of hand may be put in the furnishing of the most commonplace and unambitious home. The different departments of Pratt Institute produce a surprisingly large number of things necessary to pleasant family life in the box that for most of us constitutes our home. There would be chairs and tables and bookcases and footstools, curtains, forks, and at least one knife, a salt cellar, trays, and vases, and of course book-ends and many other articles in daily use in a family of moderate fortunes. But even with so effective a school as this there would be extremely queer lapses and empty spots in an exhibition arranged on the logical principle. There would be no doorknobs, no door keys perhaps, no drawer-pulls, no door plates or gate plates for a country house, no reading stands, no bird cages, no dog or cat baskets, no writing desks, no beds, no glassware of consequence. It is pertinent enough to object that a craftsman who could make a thoroughly satisfactory pair of book-ends could do other work in wood with equal efficiency, and so on. But that is not the point. Of course it is true, but the public does not know it. What the householder needs in order to become deeply interested in American art is to see its immediate application to himself.

If instead of having to pick up these charming objects with his mind and transport them to an imagined place in a room suited to harbor them he could see them as integral parts of a room already constructed and furnished, swept and garnished, he would more easily learn to recognize in them the personal element differentiating them from similar objects made, by machinery and turned out in battalions. He would see that a room in which they played an important part must possess variety in unity, that appealing quality which is like the agreeable play of light and shade over a delicately modulated surface. He would realize that furnishing houses with objects into which not only the personal choice of the buyer entered, but the personal choice of the maker as well, means making of a house, that human thing we call a home, eloquent of feeling and thought, with a genuine hold upon its occupants. And if he were intelligent and reflective he would consider that such homes are not so readily uprooted and torn apart as the commerce-ridden habitation; that they help toward permanent forces in a community, and toward that hearthside sentiment which is supposed to have departed altogether from our fluctuating and restless population.

No one exhibition of the work of students of industrial art could be expected to accomplish a great deal, but the exhibition method outlined is one that might be adopted with advantage by all schools where industrial art is taught, and also by all societies of graduated and experienced craftsmen. It is the only one that will show the public just what is meant by American craftsmanship, and the modern public expects to be shown. Mere telling fails to answer the purpose.

The work of the Pratt Institute pupils lends itself admirably to the carrying out of such an exhibition ideal. It is penetrated by that fine discrimination in the use of color, that sense of balance and measure, that command of tempered sensations, which may be taught to sensitive minds, and which are the basis of the kind of art with which one likes to live intimately. The idea of intimate association, and the kind of training that enhances enjoyment of home surroundings, always has been at the basis of the teaching at Pratt. The pleasure taken by the pupils in their work is apparent throughout the exhibition. The good result of the general training as a preparation for later specializing also is apparent. Whether a pupil becomes a wallpaper designer, a window trimmer, a metal worker, or an interior decorator, an all-around training in the principles of art variously applied is bound to help him toward his goal more effectively and rewardingly than strict specialization. In the exhibition are a number of the convenient trays that have come into prompt popularity with the increase of outdoor lunching in Summer and porch service on divers occasions. In these trays the artists have stenciled or embroidered the silk under the glass, have made and carved the wood frames, and have designed and made the copper handles. The result is naturally harmonious and full of true artistic feeling. The fans also are made, mounted, and the sticks carved by one craftsman. The same unity obtains in other articles which are understood in all their detail by the maker. It may fairly be assumed that when the institute decides upon its ideally practical exhibition and directs the work of its students during the school year toward providing material that will cover the whole field of house decoration, a very important step will have been taken toward making the competency of our young industrial designers and craftsmen known to the public.

Exhibition of Industrial Art Must Be Given Appropriate Settings to Interest the General Public

Art Education.

The question of making artists, designers, and craftsmen of the raw material entering the schools is even more important than that of exhibiting the work the students do after they are educated, or during their course of study. The American Federation of Arts has sent out a brief statistical survey of art education in this country, containing facts and deductions to be considered and discussed at the convention in Washington next week. From a recent report prepared by Miss Levy, editor of The Art Annual, for the Bureau of Education, it is learned that 109 schools of academic art at present exist in the United States, with a total enrollment of 6,252 students. These schools are intended for the training of painters, sculptors, and illustrators, and make no provision for students of industrial art. Statistics furnished by some of the directors show that only about 1 per cent. of those receiving this professional training actually become professional artists, the others either abandoning the profession or drifting without more special training into the commercial arts.

In a bulletin on the present status of drawing and art in the elementary and secondary schools in the United States, prepared by Royal Bailey Farnum, Specialist in Drawing and Handwork, Albany, N. Y., it is stated that at present drawing is taught in the public high schools in every State in the Union, and in the elementary schools in every State except Delaware, but that it is not in every instance a required course. In twelve States the teaching of drawing is required by law. The subject is at present taught with the object of increasing appreciation, rather than developing special talent. The general improvement of taste and interest in art throughout the country is thought to be due in part at least to the teaching in the public schools. Whether this public school training is as well directed as it might be is one of the questions offered for discussion. There is at present no public school of industrial art in the United States, nor is the history of art generally included

A SOURCE OF INNOCENT MERRIMENT

Some people impress us as having so much good in them that it's too bad they can't let a little of it out.

The trouble with many a self-made man is that he is not quite finished.

It's a poor rule that won't work both ways in our favor.

It's a well trained conscience that can be made to speak only when it is spoken to.

Many a fellow cultivates his faults in the hope that some girl will marry him to reform him.

The man who boasts that his will is law loses sight of the fact that lots of laws are not enforced.

Excused!

A SOUTHERNER tells a story of a colored servant in his employ named Jasper. "One morning, after I had given him some instructions about his work, he said suddenly:

"'Maasa, dey had me up befoah my church las ninght fur tangoin.'"

"'Well,' I replied, 'I don't suppose you were guilty—were you, Jasper?'

"'Yas, suh; yas, suh! I was guilty ob tangoin', and dey proved it on me, too; but I come out ob it all clear, suh. My friends stuck to me close; and, after dem other niggers had done testified ag'in me, my friends all got up and testified dat I had tangoed but was so drunk at de time I didn't know whut I was doin'. SMALL Johnny was wriggling and twisting in a vain endeavor to put his arms through the sleeves of an undergarment and then get it over his head. After several futile attempts he called out to his mother:

"Say, mamma, when I get to be an angel, and have wings, I don't see how I'll ever get my shirt on!"

Once Was Enough.

A LAWYER friend of mine is responsible for this story," said a well-known playwright, "and vouches for its veracity.

"One morning, he picked his way to the edge of an excavation and called down for Timothy Gilhooly. 'Who's wantin' me?' queried a voice.

"'I am,' said the lawyer, 'it is my duty to inform you that your Aunt Mary has died in the old country, leaving you an estate of thirty thousand dollars in cash.'

"For about eight months Mr. Gilhooly, in a high hat and patent shoes, lived a life of elegant ease, trying to cure himself of a great thirst. Then back again he went to his old job at one-seventy-five a day. Shortly after, the lawyer again appeared and found him hard at work.

"'Mr. Gilhooly,' he said, 'I've more good news for you. There's another fortune for you. Your Uncle Michael is dead in the old country. He has left you another thirty thousand.'

"'Indade, thin, Oi don't think Oi'll take it,' said Gilhooly, leaning wearily on his pick. 'Oi'm not as sthrong as Oi wance was; and Oi'm doubtin' if Oi could go through all that agin and live!'"

Taking No Chances.

HUSBAND was home that afternoon, and when wife told him that she expected a party of guests, he made haste to put away all the umbrellas in the hall.

Surprised, the wife asked: "Do you fear my guests will steal your umbrellas?"

"No, dearie," said he, "but that they will recognize them."

Ornamental.

A LITTLE boy applied to a society woman for a place in her estate.

"What is your father?" asked the woman.

"He's me fadder," was the reply.

"Yes, I know that," said the woman, "but what is he?"

"Oh! Why, he's me stepfadder, mum."

"Yes, yes, said the woman impatiently, "but what does he do? Does he drive motor cars, or work in a factory, or what?"

"Oh, I see, mum," said the small applicant eagerly, with dawning light of comprehension, "No, he ain't done nothin' since we've had him."

THE HOME TEAM

I HATE to see the home team lose;
A contest dropped gives me the blues;
But when they win—they sometimes do!—
I go home happy, same as you.

Yet, after all, why should I care
Because nine men from everywhere—
Except the town in which I live—
Have acted as a human sieve
Through which the red-hot ones have poured
Like water through a leaky gourd?

And why should I bemoan the fact
That nine strong men have whacked and whacked
The Summer air in vain desire
To make a showing for their hire?—
Nine men I scarcely know by sight
And might not recognize tonight.

Why mourn because some other town
Has scoured the earth and found one Brown
Who throws a zigzag ball that jolts
Like lubricated thunderbolts,
While our man's curves drift o'er the plate
In manner tempting unto fate?

Yea, verily, why should I fret?
'Tis naught to me, and yet—and yet,
If you'd but seen the awful way
In which our team behaved today!

Misunderstood

A TRAVELING salesman heard of a circus in a place down the Mississippi River about four miles. The steamboat had left and there was no rig to be had. He went to the river, where he found a darky sitting in a skiff.

"That your boat?" he asked the darky.

"Yassuh."

"Want to hire it out?"

"Yassuh."

"How much for the afternoon? I want to go to the circus."

"'Bout fo' bits, Suh."

"All right. Can you row?"

"What's dat?"

"Can you row?"

"No, boss, I can't do nuthin' like dat."

"Well, confound it, get in the stern there. You can do that, can't you?"

"Yassuh."

Whereupon the drummer took the oars and after he had rowed about two miles against the current was tuckered out.

Throwing down the oars, he exclaimed: "I can't pull this boat another inch. I don't care if I never get to that circus. You are a fine boatman not to be able to row."

The negro gazed at the salesman with increasing intelligence. "Does yo' mean yo' wanted me to pull them oars, boss?"

"Sure, I do. I asked if you could row and you said you couldn't."

"'Deed, boss," said the darky, "I thought yo' done ast me could I roah—roah lak a lion."

A Hard Proposition.

THERE was a Brigadier General in the civil war who was so earnest in his religious efforts that in a short time he had converted every man in the brigade except one hardened teamster. Going to his commander one day this man said, solemnly:

"General, I am lonesome. Every man in the camp has been converted except me. I suppose it's the right thing, but I don't see how I can manage it."

"Why, my good fellow," said the General, "I see no difficulty in the way of it, if you will just surrender your own will and ask for guidance."

"That's jest it, General," said the teamster. "If I am converted, who in blazes is goin' to drive them mules?"

A CLERICAL-LOOKING man, bearing an armful of tracts, recently visited an office with a view to seeking out unregenerate ones.

A UNITED RUSSIA

Professor Wiener Describes Remarkable Result, Long Desired by the Russian Government, That Was Produced in a Few Weeks by Germany

AN INTERPRETATION OF THE RUSSIAN PEOPLE. By Leo Wiener, Professor of Slavic Languages and Literatures, Harvard University. New York: McBride, Nast & Co. $1.25.

THE present war has united Russia as has nothing else since the Napoleonic invasion, and the result that the Russian Government has been unable to accomplish in a century "Germany has produced in a few weeks."

So declares Professor Wiener, himself a Russian by birth and education, with an intimate acquaintance of his native land, in a book notable for its close thinking, scholarly handling, wide vision, information, and general interest, in which the author surveys the chief characteristics of "the great and gifted Russian people, the latest in Europe to carry high the banner of modern civilization."

Yet, united as Russia is today, Mr. Wiener is quite certain that this unity of purpose in war does not mean, when peace comes, a change in the struggle for Russian freedom and the emancipation of the masses, a cessation of disunion and of the clash of opposing forces, unless the extremely improbable happens and the Government of autocracy "for once" becomes wise; unless the Government learns the lesson which is obvious in the present unity bred by war—that it is well for the governing class to have an undivided people back of it, and that it is better for the Government's own interests to have that unity than to force the people into hatred of their rulers, as has been the case in the ante-bellum days.

Has the spirit of revolutionary Russia been changed by the war? asks Mr. Wiener. Has a complete political metamorphosis taken place, in consequence of the contemporary unity, so that Russian minds accept as good the autocratic form of rule, so that they wish no more to have a larger measure of freedom, a wider and brighter horizon? By no means. Have the laborers forgotten their strikes and their political ideals? Not in the least. The old elements in the life of the nation are ready to go on again in the same old way of hostility and hatred when the war ends, if the Government does not itself have sense enough to learn lessons from the war and give to its subjects the wider freedom and additional advantages they demand.

Then what has united Russia in this amazing way? War, is the reply. But why should war do it? Because in this war the Russian people are giving expression to the identical love of freedom which is at the foundation of disunion in times of peace. The Russian people see clearly, holds the author, that the Prussian autocracy, if Germany wins, "would be a source of far greater danger to the Russian Nation than the brutal, but unorganized, tyranny of the Romanovs." Thus it is that the Russian masses unite with their own tyrants to defeat a tyranny which is far worse, because of its amazing organization, for, if the German system were imposed on Russians, "all possibility of real liberties would vanish for a century." Mr. Wiener goes on to make this prophecy:

> If Russia is victorious it will return to the chaotic state which preceded the war, and the nation must ultimately win those individualistic liberties which have constantly cropped out even under the most crushing oppression. It is doubtful whether a revolution will ever accomplish this, but it is evident that the constitutional ideas, which in the beginning of the nineteenth century found a lodging only among a small band of officers and intellectuals, now are understood and propagated among the workingmen and students at large, and the revolts of the peasants and mutinies of the soldiers of the last decade show that the Government's dependence on Hooligans and subservient minions will not save it from annihilation.

Elsewhere Professor Wiener also emphasizes his belief that the winning of Russian liberty is not destined to be accomplished by a revolution of the masses—"the possibility of a successful revolution from below is still very remote"—but there is to be seen a distinct movement in the direction of the peasants' intellectual emancipation, "and this presages a far more powerful revolution than the one aiming at mere political liberty." The future of Russia, he says, is to be decided not by the intellectuals or by officials, but by the peasants. He writes:

> When reformers will once come to see that their only hope of saving the country lies in giving the masses that education which they themselves need and want, and not that which the theoreticians want to foist upon them for their own advantages, they will lay the foundation for that greatness which is certainly in store for Russia.

Elsewhere Professor Wiener declares that one great lesson of the war is that universal education and culture are not a panacea for all ills, but he is there introducing the subject of the iron-bound, State-controlled, highly organized system of Prussian education, and is not dealing with the illumination of soul and mind which comes with the shedding of some general light of education upon vast masses now in darkest ignorance.

As far as intellectualism, used in a restricted sense, is concerned, Professor Wiener records the debt of Russia to Germany, and remarks that Russia, "even more than any other country, owes its intellectualism to German science and philosophy."

In his consideration of Russian characteristics, Mr. Wiener is emphatic in upholding the theory that "geography is a more potent factor in preserving basic characteristics than is nationality or race." Thus he points out that, though France has undergone violent and many changes since the days of Caesar, the attributes of the Gauls as described by the Roman conqueror are essentially the attributes of the French today.

So, too, of the Germans. Caesar's description of the Germans of his day is, says Mr. Wiener, "mutatis mutandis, true of the modern Prussians" and goes on to quote Caesar thus:

> Their whole life is addicted to hunting and war, and from infancy they are inured to fatigue and hardships. * * * They think it an argument of valor to expel their neighbors, and suffer none to settle near them. * * * Robbery has nothing infamous in it, when committed without the territories of the State to which they belong; they even pretend that it serves to exercise their youth and prevent the growth of sloth. When any of their Princes in this case offers himself publicly in council as a leader, such as approve of the expedition rise up, profess themselves ready to follow him, and are applauded by the whole multitude.

Professor Wiener then puts the query whether these statements do not explain, better than any "White Papers" or utterances of Bernhardi and Treitschke, "the reasons which actuate the Germans in the present, as well as any other war."

As the geographic situation has affected in much the same way through the centuries the various inhabitants of France and Germany, so has the geographic situation affected in much the same way through the ages the inhabitants of Russia, and Mr. Wiener goes on to give this picture:

> Neither the organization of the State, nor the Christian religion, nor the highest development of the sciences and the arts, has in the least obliterated the Celtic and the German soul. How much more must this be the case with the Russians, who have suffered more than any other European nation from the geographic factor, who have been so far removed from the foci of civilization that Greek and Roman culture and the activities of the mediaeval West have but faintly and at a very belated time penetrated the country, never affecting the masses deeply, and leaving them to their elemental forces!
> Here paganism and barbarism have survived until our own day, strangely mingling with the highest achievements of the human mind. Meekness and brutality, communism and the most advanced individualism, the strongest State and the weakest political consciousness, absence of race hatred and the most cruel "pogroms," the deepest religious nature and the most abject superstition, an all-pervading democracy and the most absolute monarchy, all these and more contradictions are the result of this unique jostling of mythical antiquity and stark reality—an eternal and inextricable enigma to the Western observer. Hence the totally contradictory valuations which are found in books on Russia, on the basis of the same data.

The chief trouble with the political situation of Russia, in the belief of the author, is that the Government has turned to Prussia for a model in State managing, the Government accordingly being "essentially Prussian" in its policy, while it depends in large measure—or has so depended in the past—upon German officials to carry into effect its brutal decrees. The Russian Government, Professor Wiener holds, is "as stupid as it is brutal." Had it turned from the Prussian model of government, the rulers of Russia would long ago have been successful in uniting the nation.

Mr. Wiener remarks that the Russian people have no racial prejudices whatever, although Russians strongly dislike those Germans who have been in Russian official service. German farmers and merchants have won the liking of the masses because of their efficiency and progressive methods, but the liking can seldom be said to be love.

As for the Jews, the author declares that no antipathy is felt for them either by the intellectuals or the masses. He says that examination of the treatment of the Jews indicates that "the bloodthirsty policy of the Russian Government against the Jews was directly inaugurated by the German von Plehve in the service of Russian autocracy."

In discussing the national ideals of Russian literature, Professor Wiener remarks that the peculiar genius of the Russian people is the bringing of its literature into direct relation to life and the abandonment of traditional canons. After reviewing the work of some of the master writers of Russia, Mr. Wiener says that "wherever we turn, we have some aspect of the great literature of pity, which is distinctly an outward manifestation of the crude, superstitious, unthinking, but essentially Christian attitude of the Russian masses."

A NEW SOUTH AMERICA

Professor Ross Furnishes a Study Delightfully Aloof from Traditional Lines in His Record of Recent Travel South of Panama

SOUTH OF PANAMA. By Edward Alsworth Ross, Ph. D., LL. D., Professor of Sociology, University of Wisconsin. New York: The Century Company.

IN the preface to his really admirable book Professor Ross tells of an American Consul who remarked when he heard that the professor was going to write about the South American republics:

"No doubt you will always bear in mind that it is the traditional policy of the United States to cultivate their friendship."

"I have done nothing of the sort!" is the pithy comment to this by the author. In it is the key to the whole book.

Professor Ross gives us a new South America. He has eschewed the usual enthusiastic descriptions of scenery and costumes and architecture, eschewed also the conventional tirades against dirt and slow trains and bad hotels and the "mañana" habit. Instead he tries hard to get at the real South America and the real South Americans, to show not only their shortcomings but the causes underlying them.

In addition to this, Professor Ross is a first-class writer, one of those who make whatever they touch readable. Small wonder that the result is a book which for scholarly study and literary charm has had no rival for a long time except James Bryce's excellent work. So far removed is Professor Ross's work from the average superficial and unsatisfactory record of travel in South America that it may be truthfully said that any reader closing it, if asked to give Professor Ross's itinerary, instead of saying "he went from Panama to Peru, from there to Chile, then over the Andes and through the Argentine," would be inclined to give it somewhat like this: "He went from the caste system to the moral standing of the various republics, and then, after spending some time on education and religion, he wound up with an interesting journey through the political situation."

It must not be thought that because Professor Ross recognizes the faults of South American civilization he is unsympathetic to its people and incapable of understanding the handicaps against which they labor. Far from it. He does not believe that North Americans are per se superior to their neighbors of the south; environment, he thinks, had a great deal to do with our advance and with South American backwardness.

"The one certainty in approaching South American politics is that they cannot possibly be like those of the United States," writes Professor Ross. And again:

> It would be unpardonable for us ever to be puffed up because we enjoy better social and civic health than is usual in South America. If our forefathers had found here precious metals and several millions of agricultural Indians our social development would have resembled that of the people that grew up in New Spain. Not race accounts for the contrast in destiny between the two Americas, nor yet the personal virtues of the original settlers, but circumstances.

Over and over again Professor Ross's pages show how closely he has studied his field, how conscientiously he has sought to explain it. One interesting theory touched upon by him is that the slowness of South America—or most of it—to advance along the road of progress is due, in part, to the fact that, under Spanish domination, there was a continual influx of pure white Spaniards, who, whatever their faults, were a good element, whereas now affairs are given over entirely to natives of a stock which, having suffered from the enervating climate for generations, is not capable of governing and developing the country as well as those looked upon by them as oppressors.

In the province of education he calls attention to defects in the South American character which have been corrected, as a rule, only where foreign pedagogues have helped out. Professor Ross talked with one enlightened South American, who said:

> The Latin is so fond of the theory of whatever he undertakes to do that he is apt to lose sight of the concrete. He will work out elaborate plans for an educational system—course of study, scheme of examinations and promotions, and all that—but loses sight of that simple concrete thing, the child, for whom the system exists and whom it must fit. * * *
> You Americans let the theory of a thing * * * develop little by little out of your experiences in dealing with the concrete.

S. F. B. MORSE

Telegraph Inventor's Letters and Journals

SAMUEL F. B. MORSE: HIS LETTERS AND JOURNALS. Edited and supplemented by his son, Edward Lind Morse. Illustrated. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company. Two volumes. $3.50.

SO completely has Professor Morse's invention of the telegraph overshadowed his other work that the world has half forgotten that he painted portraits of such men as President Monroe, Henry Clay, Lafayette, and Thorwaldsen. That he was an artist of some permanent merit is indicated by the fact that the Metropolitan Museum still treasures some of his canvases. Yet these portraits he regarded as mere pot-boilers. Just a century ago he wrote from London to his parents:

> Had I no higher thoughts than being a first-rate portrait painter I would have chosen a far different profession. My ambition is to be among those who shall revive the splendor of the fifteenth century, to rival the genius of a Raphael, a Michael Angelo, or a Titian; my ambition is to be enlisted in the constellation of genius now rising in this country.

Two things the artist-inventor's son has accomplished in these rather bulky volumes; He has given the first adequate account of his father's artistic career, and he has established beyond cavil that Morse and no other invented the electric telegraph. The latter half of the work, which deals with the invention, is less interesting than the earlier chapters, however, because it has to deal so largely with the dust of forgotten controversies.

The telegraph is so distinctly a thing of our own time that one feels a bit of surprise on being reminded that its inventor was born in Charlestown, Mass., when George Washington was President, and that he was a rising young artist in London, studying under Washington Allston during the war of 1812. There, too, he met the veteran American artist, Benjamin West, who, pointing to a picture of George III., said: "The King was sitting to me for that portrait when the box containing the American Declaration of Independence was handed to him." Young Morse had intimate glimpses of Coleridge, helped to shout "Vive le roi!" in Paris when Louis XVIII. returned to the throne, and was dining in London with Wilberforce the night the victory of Waterloo was announced.

After several years of study he returned to America, married happily, and began the long, heartbreaking, and never very successful struggle to make a living as a painter. By 1825 he had won sufficient reputation to be chosen by the City of New York to paint the full-length portrait of Lafayette which still hangs in the City Hall. He was working on this when the sudden death of his wife occurred. That was the first tragedy of his life.

The second, marking the death of his hopes as an artist, did not come until 1837, when he was 46 years old. He had applied for a commission to paint one of the four large panels in the rotunda of the Capitol at Washington and was on a fair way to get it when his impulsive friend, J. Fenimore Cooper, defeated his chances by means of an open letter on his behalf, which offended the powers at Washington. His name was rejected, and the episode left him discouraged and stunned. The loss of that coveted commission drove him to abandon painting and devote himself to his invention. The road in that direction was no less rocky, but it led to a fame which he never could have approached as an artist.

Controversies as to Professor Morse's right to be known as the inventor of the telegraph have persisted to the present day, but these volumes ought to end them forever. One illustration in itself is almost enough to do it—the one reproducing Morse's first drawings from his notebook of 1832 and showing the dot-and-dash alphabet and the actual arrangement of magnet and lever still used in the receiving instruments of today. The whole idea is there in embryo. It came to him in a flash on shipboard while talking to a Dr. Jackson about the mysterious ways of electricity. Twelve hard years were to intervene between that inspiration and its realization, and other men had to help, but in the presence of those primitive sketches all attempts to rob him of the chief honor fail into oblivion.

With the help of his father's journals and many new letters the son has told again the story of those years of struggle. When experimenting with his first instruments in 1837 Morse occupied a small room in the University of New York, Washington Square, where he had obtained a minor professorship. He neglected everything else for the great idea that gripped him, and at times he had not enough money to buy food. For years he prepared his own meals to save cost. All that he could earn or get others to invest went into the long, futile struggle to get some Government to try his invention. Every nation of Europe refused it—and later adopted it without saying by your leave, when its superiority had been demonstrated.

The story of the years of effort to get a small appropriation from Congress is more or less familiar, but one still finds a thrill in the dramatic suspense of those fateful hours of 1844 when the bill appropriating $30,000 for the experiment hung in the balance, and the weary inventor waited desperately in the Senate gallery, knowing that if it failed to pass he would have to go back to New York with only a fraction of a dollar in his pocket.

The bill passed by a close margin, the historic wire from Washington to Baltimore astonished the world, and the seedy professor whom the university janitor had sneered at became the lion of the hour. His son notes that even then he was willing to sell his invention to the American Government for $100,000. Today the existing telegraph lines would cost the Government $500,000,000. Success had come to the inventor, but it brought new troubles. The attempts of various men to seize his glory and profits kept him busy during most of his remaining years, but in the end the highest courts confirmed his rights. Those who are still curious to know what help came to him from Alfred Vail, what hindrances from F. O. J. Smith, what scientific ideas from Professor Henry, and all the other controversial points involved, will find them duly set forth here in an evident spirit of justice by his son.

These volumes, as their title implies, are made up chiefly of Morse's letters and journals, but the connective tissue supplied by the editor is an essential part of the organic whole. Edward Lind Morse has not concealed the peculiarities and occasional defects of his father. One comes upon Professor Morse's defense of slavery with a mild shock of surprise, but it is easy to see that it was of a piece with the old-fashioned piety which ruled his life. He found nothing in the Bible condemning slavery, therefore slavery was divinely approved. The total impression gained from these volumes is that of a sterling character, simple, upright, and forceful.

The only satisfactory biography of S. F. B. Morse hitherto has been the single volume by S. Irenaeus Prime, which is frequently quoted in the present work; but henceforth the "Letters and Journals" must stand as the final authority on the subject. The editor has done his work in a way that leaves nothing to be desired. EDWIN L. SHUMAN.

WAR'S NEW WEAPONS

The New York Times Review of Books:

IN what evidently purports to be a review of my book entitled "War's New Weapons," you take it upon yourself to single out a few passages with the obvious intention of forcing the ethical viewpoint upon your readers and to brand me as a pro-German. The book is not concerned with ethical or moral issues, unlike other war books, but is entirely devoted to the practical military issues of the war. Hence, it seems to me, the ethical view which you insist on is entirely misplaced, and just as uncalled for as would be an appraisement of your editorial writers based on the military standard of efficiency governing the General Staff officers of the army.

A war book that merely discusses political, ethical, and moral topics—and nine out of every ten published confine themselves to that—is easily enough appraised by the ordinary reviewer, but a war book in which the changes in the practical and technical aspects of military science are set forth as they are in "War's New Weapons" must be reviewed by a person with a comprehensive knowledge of military technique and not to use the apparent partiality in the lists as proof of your own assertion that I have allowed my sympathies to "run away" with me. Of course, you could not know that "War's New Weapons" was written in October, November, and December, being originally scheduled for Christmas publication. Neither were you supposed to know that after having finished the volume, in order to meet the publisher's wishes for holiday publication, I was prevented from making additions and alterations to the paged proofs, as the war progressed, since this would break up the form. As the war failed to stop right there it was impossible for me to catch up with it, my last sentence being penned in December. It is unfortunate that three months should elapse before the book I finished under pressure could be brought out in April, and I am astonished that you were not apprised of this intervening delay by the publishers. I trust this explanation will suffice to persuade you, as well as the readers of THE TIMES, that I am not guilty of intentional partiality to what you call the "German Cause," since the events you censure me for omitting in its favor took place after I finished writing the book. The fact that you were not informed of the intervening delay places you in an awkward position as a reviewer and me as a writer.

Had you known that the chapter on turret forts and 42-centimeter mortars was written in November, when even the best-informed authorities here were at sea in the technicalities involved, you would not have wasted space in speculating upon my attitude as being pro or anti, I feel sure. And, as to your interpretation of what you call my "sympathies," you have certainly chosen the wrong word. I have no "sympathies" whatever.

While I have no sympathies, I admire Germany, not for what she is but for what she has accomplished. I like France for what she is, Russia for what she promises to be, and England for what she has shown herself to be. I can well understand that one needs to have been born a German, which I was not, to like or even approve the efficient disciplinary methods of the German Government. The very fact that I am not attracted to the Germans themselves but merely admire their wonderful accomplishments is the premise on which "War's New Weapons" has been written. My attempt to do the Germans justice for what they have achieved in the military sense has caused you to attribute to me sympathies which I do not entertain, and it is for the purpose of correcting the false impression thereby created that I write you this letter. HROLF VON DEWITZ.

by the average reviewer. In one respect your review is justified.

You accuse me of partiality to the German cause by quoting in my list of losses only German victories and purposely omitting certain of the allied victories such as the battle off the Falkland Islands and the second North Sea raid. To this I do not plead guilty; however, I realize that saturated as you are with the ethical motive there was hardly any course left for you to pursue than will discover that I give the English credit for the Falkland engagements in unmistakable language. In fact, I devoted a page and a half to crediting the British Admiral with "tactical efficiency in rounding up and destroying an elusive enemy without much damage to his own squadron," &c. Later on I state that the "advantage was with the British, but the Germans reaped the glory." In order that this might not be misapplied, I added the following sentence, which clearly shows that it never entered my mind to belittle the British: "I do not mean to intimate by this that valor is a historical rather than an active quality in the British Navy. The dash of an English submarine below several rows of anchor-mines guarding the Dardanelles, resulting in the sinking of an obsolete Turkish battleship, proves that the British are not content with sporting the laurels of gallant traditions, but quite capable of emulating the Germans in adventuresome exploits."

having the minds of their inferiors "disturbed" by education. Good results, however, were obtained, he found, when foreign school teachers—Americans, Germans, &c.—took the young South Americans in hand.

It must be borne in mind that much of what Professor Ross says does not refer to those parts of South America to which tourists and other writers usually devote most time—Chile and Argentina. Herein, in fact, lies one of the principal merits of his book. Instead of trying to draw conclusions based entirely on conditions in those countries, the Wisconsin writer has generalized from what he saw in regions which many a writer has either skimmed over casually or not touched upon at all.

Professor Ross went up from the steaming hot Pacific port of Buenaventura to Cali, tucked far away in the interior of Colombia, a place as primitive as when it was founded by the Spaniards. He took the long journey from Guayaquil, the principal seaport of Ecuador, to Quito, its capital, through "an avenue of volcanoes," and devoted a great deal of attention to that most neglected, perhaps, of all the South American republics. He studied Lima, capital of Peru, and Cuzco, the splendid ruined metropolis of the Incas, and Arequipa, enthroned amid snow peaks, and La Paz, "as sensational as a bullfighter"; and everywhere he found food for reflection. Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, and Bolivia are, in some ways, utterly different from their more pushing neighbors to the south; therefore a general book on South America gains greatly in value when its author has known how to weld the study of the two extremes into a lucid whole.

Professor Ross touches upon such varied phases of South American life as to make the reader marvel at his catholicity of vision. The fatal effects of the climate on energy and morals and stamina; the Old-World courtesy of South Americans; the superiority of the women over the men in character; the lack of genuine college life among students—these are only a few South American manifestations which the professor takes up. Whatever his subject, he never loses his lightness of touch, yet he never seems superficial.

His gayety of style keeps cropping out even in the midst of the most serious subjects. As a prelude to a learned disquisition on Chile, he remarks that the seasons down there are the reverse of ours, so that our poets would have to reverse their allusions completely. A Chilean Keats, we are told, would sing of "drear-nighted June," a Chilean Coleridge of the "leafy month of December"; a certain famous song would have to be changed in Chile to "Oh, That We Two Were Novembering!" Warming up to his delicious paradox, Professor Ross tells how a Chilean Lowell would warble "What is so rare as a day in December?" while a Tennyson of that strange land would construct a refrain thus:

For I'm to be Queen of the November, mother,
I'm to be Queen of the November!

That is only one sample. The book abounds in delightful bits. They add greatly to its charm and detract nothing from its value.

THE PANAMA CANAL

WHO STARTED THE PANAMA CANAL AND ITS RAILROAD? By Charles E. A. MacGeachey. Illustrated. New York: M. B. Brown Printing and Bidding Company. 25 cents.

Mr. MacGeachey's interesting pamphlet is in the nature of a footnote to the long history of the idea and final making of the Panama Canal. He takes up a hitherto unrecorded episode in the development of the idea of the possibility of the canal with which his father, Colonel Edward MacGeachey of the Engineering Corps of the British Army, was associated, and tells the full story of that gentleman's efforts to induce first the British and then the French Government to undertake the enterprise. He first conceived the project in 1840, and five years later, at his own expense, explored and surveyed the isthmus morass in four directions from ocean to ocean. Receiving no encouragement, he donated his canal surveys to France, where they became the basis of de Lesseps's work, and the railroad surveys to the United States. The British Government hesitated for some time over his project, but finally withdrew its sanction because the unhealthful climate of the isthmus was believed to offer an insurmountable obstacle to the construction of either the railroad or the canal. The work is copiously illustrated with reproductions of Colonel MacGeachey's surveys, sketches, and plans and with portraits.

Good Detective Stories—Books by Honore Willsie, Marcus Horton, and Others

A SILENT WITNESS. By R. Austin Freeman. Illustrated by H. Weston Taylor. Philadelphia: The John C. Winston Company. $1.20.

MR. STRINGER writes detective novels out of much knowledge of criminal psychology and of detective methods and with peculiar facility and resourcefulness in the invention of means to keep the balance swaying between the criminals and their pursuers, so that first one side and then the other seems to hold the final advantage. This adroitness is especially marked in this new story, which deals with the operations of a band of counterfeiters and the efforts of a Secret Service detective to run them to earth. The head of the band is an able and conscienceless criminal who has some notion of upsetting the United States by unloading into its commerce millions of dollars of counterfeit money and so destroying the integrity of its currency. He also traffics in whatever other forgeries come handy, passports, old masters' paintings, prints of fortifications. The clever hand responsible for the execution of all these things belongs to a lovely young woman, his daughter, whom he has educated and trained for just this purpose. But the reader is very quickly made to understand, by the girl's appearance and her attitude toward the others, that she is of different fibre, and a certain amount of mystery as to who she is and why she is associated with this band of criminals gives an added interest to the pursuit of the evildoers and to the sentiment that soon develops between her and the man who is constantly keen on the trail of her father and his friends.

The story opens in Paris, where the Secret Service man makes his way into the apartment of the band, opens their safe, and is scrutinizing some of their finest work in American bills when, one after another, four of them close in upon him and the leader quickly evolves a plan for making him commit suicide while the girl forges his handwriting and signature in a note of farewell. The scene shifts to Palermo, then to New York, where the band engages in various kinds of audacious criminality and the detective has many exciting and perilous moments, and the tale finally comes to its end in Rome. It is a clever and ingenious story of crime and its checkmating, although it shows evidences of haste and carelessness in the manner of its telling.

"The White Alley" is the sixth novel by Miss Wells in which her suave and polished detective, Fleming Stone, has appeared at the necessary moment to solve a mystery and place the responsibility for crime upon unsuspected shoulders. In this new book he is not brought into the action until almost the end of the story, when suspicion, after hovering around the head of the lovely heroine, has turned to certainty in the minds of all the other characters and settled upon the former secretary of the dead man.

The scene of the mystery is a fine old mansion and its grounds just above New York, and the occasion is a house party which the owner of the estate, a middle aged, wealthy man, stern and precise, gives in honor of his fiancée. One morning the host is missing and presently his dead body is found concealed in the cellar. An ingenious, complete and up-to-date burglar alarm system takes an important part in the story, helping to deepen the mystery. Some of Miss Wells's characteristic humor and cleverness mark the conversations in the early chapters and the outlining of the character of the heroine, although it is of the sketchiest sort, deserves a word of praise for the lightness of touch and the truth with which her irresponsibility, her coquetry and her appetite for masculine admiration are portrayed. But one must admit that the author's admiring descriptions of her sometimes approach the mawkish. As for Fleming Stone and his work, he goes through the task set for him with even more celerity and dispatch than one is accustomed to expect in these superhuman detectives of fiction.

The great unraveler of Mr. Freeman's story is Dr. Thorndyke, medico-legal lecturer and expert in a London medical college. His methods are somewhat akin to those of Sherlock Holmes, in that he notes all manner of small circumstances, combines these with his wide knowledge of medical science and of men, and uses a keen, deductive mind to draw from them his conclusions. He does not work his way immediately to the heart of the mystery, as writers of such stories too often allow their detectives to do, but patiently takes up one baffling obstacle after another while the reader works along with him through more than 300 pages before the puzzling and complicated affair becomes clear. "A Silent Witness" is an unusually clever and interesting detective novel, although somewhat wordy in the telling, whose conspiracies and complications depend a good deal upon scientific theories and facts for their solution. The slender thread of a love story runs through the tale, most of whose scenes are set in and about London.

BRED OF THE DESERT

BRED OF THE DESERT. By Marcus Horton. New York: Harper & Brothers. $1.30.

HERE at last is a story about a horse worthy to be classed with some of the notable interpretations of dog character and life in fiction. The sympathy and the verisimilitude with which it is written ought to bring it warm and quick welcome from all lovers of the horse, while the interesting story it tells with skill and color, humor and emotional suspense, may be trusted to find for it many admirers among those who like a well-told, absorbing tale.

Its hero is a horse, a fine, black animal born of a patient old rack-o'-bones of a mother and an unknown father on a desert road in New Mexico, while the owner of the mare waited beside the trail and made bets with a fellow Mexican—bets that mounted rapidly until they included all the money of both men, their horses, wagons, harness, and even the unborn colt. The Mexican of New Mexico, who appears in the story in considerable number and variety, is one of the joys of the book. The author deserves much commendation for the humor and life-likeness of the several portrayals. His touch is light and laughing, but his hand is firm and his knowledge of the type is evidently wide and varied.

From his unknown sire the black colt has drawn many of the qualities of the thoroughbred, and as he grows in strength, grace and beauty admiring eyes are everywhere bent upon him. He has many vicissitudes of ownership and experience, and finally he becomes a crucial factor in a love affair between a Western girl and a man from the East. The man is just dawdling about the plains and deserts of the Southwest and the girl, who is thoroughly Western in her viewpoint although she has assimilated some education and culture in the East, does not approve of a man spending his life in that way. In the course of his endeavor to prove that he is a man's-size man he has some wild and perilous experiences on the desert with thieves and outlaws and a detachment of troops. And finally, when his affairs are at the worst, he witnesses a battle to the death between the black horse and a gray demon of a stallion which Mr. Horton describes with thrilling effect.

But although people play a prominent part in the story's action—Mexicans, outlaws, the charming girl, the idling man, and others—it is the black horse that is usually the centre of interest and the account of him, his development, his attitude toward those around him, his reactions to his varying environments is done with remarkable subtility, but with such honesty and simplicity as have kept the author from falling into those pits which writers about animals so often dig with their too subtle pens. He never forgets that this splendid black horse is just a horse and he does not seek to endow him with super-horse qualities of mind and soul. The story, a good and enjoyable story in itself, embodies a study in horse psychology that even the skeptic about animal intelligence can accept as honest and believable. A word of praise is due also for the local Southwestern coloring, in New Mexico and Arizona, which is vivid and true, whether in Mexican hamlet, cultivated ranch, or desert wastes.

FLEMING STONE

the ingenious American-Detective didn't find it easy.

The WHITE ALLEY

BY CAROLYN WELLS

Gives a record of that baffling murder mystery and recites the series of thrilling events which led up to the denouement. It was a crime committed with such skill that Fleming Stone himself might have side-stepped the case without hurting his reputation. Through his wonderful deductive powers the criminal is finally taken. Reviewers have acclaimed Fleming Stone as a worthy companion of his great English prototype. Read what one said on his former appearance.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT:—"As an incomparable solver of criminal enigmas Stone is in a class by himself and not even Sherlock Holmes can excel him in the art of rapid deduction from apparently inconsequential trifles."

Dr. Souttar Tells of Field Work in Belgium

A SURGEON IN BELGIUM. By H. S. Souttar, F. R. C. S. Illustrated. Longmans, Green & Co. $2.40.

THE THIRD GREAT WAR, 1914-15, IN RELATION TO MODERN HISTORY. By Laurie Magnus, M. A., with a foreword by George Haven Putnam. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.

PARIS WAITS. By M. E. Clarke. Illustrated. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25.

THE one bright spot in the horrors of the war is the work done by the medical corps. Not only has it been marked, as ever, by the greatest devotion and bravery, but it has also been far more successful than before in the results it has achieved. Of what was accomplished in Belgium at the beginning of the war Dr. H. S. Souttar, a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of England and an assistant surgeon at the West London Hospital, has told in a singularly interesting book, "A Surgeon in Belgium." It is interesting to the layman who knows nothing of the mysteries of the operating room, yet the medical man will gain from it a few hints of what were the most important aspects of the work from the professional point of view.

Dr. Souttar was Surgeon in Chief of the Belgian Field Hospital and as such was for several weeks in Antwerp. There he worked under the most favorable conditions, and he remarks upon the marvelous recoveries which his patients made and the fact that not once was it necessary for him to resort to amputation. He is particularly proud of the use that was made of steel plates. He describes wounds in the thigh in which several inches of bone had been entirely destroyed. It did not seem possible to do anything at all until they tried the introduction of these plates. So completely successful were they that in one case within ten days the patient was hobbling about the ward.

It must be admitted, however, that he was doing it in a terrible emergency. The Germans had begun to bombard Antwerp, and all the patients had to be moved from the upper floors to the basement. With the utmost haste this was done, and Dr. Souttar draws a graphic picture of the doctors, nurses and orderlies conveying their helpless charges to comparative safety at the imminent risk of their own lives. Then came the escape from the doomed city in a number of motor omnibuses. Across a bridge, threatened any minute by a storm of shells, along dark roads lit up only by the light of artillery or burning houses, and keeping ahead of the Germans sometimes hardly by minutes, the hospital had to move, and it was only by rare good fortune that it won its way through.

For the English nurses Dr. Souttar cannot say too much; for the Belgian troops he has the most profound admiration, but when he speaks of the Germans he can hardly contain himself. He is speaking of the things he actually saw and his language could hardly be stronger.

As he describes a visit to Termonde he tells how the only houses left unburned were those certified by Lieutenant Breitfuss as belonging to "gute Leute," and he writes: "One could almost hear the devil laughing at the handiwork of his children." As he records his visit to a château and speaks of the furniture wantonly smashed and the clothing deliberately torn to pieces, he says:

> There are things in Belgium for which blood alone can atone. Woe to us if, when our interests are satisfied, we sheath the sword, and forget the ruined homes, the murdered children of Belgium, the desecrated altar of the God in whose name we fight!

As he remembers the flight from Antwerp, he calls to mind

> One row of little children, which will live forever in my memory, tiny mites sitting together on a bank by the roadside. . . . Germany will have to pay for Louvain and Termonde. It is not with man that she will have to settle for that row of little children.

At Furnes Dr. Souttar met with much greater difficulties than he had experienced at Antwerp. There he had merely a hospital whose beds were piles of straw; he was much closer the firing lines and the wounds were very much more serious, and by some unlucky chance his unit had all their important instruments stolen. He tells how he was compelled to receive cases, every one of them desperate, for only such were sent him, and do his best for them with merely two scalpels, six artery forceps, two dissecting forceps, and a finger-saw. Yet he managed to alleviate much of the suffering and to save many lives, and by common sense methods met the wounded in some sort of shape to continue their journey to the base.

It was there that the hospital was visited by the Queen of the Belgians, and Dr. Souttar tells how kindly she moved among the shattered men and the devotion they felt for her. Here also sometimes came King Albert, and of him it is written: "It was good to see the faces light up as he entered a ward, to see heads painfully raised to gaze after no splendid uniform, but a man."

This war must be the last, all men declare, but its chance of being so depends almost entirely upon the settlement at which those who negotiate the peace arrive. This is the third great European war in two hundred years, and at the end of the other two it was hoped that an enduring peace had been contrived. Both the Treaty of Utrecht of 1713 and the Treaty of Vienna of 1815 failed to provide the basis upon which peace for Europe could firmly rest, and something more effective must be found in these present times if the blood which is being spilled today is not to be shed in vain.

It is with the hope of gleaning from history the secret that may guide the future negotiators to success that Laurie Magnus had written his "Third Great War, 1914-15, Considered in Relation to Modern History." As Mr. George Haven Putnam describes in his foreword, he has not sought the cause of the present strife but how to avert its renewal, and he has examined the state of Europe as it was left by the Thirty Years' War and as it was affected by the gradual working out of the forces which were molding its fortunes.

In Prussia and the Hohenzollern he sees the evil genius of Europe. As he tells of the boundaries of the territories left in the hands of the Great Elector at the close of the Thirty Years' War he says the "Hohenzollern has been rectifying them ever since. * * * The Bourbon ceased to oppress, not indeed by the action of the diplomatists who made peace with him in 1713, but by the action of his own subjects eighty years afterward; the Buonaparte, as we shall see, came and went, meteoric in his passage and his power; the Hohenzollern, greedy and rapacious, indifferent to other interests but his own, and, therefore, insensible to honor, has revived in each generation the characteristics of Louis XIV.'s contemporary; he has shown himself uniformly dissatisfied with his constantly extended realm, and still worships in the twentieth century the same gods of militarism and absolutism to which he bowed in the fallen temple of the Bourbon."

So Mr. Magnus describes the Prussianization of German culture. He tells how Bismarck set up a view of it which would have been hateful to Lessing, to Goethe, to Arndt, and he narrates how the very men who made Germany great in the War of Liberation were met with ingratitude, as the noble aspirations they had invoked proved distasteful to the terrible Hohenzollern spirit.

So he asks that, when the time for the settlement comes and men once more face the task of laying the foundations of the Europe of the future, the beliefs that Prussianism has inculcated through the entire German nation be crushed for ever. German Kultur must be overthrown and the ideals of democracy and truth restored. For this, Mr. Magnus asserts, nothing but the complete success of the Allies will do. A partial success of the enemy, even a stalemate of war, would be fatal to an abiding peace, and it is the duty of the Allies to fight on until they can make the restoration of the Hohenzollern ideal an impossibility. Thus only will they perform their duty to civilization and give to Europe the prospect of a long period of peace.

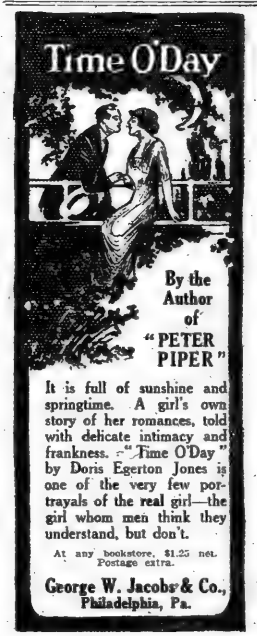
In Paris the full meaning of the great struggle in which France is engaged has been fully felt. It was through Paris that the hundreds of thousands of soldiers had to pass, as they came up for mobilization. It was in Paris that the wheels of a great city were suddenly stopped, as men of every calling were forced to drop their business and hurry to the colors. It was from Paris that the great exodus occurred as the forces of von Kluck drew daily nearer. Yet it was in the midst of Paris that no small part of the life of the nation had still to be transacted, in spite of the peril of war.

How Paris felt, what Paris did, and in what spirit it met the great crisis, which was so near a disaster, is told by Mrs. M. E. Clarke in a series of papers which she has published under the title of "Paris Waits." They pretend to be nothing but pleasantly written sketches of what she saw in her daily round, but they give an excellent impression of what the early days of the war meant to one who lived through them. Other writers have dwelt more on the horrors of the time, and have spoken of the confusion and miseries of those who fled before the invasion they were sure was imminent. Mrs. Clarke, as she stayed in the city, saw more of that great portion of its population who stayed prepared to face whatever the fortune of war might bring them.

So she speaks of the women who hid their anxiety for their men-folk and went about their daily tasks, and she tells of the quiet streets with the children playing along them as their mothers sat at their doors and waited. Courtesy and kindliness she saw increase under the shadow of the great peril, and she can look back on her experiences last August with something besides regret.

Then as the tide of war turned back from Paris Mrs. Clarke writes of the work of the hospitals and the organization of philanthropy. She describes the arrival of the Anglo-Indian troops and the impression they produced on the French. She notes the small things and tells us about them, and leaves with us an agreeable impression of how France has met her trial.



It is full of sunshine and springtime. A girl's own story of her romances, told with delicate intimacy and frankness. "Time O'Day" by Doris Egerton Jones is one of the very few portrayals of the real girl—the girl whom men think they understand, but don't.

The Turmoil

By Booth Tarkington

First as to sales in thirty-eight places out of forty-two. These figures are the impartial dealers' reports to the May Bookman, regarded as official by the entire trade. For three months "The Turmoil" has been the best selling book in America.

First Pals

By Francis Perry Elliott

If you are one of the many thousand readers who are especially fond of mystery or detective stories, take advice and get a copy of "First Pals." This is a most baffling mystery story in which you either make up your mind quickly how the mystery is solved, or are convinced that the next page will disclose it. Nevertheless, you will have to read as far as page 321 before the author solves it for you, and then you will find it is not at all as you had imagined it would be. In addition to this, there is a very sweet love story.

The Life Builders

By Elizabeth Dejeans

Who is the more conservative—man or woman—when it is a question of home and marriage? This is the question which the author asks, the theme of her clean and earnest romance of a vital, gracious, and graceful woman, who dreamed of marriage based on genuine love upon which husband and wife should build toward an ideal future. The author's handling of the question is unusual, but full of insight into the differences in masculine and feminine nature.

Johnny Appleseed

By Eleanor Atkinson

A sympathetic story of a real character into whose unusual personality the author has succeeded in penetrating as she did into the dog nature of the real "Greyfriars Bobby." All the romance of our early frontier life fills the pages, not the fighting only, but the upbuilding, the conquering of the forests, the making of the wilderness blossom.

Hollow Tree Stories

By Albert Bigelow Paine

For little readers—in six little volumes—the ever popular stories of the quaint Deep Woods creatures are just issued in small single volumes, in addition to the older books. The six volumes are: "How Mr. Dog Got Even"; "How Mr. Rabbit Lost His Tail"; "Mr. Rabbit's Big Dinner"; "Making Up with Mr. Dog"; "Mr. Possum's Great Balloon Trip"; "When Jack Rabbit Was a Little Boy."

DANTE—1265-1915

NEXT year a goodly portion of the world will observe the tercentenary of SHAKESPEARE'S death; another portion, for a similar reason, will honor the memory of CERVANTES; this month the 650th anniversary of the birth of DANTE will be celebrated. Of the great national poets of modern times the Italian has the precedence in point of age; as regards influence, that critic would be bold indeed who would attempt to gauge the impress left upon the literatures of the world by the author of the greatest religious epic conceived by a Christian poet. Upon English letters DANTE'S influence has been appreciably exerted for centuries. It was not, however, until the recent era of D. G. ROSSETTI and the poets and painters associated with him that the art of the Florentine received full recognition in English literature. Since that time, now more than half a century ago, the study of DANTE has increased with us. It is safe to say, indeed, that to the average student of literature in this country and England neither "The Iliad" nor "The Æneid" is today more familiar than the "Divina Commedia"—and this marks a broadening in national scholarship quite inconceivable to the England and America of JOHNSON'S day. Italy will doubtless observe the DANTE centenary with the pomp and circumstance befitting so notable an occasion. The tributes paid to her idolized national poet will be followed with sympathetic appreciation in this country. Here, it is worth recording, we have, in celebration of the event, perhaps the most suitable tribute that a foreign nation can offer—a new translation of the "Divina Commedia" that in several respects appears to be a more adequate reflection of the spirit and letter of the original than any of the existing versions in English. A careful review of this translation will be published in the next number of THE NEW YORK TIMES REVIEW OF BOOKS.

THE part to be played by the United States in the war has been, inevitably, a feature of growing importance in the literature created by the conflict among European nations. Magazine articles and books have been devoted to a discussion of this country's ability to defend itself from foreign invasion, and the views put forth on the subject have ranged from the extremes of conservatism to the positive declaration that war is inevitable and imminent contained in Mr. HUDSON MAXIM'S "Defenseless America," published this week. But the final word on the sensational side of the theme seems to be reserved for Mr. CLEVELAND MOFFETT, whose serial story of "The Conquest of America" commences in this month's McClure's Magazine. That this coming conquest will be marked by that "punch" and "rapidity of movement" so essential to the art of the romancer, if not to the more prosaic methods of the historian, is evident from this summary of things that happen in the initial installment of Mr. MOFFETT'S story:

> The Gatun Locks destroyed and the United States fleet bottled in the Pacific.
> A German fleet carrying 150,000 men anchored off East Hampton, N. Y.
> An underwater and aerial battle, in which American air craft and submarines are destroyed.
> The landing of the army of invasion, and its victorious march to New York City.
> The capture of Brooklyn and the dynamiting of the East River bridges.
> The destruction of the Woolworth and the Singer Building towers from the Brooklyn shore.
> The mowing down of thousands in the packed streets of New York by machine guns.

In the June number of the magazine the fate of New York is decided, the victorious invaders occupy New England and destroy Boston. Conspicuous among those who take part in these events are such people as Colonel ROOSEVELT, General VILLA, JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, JOHN WANAMAKER, Colonel HARVEY, ex-President WILSON, WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS, Dr. ANNA HOWARD SHAW, SAMUEL GOMPERS, JOHN DREW, Cardinal FARLEY—there is a flavor of variety in the dramatis personæ, indeed, that would be hard to equal in any fiction ancient or modern. But that seems appropriate enough in the conquest of America.

UNTIL now the omission of anything like "war fiction" from the lists of best sellers has been sufficiently noticeable to arouse comment. The record was broken, however, in March, when "Who Goes There!" by ROBERT W. CHAMBERS, contested for third place with Miss BAILEY'S "Contrary Mary" on The Bookman's list of six best-selling books of fiction for the month. Mr. TARKINGTON'S "The Turmoil" stands first on this list by an unusually large preponderance of votes, and is followed by CONAN DOYLE'S "The Valley of Fear"; fifth and sixth on the record are POOLE'S "The Habour" and GREY'S "The Lone Star Ranger." Thus, in a way, Mr. CHAMBERS is the first to make the European war a popular theme in fiction. Whether this is due to the intrinsic merit of "Who Goes There!" to interest in its theme, or to the drawing quality of the author's name will have to be left to the decision of the individual readers of the book. At any rate, the latter was voted particularly worth while by the fiction readers of Boston, Louisville, Rochester, and, in lesser degree, Albany, Jacksonville, Milwaukee, New Haven, Worcester, Cincinnati, Norfolk, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Richmond, Buffalo, and Providence. On the non-fiction list for March out of twelve leading books only three are unrelated to the war.

WRITERS of tales of adventure—and, in behalf of those who look to fiction for genuine entertainment, we could wish that such writers were more numerous—would do well to peruse a short essay on this delectable branch of literature appearing in the current number of the Unpopular Review. The essayist, having the courage of his convictions and hence voicing a feeling that must have stirred within many a reader, particularly deplores the presence of the heroine in this type of romance. "How many good tales," he exclaims, "have thus been spoilt!" It was STEVENSON alone, according to him, who dared to ignore the traditional demand for a female adventurer—

> How often, under COOPER'S deliberate guidance, have we yearned for something or somebody to snatch away the pale heroine, so that at last the sculping might begin? What an incumbrance the same ubiquitous person is, in CLARK RUSSELL'S shipwrecks! She is a plague in SCOTT. She is simply intolerable in RIDER HAGGARD, where she combines the dread statelines of the Queen, the style of the professional elocutionist, and the talkativeness of a cook off duty. She is acceptable in DEFOE, inasmuch as she is Indian, submissive and insufficiently dressed. She is unknown on Treasure Island; for the great STEVENSON alone had the manhood to intercept her on the way.

Only an unpopular reviewer in all probability could have written so ruthlessly against the accepted recipe for an adventure story.

EVERY publishing season has its interesting feature that sets it apart, more or less, from its predecessors. It is pleasant to note that this Spring is unique for its generous list of really worthy first novels. One recalls ten of these—ERNEST POOLE'S "The Harbour," Mr. IRVINE'S "Mrs. Martin's Man," MARGARET WIDDEMER'S "The Rose Garden Husband," THERESE TYLER'S "The Dusty Road," WALTER ELWOOD'S "Guimo," STANLEY SHAW'S "A Siren of the Snows," C. W. CAMP'S "Sinister Island," WALTER A. DYER'S "Pierrot, Dog of Belgium," S. L. NYBURG'S "The Final Verdict," and RUSSELL THORNDYKE'S "Dr. Syn." Others, doubtless, could be added to the list. But these are sufficient to show the hospitality of publishers toward newcomers in fiction, and, on the other hand, the speculative value of the latter as producers of successful books.

ANSWERS BY THE EDITOR

J. H. A.—Will you kindly give me some information about James Oppenheim? Has he written anything but "Songs for the New Age"?

James Oppenheim was born in St. Paul, Minn., May 24, 1882. After graduation from school in St. Paul he came to this city and became a special student at Columbia University. He was assistant headworker at the Hudson Guild Settlement from 1901 to 1903, and was a teacher and Acting Superintendent at the Hebrew Technical School for Girls from 1905 to 1907. Among his publications are "Doctor Rast," "Monday Morning and Other Poems," "Wild Oats," (a novel;) "The Pioneers," (poetic play;) "Pay Envelopes," (short stories;) "The Nine-Tenths," "The Olympian," and "Idle Wives," (novels.) He has contributed many short stories, articles, and poems to the American Magazine, Everybody's, and Harper's Magazine.

E. M. H.—Will you kindly tell me something of Ray Stannard Baker's life? What has he written besides his contributions to the American Magazine?

Ray Stannard Baker was born in Lansing, Mich., April 17, 1870. He is the son of Major Joseph Stannard Baker. He was graduated from the Michigan Agricultural College in 1889 with the degree of Bachelor of Science. Subsequently he took a partial law course and studied literature at the University of Michigan. He was a reporter and sub-editor on The Chicago Record from 1892 to 1897, and was managing editor of the McClure Syndicate for two years afterward. He held the position of associate editor of McClure's Magazine from 1899 to 1905, and then became one of the editors of the American Magazine. Besides his numerous contributions to the American and English magazines he is the author of "The Boys' Book of Inventions," "Our New Prosperity," "Seen in Germany," "Second Boys' Book of Inventions," "Following the Color Line," "New Ideals in Healing," "The Spiritual Unrest," and "Thin Crust of Civilization."

FRANK HAMMOND.—Will you please give me the value of the two volumes of the "Life of Petrarch," by Mrs. Dobson, printed by T. Maiden, London, 1805?

It is the sixth edition of Mrs. Susannah Dobson's translation of the "Life of Petrarch," from the French of the Abbé de Sade, and is not of special value. The first edition was published in London in 1775.

Mrs. F. G. R.—I have a Bible, "Imprinted at London by Robert Barker, Printer to the King's Most Excellent Majestie, 1607." The title page has the pictures of all the Prophets and the coats-of-arms of all the old Jewish tribes. Can you give me an idea of its value?

It is worth from $5 to $10.

L. L. S.—I will be greatly obliged for information concerning the value of The Ulster County Gazette, published at Kingston, and dated Jan. 4, 1800. The paper is black and bordered in mourning for George Washington, and contains tributes to him.

The Ulster County Gazette of the date mentioned, if a genuine original copy, is worth about $25.

ANSWERS FROM READERS

R. J.—The song "We Have Been Friends Together," for which "E. M. F." inquires in your issue of April 11, was written by Mrs. Norton, granddaughter of the famous Richard Brinsley Sheridan, and was set to music by Henry Russell. Both words and music may be found in "Our Familiar Songs and Those Who Made Them," (Henry Holt & Co.)

This appeal was also answered by Edith L. Kelsey, Washington, D. C.; Maud Fay Bate, Elizabeth, N. J.; Mrs. M. H. Downing, New York; Florence L. Filgrim, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Mrs. J. Campbell Smith, Orange, N. J.; Helen G. Manon, Port Jervis, N. Y., and John H. Baxter, Peekskill, N. Y.

ADELA F. SMITH.—In your issue of April 4, Anna Shannon Monroe desires to find this quotation:

God says sweat for foreheads, man says crowns.

I give the complete quotation, which is from Elizabeth Barrett Browning's "Aurora Leigh," Book III:

Get leave to work,
In this world 'tis the best you get at all;
For God, in cursing, gives us better gifts
Than men in benediction. God says, "Sweat for foreheads;" men say "Crowns," and so we are crowned.
Ay, gashed by some tormenting circle of steel,
Which snaps with secret spring. Get work, get work,
Be sure 'tis better than what you work to get.

Answers to this appeal were also received from J. Elizabeth Smith, Delmar, N. J.; Lindley M. Stevens, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; G. Branscombe, New York, and E. G. Bailey, Brooklyn, N. Y.

W. L. ANDREWS.—The origin of the phrase, "Innocuous Desuetude," has been attributed to President Cleveland so long that it has become history, but it is not true. This was a favorite expression of the frivolous youth in the 70's, and was first used by Porte Crayon in a description of a trip over the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal.

APPEALS TO READERS

R. F. JOHNS.—Can any of your readers place this quotation for me: "Society everywhere is in conspiracy against the manhood of its members"?

F. R.—Can any reader quote for me a very short recent poem of which I can give neither title, author, nor first line, but of which the refrain was something about what three men can do—"Three men can" do this, "Three men can" do that—the idea being what united effort can accomplish against the world.

J. B. BRIGGS.—Some years ago, less than ten, there appeared in one of the magazines a brief poem entitled (approximately) "To England Under Threat" or "In Time of War." Can any reader resurrect and quote it for me?

HELEN L. SQUIER.—Will some reader kindly tell me the title and author of the poem of which I inclose the first verse? It is a very old poem:

I've seen the first robin of Speing, mother dear—
And I've heard the brown darling sing.
You said hear it, and wish it,
And sure 'twould come true.
So I wished such a beautiful thing—
I wished for a ladder so long that it stood,
One end on our own cottage floor
And the other go up past the moon and the stars
And lean against heaven's bright door.

E. L. SKEDDEN.—Can any one tell me from what poem are the following lines and who the author:

A flower for the tired eyes,
And music for the weary heart?

ALFRED Q. BLAISDELL.—Can some of your readers give me the name of the author and place where I can find the lines:

Knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers, and
I linger on the shore;
And the individual withers, and the world is more and more.

M. J. MURPHY.—Can any of your readers tell me where I can find the poem which reads:

I cannot say, I will not say that she is dead;
she is just away.
With a cheery smile and a wave of the hand,
She has wandered into an unknown land.
Left us dreaming how fair it needs must be
Since she lingers there?

P. B. F.—Can any reader give me the words of an old English song, "Simon the Cellarer?"

LATEST FICTION

forceful and graphic that the reader easily realizes in his mind's eye her big and colorful scenes. But, as so often happens with the American author who has something to say, whose observing and thinking have brought him to convictions that he wishes to voice, the story and its people and its message are imperfectly fused. The characters are created for the purpose of delivering the message and making the preachment and the story is shaped to that end. But Mrs. Willsie makes evident the possession of so many fine gifts for the writing of fiction that one is constrained to believe she needs only time and plenty of practice to develop a more adroit method in the handling of her material, a more subtle treatment of her characters and a more skillful craft in making character and its relations with its environment the source of her story. Sometimes she fuses character and action and plot development sufficiently to show that if she pays attention to that side of her art and develops it as, apparently, she can if she will, she is likely to do after a while some fine and distinctive work in the fictional interpretation of American life.

"Still Jim" is concerned, on its surface, with the Reclamation service of the Federal Government and the development of two important irrigation projects, one in the Northwest and the other in the Southwest. But underneath these things, which furnish the structure of the story and with which it deals with intimate knowledge of conditions and methods in the Irrigation Service, the story probes rather keenly into the racial problems of our Melting Pot, the reasons for the fading of the influence of the Puritan stock, the effect of South-European immigration upon our national life, and the possibility of making the Reclamation Service an instrument for the perpetuation and the deep rooting in Western soil of democratic ideals.

The story begins with the boyhood of its hero, who gets his sobriquet of "Still" from his school and swimming-hole companions in a New England village because of his unusual gift of reticence. The first quarter of the book follows his life to manhood in a rather sketchy way, noting the influences that help to mold his character and his life purpose in New England first and then in New York City. While attending Columbia his chum is a handsome Greek classmate who enters intimately into his life and furnishes opportunity for comparison of character and personal aims. Then, as a cub engineer, he goes to the Far Northwest and enters with whole-hearted enthusiasm upon his life work. From this point the story is well worth reading just for the sake of the thrilling account and graphic description of the work of the irrigation engineers. Here the author is at her best and admirably fuses action and character, message and story. There is much good work also in the handling of political developments and the efforts of big financial interests to get control of the system during Still Jim's work upon the Southwestern project to which he is transferred. A love story with a piquant heroine and the handsome Greek as a sinister influence comes near to making tragedy of Still Jim's life, but the ending of the story is upon a happy and hopeful note.

THE LIFE-BUILDERS

THE LIFE-BUILDERS. By Elizabeth Dejeans. New York: Harper & Brothers. $1.35.

THE significance of the title of Mrs. Dejean's new novel is in the conception of marriage which is the theme of the story, for the setting forth of which, one would guess, the book was written. The young heroine's attitude toward her future when, in one of the early pages, she is looking forward to her nearing marriage and subsequent life, phrases the theme succinctly: "It was their unity of purpose that made them one—lovers and comrades for life—life-builders." The word occurs frequently throughout the book, it is often in the heroine's mouth, and always with the meaning of the united life built by husband and wife, based on love and comradeship, mutual understanding and respect, equal participation in the duties, toils and pleasures of their union.

But the young heroine who looks forward so confidently in the early chapters is soon disillusioned as to her particular marriage. Her husband is adroit, audacious, unscrupulous, financially and socially ambitious, and he has no sympathy with or understanding of the ideals with which she wishes to rule her life. Already her path has been crossed by that of a man similarly disillusioned and out of their understanding of each other's trouble is soon born the love that makes the crucial situation of the book. How they try to arrange their separate difficulties in some way that will conserve the best good of all concerned and at the same time will not besmirch their highest ideals makes a story of some complication, many emotional situations and a great deal of conversational discussion.

The story and most of the characters take their origin in the Middle West and there are some realistic scenes of life in a small city in that region, located specially by Mrs. Dejeans in Illinois. There is some just appraisement also of the characteristics of the Middle Western country and their influence upon the national life. Several of the important characters are intimately studied and carefully portrayed. The heroine's father, James Milenberg, dominating and unscrupulous, shrewd and cold, with a genius for making money, is a good picture of the typical captain of industry. His wife, meek, patient, overwhelmed and doggedly faithful to his interests, is clearly set forth. The man whom the heroine marries, more subtle and more temperamental, is also well done, although calling for a much finer touch in the handling. The heroine herself is a good example of the modern young woman of wealth who has inherited some of her father's cool brains.

The story moves very slowly, with much discussion by the people in the book and by the author of every phase of each question that comes up. Every development is presented to the reader in detail, from many points of view. There is much psychological study of motives, of purposes, of temperaments. And, finally, as a whole, the book may be taken as the presentation of a philosophy of marriage at the present time, a philosophy that endeavors to keep firm hold upon the finest ideals of the institution and to combine all that is best in the conception of it which has come down out of the past with the modern and more spiritual view of its possibilities.

THE RIM OF THE DESERT

THE RIM OF THE DESERT. By Ada Woodruff Anderson. Little, Brown & Co. $1.35 net.

"The Rim of the Desert" is a dramatic story of Alaska, in which one David Weatherbee looms large—a man brave and farseeing, a leader among his fellows, filled with large projects; but, apparently, hampered by a self-indulgent wife, who shared none of his dangers, but regarded him merely as a source of revenue, and lived her own gay life apart from his. So, when he met his death in the frozen solitudes, the devotion borne him by his close friends, Hollis Tisdale, deepens the abhorrence he feels for the woman who, as he conceives, has wrecked his friend's life. Tisdale resolves to punish her by forcing her to carry out her husband's great project of reclaiming a section of the desert, and making it a fruitful paradise. How this is done, how Mrs. Weatherbee pays her debt in full, and how her true character is revealed Mrs. Anderson tells in her spirited story, crowded with incident, and admirable in description, although somewhat too long drawn out. Its freshness and originality, however, make it well worth the reading.

Has not a woman as much right as a man to express her own individuality?

THE CONSCIENCE OF SARAH PLATT

By Alice Gerstenberg

SARAH PLATT missed her life's happiness through an ill turn of fortune's wheel. It was her one opportunity and it never returned. Henceforth her life as an unmarried woman was one of tragic loneliness.

Her story is written with the hope that it may create an interest in and better understanding of the movement called Feminism, which, after all, is but another name for Humanism.

What Foreign Critics Say

Of the record breaking volume of literature caused by the great war, no two articles have excited greater attention throughout the world and challenged more profoundly the consideration of thoughful men than George Bernard Shaw's "Common Sense About the War" and James M. Beck's "In the Supreme Court of Civilization."

The latter has been expanded into a volume of about 300 pages, entitled

"The Evidence In The Case"

Beck's volume may be treated as an answer to Shaw, to whose argument he repeatedly refers, characterizing the great satirist as "inimitable as a farceur but hardly convincing as a jurist."

Mr. Beck's powerful discussion as to the moral responsibility for the war has received in the European press a volume of favorable comment such as has been rarely accorded to any American book—

Westminster Gazette: "The best analysis of the documents."

London Globe: No more powerful arraignment of Germany has yet appeared."

Edinburgh Scotsman: "No more trenchant exposure of German diplomacy."

Paris Gaulois: "A remarkable work, written in a spirit of justice and impartiality."

The London Times: "A singularly acute and liberal commentary. One of the clearest and fullest accounts yet published of the origin and responsibility of the war."

London Chronicle: "Mr. Beck writes with the logical precision of a lawyer and with a lofty eloquence and a fire of moral indignation that lawyers too often lack. England might be content to rest her case in participation in the war on Mr. Beck's book."

The Yorkshire Herald: "Logical and illuminating."

London Civil Service Gazette: "Equally notable for the skill with which he dissects the evidence and the emphasis with which he states a judgment."

Paris Temps: "Mr. Beck's verdict is based upon the most strongly fortified arguments. It will undoubtedly produce in France the same considerable sensation that it has produced in the United States."

Paris Bonnet Rouge: "Mr. Beck brings to the discussion the logic, the clearness, the fairness of view which characterized his arguments in connection with the great cases in which he has participated. A magnificent argument."

Among the notable English publicists who have commented most favorably upon Mr. Beck's book are Arthur James Balfour, former Prime Minister; Viscount Bryce, author of "The American Commonwealth"; Sir George Otto Trevelyan, the well known historian; Sir A. Conan Doyle, the distinguished novelist; Sir Edward Goschen, former English Ambassador at Berlin; Sir Maurice de Bunsen, former English Ambassador at Vienna; M. Jules Cambon, French Ambassador at Berlin; Baron D'Estournelles de Constant, Member of the French Chamber of Deputies and His Majesty the King of Belgium.

Important Fiction Promised—Some New England Classics

SAMUEL MERWIN'S new novel, "The Honey Bee," will be published next Saturday by the Bobbs-Merrill Company. It is concerned with the career and the experiences in love and life of a successful business woman of the present day. She has worked her way up to an important position on the staff of a big New York department store, but otherwise she has made rather a muddle of things, and the tale narrates the crucial events through which she wins out to a satisfactory relation toward life.

The John Lane Company announces that it has advanced the publication date of William J. Locke's new novel, "Jaffery," from June 25, as originally intended, to June 5.

The success of Artzibasheff's saturnine story of the Russian superman, "Sanine," has been so pronounced that B. W. Huebsch has arranged to bring out all of this writer's fiction. Some time this Spring Mr. Huebsch will have ready the next volume, "The Millionaire," containing one short and two long stories. Of these two, one gives its title to the volume, and the other, "Ivan Lande," is the one, according to the author, that first brought him recognition. The collection will have an autobiographical introduction in which Artzibasheff will tell about the circumstances under which "Sanine" was written.

Two novels by prominent young English authors are promised by the Dorans for May 15. One is "The Rat-Pit," by Patrick MacGill, whose "Children of the Dead End" brought him recognition last year after his youth of hardship as a farm laborer and railroad navvy. It takes its title from the name of a lodging house in Glasgow for very poor women. The other is "The Invisible Event," which will conclude J. D. Beresford's Jacob Stahl trilogy. The Dorans have taken over the two former volumes of the trilogy, "The Early History of Jacob Stahl" and "A Candidate for Truth." In the new novel Mr. Beresford introduces a love story and brings Jacob Stahl's experiences and adventures with life to a satisfactory resting place.

Mitchell Kennerley has ready for immediate publication a book of "Fifty-one Tales," by Lord Dunsany, whose volume of "Five Plays," published by Mr. Kennerley last year, attracted attention. These new "Tales" are said not to be short stories in the ordinary acceptance of that classification, but to be more nearly akin to Stevenson's Fables. Lord Dunsany is at the battle-front with the Coldstream Guards.

The American edition of Dr. Charles Sarolea's "The Anglo-German Problem," of which a review from advance sheets appeared in THE BOOK REVIEW'S Spring Book Number, is ready for immediate publication by G. P. Putnam's Sons. The author has written a foreword especially for this edition, in which he says that the book was "written years before the war and represents the outcome of two decades of study and travel in Germany."

The Century Company will bring out this month Edwin Davies Schoonmaker's "The World Storm—and Beyond," which discusses the social revolutions that the author thinks will move forward swiftly after the war.

"War and World Government," by Dr. Frank Crane, is ready for immediate publication by the John Lane Company. It preserves, in chrodological order, Dr. Crane's editorial articles upon the war, thus showing the development of his conviction from mere protest against the stupidity and causelessness of the war to a belief in the necessity of world government.

Two weeks hence McBride, Nast & Co. will publish "German Culture: Past and Present," in which the author, E. Belfort Bax, who has been intimately associated with the Socialist movement in England, traces the growth and development of German "Kultur" and manners and shows the influence of Prussian character and militarism upon Teutonic civilization.

In a special edition to be published in May, Small, Maynard & Co. will offer to American readers "The Dawn," a play by the Belgian poet, Emile Verhaeren, with an introduction by Arthur Symons.

Houghton Mifflin Company have postponed to May 8 the publication of the Riverside Pocket Edition of the works of Thoreau, which will be in eleven volumes in limp leather. This house will bring out some time this month "Fruitlands," a compilation by Clara Endicott Sears of all the writings that have come to light concerning Bronson Alcott's community at Fruitlands. It will contain selections from Alcott's diary and letters, Emerson's Journals, the writings of Frank Sanborn, the letters of Charles Lane and Father Hecker, and will include the diaries kept by Anna and Louisa Alcott at Fruitlands and Louisa's "Transcendental Wild Oats."

"Vanishing Roads and Other Essays," by Richard La Gallienne, a collection of papers offering comment upon contemporary ideals and interests, nature subjects, and literary matters and study of men and manners, is ready for publication by the Putnams.

B. W. Huebsch will have ready shortly Ludwig Lewisohn's "The Modern Drama," publication of which was postponed from an earlier date. It will afford a critical résumé of the dramatic literature of the last three decades, together with discussion of the influences that have governed playwrights and of their relative positions in the history of the drama.

Within a week or two Mitchell Kennerly will bring out Volume XI. of his Modern Drama Series, containing Edwin Björkman's translation of three plays by Arthur Schnitzler—"The Lonely Way," "Interlude," and "Countess Mizzi."

Henry Arthur Jones's "The Lie," in which Margaret Illington has been starring this Winter, will be published in book form May 15 by George H. Doran Company.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS

ATHERTON BROWNELL, author of "The Unseen Empire," the peace play published last Winter dealing with the influence in favor of war exerted by European armament manufacturers, was recently asked by the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace to make a series of readings throughout New England from his play. Several dates were set in Connecticut, but had later to be canceled because of local fear that the large Connecticut industries in arms would make it "unwise to emphasize the phase of the peace propaganda which attacks large armament makers."

A member of the firm of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. has bought for presentation to friends a hundred copies of "The Goldfish," the anonymous confessions of a multi-millionaire concerning the unsatisfactory life of a rich man.

Ludwig Lewisohn has recently been elected President of the newly formed branch of the Drama League in Columbus, Ohio.

When the Harper presses start up on the morning of May 3 Booth Tarkington's novel, "The Turmoil," will begin its fourth month of being continuously on press since its publication.

Hamlin Garland has come to New York, to establish his residence in the East, after living more than twenty years in Chicago. He will retain the old homestead in Wisconsin and will spend his Summers in the Rockies, but will make his literary headquarters in New York City.

Norman Duncan is spending some time in New York, reading the proofs of a new book of travels, which will appear in the Autumn.

Zane Grey, author of "The Lone Star Ranger," when camping once in Northern Arizona, had a call while alone in camp from Tse-as-gat, the Piute outlaw responsible for the recent uprising. He rode up with a rifle ready and a menacing appearance, but thought better of his apparent purpose when he heard the rest of the camping party returning. Mr. Grey is making the outlaw a character in the novel he is now writing.

Herbert Adams Gibbon's "The New Map of Europe" has been adopted as required reading by Princeton, Yale, and Harvard.

Lillian D. Wald's "The House in Henry Street," which is attracting attention as it runs in serial form in The Atlantic Monthly, will be published next Fall by Henry Holt & Co.

Captain Craig, the hero of Edwin Arlington Robinson's initial poem in his volume of verse of that title, had a prototype in a venerable Jew, said to be still living in England, who was the original of one of George Eliot's characters in "Daniel Deronda." He spent much time in this country, was a friend of Longfellow and other writers of that time, and received sympathy and help from a number of young literary men in New York.

Edward A. Steiner's "On the Trail of the Immigrant," first published nine years ago, has lately gone into its ninth edition.

Albert Bigelow Paine expects to compile a collection of Mark Twain letters that will give a better view of the humorist and philosopher as a correspondent than he was able to do in the occasional examples which he used in his "Biography of Mark Twain." Mr. Paine hopes that all owners of letters from Mark Twain will send copies of their documents to him, care of Harper & Brothers, for all of which he will make acknowledgment in the work itself.

The Seas of God

Mrs. Edwin Markham writes:—

"'The Seas of God' presents with poignancy the love-history of a woman left without the shelter of home or society or church. This new novel has, however, a new setting, a new stress of emphasis, and ends with the note of regeneration."

"The story is told dramatically and with a certain distinction. One enjoys the flair and finish of the style of this anonymous author—a story teller with power to handle large aspects with ethical justice as well as to evoke atmosphere and project character."

Eleanor Gates writes:—

"Parents of grown, yet untrained, girls should not fail to read 'The Seas of God.'"

Temple Bailey writes:—

"'The Seas of God' is a remarkable and touching story, a book of power."

Dorothy Dix writes:—

"'The Seas of God' is a strong and gripping story that 'gets' you in the first chapter and holds you to the last."

"The theme of the book is one that is vitally interesting to every one who believes in the higher morality, for it teaches that the woman who has erred can come back if she desires to, and build a new, clear life on the wrecks of her old existence. It is a notable book, and if it is a first book, I think a new star has risen in the literary skies."

EX-GOVERNOR GLYNN DENOUNCES HUGE STATE TAX OF $19,000,000 AS A GRAB BY THE REPUBLICAN BOSSES

Replying to Controller Prendergast's Statements in Last Sunday's Times, Former Executive Discusses Governor Whitman's Initial Mistake in the Matter and Declares That Controller Is "Wrong in a Score of Things."

By MARTIN H. GLYNN,
Former Governor of New York.

NEW YORK CITY and New York State are simply paying tribute in this year's large direct tax to the bosses of the Republican Party for their own political purposes.

The next election is a year and a half away. Republican leaders are proceeding on the theory that the public will forget what has been done this year. But they themselves forget that the money for this direct tax will come out of the pockets of the people next Spring. Even politically speaking, this tax may not be a good one for the Republican Party, but in any case it is bad business for the taxpayers of the State.

The political intention is to pile up a mountain of money in the Treasury this year and then abolish the direct tax next year for campaign purposes. In other words, the Republican leaders are levying a surplus of taxes this year in order to secure a diminution next year. Expenditures that should be spread over two years are being crammed into one year with no regard for the tax rate.

In the present state of business, and the present condition of real estate, this policy is an economic crime. New York should be saved this year from every cent of taxation that can be avoided. Between the Federal corporation tax, the Federal income tax, the war tax, and the municipal taxes that are everywhere high, a proper sense of statesmanship would have dictated a decrease instead of an increase in the State's expenses. To burden New York's real estate with a single unnecessary cent of taxation now is political tyranny and business strangulation.

Figures Are "a Direct Contradiction"

Mr. Prendergast's statements in last Sunday's NEW YORK TIMES are a direct contradiction of the first figures he gave out. In his first statement he admitted that I left a surplus in the treasury of $3,800,000. He now declares that I left a deficit. Surely Mr. Prendergast is wrong in one of his statements, and a man who veers in his figures like a weathercock should not pose as a financial expert.

Even when Mr. Prendergast admitted that I left a surplus of $3,800,000 his ignorance of the laws of 1913 caused him to overlook an item of $1,700,000 in the State's surplus. The man who overlooks a little item like $1,700,000 in a statement which has been two weeks in preparation makes his financial knowledge open to suspicion.

This ignored item of $1,700,000 added to the $3,800,000 which Mr. Prendergast formerly admitted, makes a surplus of $5,500,000, which I left in the treasury. But after the lapse of only a few weeks Mr. Prendergast converts this surplus into a deficit by contradicting the figures of his own experts and somersaulting on his own opinion rendered in a formal statement.

But mere words cannot blow money out of existence as easily as this. Wrong in one thing, Mr. Prendergast is wrong in a score of things. Evidently his information on the matters contained in his second statement is second-handed and the "first handers" he got it from have colored it to suit their own purposes. By way of premise I call attention to the fact that I left Governor Whitman a larger surplus than Governor Hughes left Governor Dix. But before taking up Mr. Prendergast's statement in detail let me review the events leading up to this statement.

The reason that all the specious and labored attempts to justify a nineteen-million-dollar direct tax have failed is that appropriations have jumped nearly twenty million dollars in one year without the addition of a single new activity to the State Government.

This is a fact that the man in the street can understand. This is a situation which all the plausibility of partisan advocates cannot obscure. And no jugglery of figures, no hypocritical evasion of truth, can blind the public to the real meaning of the present piratical raid upon the taxpayers of the State.

Absurd as it seems, there would have been no direct tax had not Governor Whitman made a simple arithmetical mistake. But that mistake, which should have been obvious to a high-school boy, has been irretrievably damaging in its consequences.

In his first financial message to the Legislature Governor Whitman set forth the appropriations which he thought the Legislature should make. He started with the State Controller's estimate of $47,000,000. To this he added $8,000,000 for sinking fund contributions and $9,000,000 for Supply and special bills.

His mistake lay in not knowing what the Controller's estimate included. This estimate of $47,000,000 included $30,000,000 for the expenses of government and $8,000,000 for sinking funds, and $9,000,000 for Supply and special bills. In other words, Governor Whitman included the sinking fund item and the Supply and special bills item twice in his total.

If Governor Whitman had been willing to admit this mistake when it was pointed out to him by President McAneny, Senator Saxe, and others, there would have been no direct tax; for, on Governor Whitman's own figures, after his mistake had been eliminated, there was no need of a direct tax. But Governor Whitman was unwilling to admit that he was wrong.

He sent for Controller Prendergast and demanded that the Controller defend him from his own mistake. This the Controller did by ignoring Governor Whitman's original statement and evolving an elaborate, novel, and unworkable system of State finance.

Even when the newspapers and the public tossed aside the Prendergast defense as not germane to the issue Governor Whitman remained obdurate. He sent for State Controller Travis and requested him to make a statement.

Controller Travis was wise enough to avoid Governor Whitman's mistakes and Mr. Prendergast's fancies. He declared that a direct tax was necessary, not because appropriations would be too great but because revenues would be too small. And Controller Travis's defense received little attention from a public that was now thoroughly aroused to the fact that something was seriously wrong at Albany.

In the meantime William Barnes, Senator Brown, and other practical-minded Republicans decided that they could make good use of Governor Whitman's ignorance of State finance. By his failure to grasp the purpose and meaning of the items included in a Controller's estimate Governor Whitman had given them, in advance, an apparent alibi for a raid of the Old Guard. Governor Whitman had said that a direct tax of $18,000,000 was necessary. Realizing that all the proper activities of the State Government could be carried on without a direct tax, these astute politicians saw that if a direct tax of $18,000,000 was levied, this $18,000,000 could be used for patronage for the Republican machine.

The result is now a matter of history. Organization Republican Senators and Assemblymen were whipped into line. Departments were reorganized so that this mass of new patronage might be distributed by the faithful. Senators who desired to carry home spoils to their local communities traded their votes for a chance at the pork barrel. State departments were encouraged to ask for large and extravagant appropriations. Every time the appropriation bills were reprinted their totals swelled. Finally, when every conceivable job had been provided for Republican workers, when every community that desired special favors had been accommodated, the Senate and Assembly prepared to pass the appropriation bills.

With their appetites whetted by the political plums that were falling in riotous profusion, the Republican legislators made one final plunge into the pork barrel on the night the appropriation bills were passed. The chosen few were called into conference, amendments were pinned and pasted upon the appropriation bills, and then the steam roller was put into action.

Even the majority Senators who voted for the bills had no accurate knowledge of what these bills contained when they voted for them. As for the minority members, who had consistently protested against this plundering of the State, they had been kept in such total ignorance of what was going on, that they refused to vote on these gorged appropriations.

In the light of what really happened there is something tragically humorous in the statement made by Governor Whitman after the bills were passed. "I said a month ago," Governor Whitman is reported to have said, "that a direct tax of $18,000,000 would be necessary. Events have proved that I was right."

It is not too late for Governor Whitman to undo part of the damage that his mistake has wrought. If he can be made to realize that he has been a pawn in a plan to oppress the taxpayers of New York he will apply his veto power to every bloated appropriation now before him.

Appropriations Passed to be Vetoed

I have been informed that a number of special appropriations carrying large sums of money were passed for the sole purpose of being vetoed in order that Governor Whitman might wield the blue pencil upon them instead of upon the appropriations carrying the precious patronage of Mr. Barnes.

No such plausible procedure will deceive any one. These made-to-order appropriations must of course be vetoed, but, in addition, the executive blue pencil should descend upon every other appropriation which was passed without regard to State necessities or Governmental economies.

I have made this somewhat lengthy review of the entire situation because, in order to understand the insincerity and falsity of Controller Prendergast's attacks upon my administration, published in last Sunday's TIMES, an understanding of the entire financial situation is necessary.

Every reader of the article in which Controller Prendergast attempts to defend the imposition of a nineteen-million-dollar direct tax will probably agree with me in describing the article as a partisan defense of the action of the Republican majority in the Legislature. It must have been apparent to every one that where partisan advantage could be obtained, the Controller stated the fact, avoided the fact, or denied the fact, as the necessity of his argument demanded.

His contention that he was discussing the questions involved in his position as a financial officer of the City of New York is hardly sustained by his article, which shows that his interest was the interest of a Republican partisan.

He creates at the beginning a pleasant fiction that a new financial policy has been inaugurated in the management of the State finances. The difference between the financial policy of this year and last year is the difference between economy and prodigality on a debauch. Last year we spent what we had, after laying aside a working surplus; this year they spent all they could borrow or snatch by excessive taxation. Last year the underlying principle was "Go as you are able to pay"; this year the policy is "Pay as you go—and go as far as you can."

In his preliminary statement of the situation existing today Mr. Prendergast shows that his own mind is still confused concerning the nature of the State's financial system. In an article in which he declares that a reform policy has made a Supply bill for next year entirely unnecessary he sets up as an appropriation program for the next fiscal year appropriations of approximately $63,000,000, indirect revenues of $40,000,000, new revenues of $4,000,000, and then says that the difference of $19,000,000 represents the necessity for a direct tax. This statement in the face of the fact that $24,000,000 of the $63,000,000 are appropriations which may be expended before the beginning of the next year about which he talks.

Leaving for the time the conclusion of Mr. Prendergast in relation to next year's budget, I wish to state exactly what is happening this year and what the relation of last year's financial policy is to that of the present. Last year the Legislature made appropriations amounting in the aggregate to $47,890,000. This total was made up of supply and special bills amounting to $9,946,000, sinking fund contributions amounting to $7,677,000, and a general appropriation bill for the support of the Government during the present fiscal year of $30,276,000.

Financial Situation When Whitman Came In

The experience of the last ten years has shown that overlapping appropriations so adjust themselves that any Legislature which provides revenues sufficient to meet the appropriations which it makes has in every year safely provided for every demand which has been made upon the State Treasury. Therefore, the fact is that the total of $47,000,000 represents the amount of revenue which should have been provided for meeting the obligations of the present fiscal year, provided that the expenditures authorized by the present Legislature did not exceed similar appropriations made last year.

The estimated revenues from indirect sources for the present fiscal year were $42,157,000. Mr. Prendergast assumes that the actual revenues received this year will be $5,000,000 less than the estimated revenues. He says that this is due to the European war, and calls attention to the fact that the indirect revenues for the first six months of the year have fallen off $5,000,000.

It is true that the revenues from indirect taxation for the first six months of the year were $3,000,000 less than they were last year, but if the Controller had made any intimate analysis of cause and effect he would have discovered that there are counterbalancing influences which will bring the revenues for this year close to the estimated amount, and it is more than possible that the improved business conditions may cause the revenues this year to exceed the estimate.

In addition to the indirect revenues there was a cash surplus in the Treasury at the beginning of the year amounting to $12,303,000, making the total resources for meeting the expenditures of this year $54,000,000. This was the financial situation which I left as Governor. Whatever may be the fluctuation of receipts during the year, owing to the fact that the indirect taxes are payable at different times, it is certain that a comfortable surplus would have remained in the Treasury on Oct. 1 next if the present Legislature had limited its appropriations for this year to the amount which was appropriated in special and supply bills last year. But the present Legislature has chosen to make appropriations for the present fiscal year $15,000,000 in excess of the appropriations for the same purposes made by the Legislature last year.

Mr. Prendergast recognizes the seriousness of the situation, and feels the criticism which has been leveled at such an enormous increase in the burden of taxation, and as a partisan he tries to shift the blame and the responsibility to my administration.

Mr. Prendergast attempts to justify the appropriation of $3,700,000 for the construction of the barge canal by the claim that the last administration should have submitted a referendum. As a partisan he uses good judgment in not attempting to defend the appropriation itself. It was clearly shown in the debates in the Legislature that there was no necessity of making this appropriation.

The figures given by the State Engineer in December, 1914, which were made upon when there was no controversy over this matter, prove conclusively that there are funds enough from the proceeds of the bond issue to make all payments which will be required upon existing contracts this year. These same figures show that, if all existing contracts were prosecuted to the fullest extent possible, the payments required would not equal the balance on hand in the Treasury.

The reason that this appropriation was asked for is, not because there would not be funds enough to continue this work during the present year, but because in the event that a referendum should fail this Fall, there would not be money enough to provide the million dollars required to pay Republican officeholders in the Engineer's Department next year, which is the year of the State campaign.

Of course, the answer to Mr. Prendergast's contention is that there was no necessity for a referendum last year, but we must call attention to the deliberate concealment of truth in his statement about the need of a referendum. Under the Republican Administrations preceding 1911 the route of the Barge Canal was changed in the Western Division at an increased cost to the State of nearly $4,000,000. During these same Republican Administrations certain contracts were let, and at the time of letting any one of ordinary engineering ability would have know that these contracts could not have been completed under the plans provided. These two facts made sure, long before any Democratic Administration came into power, that a referendum would be required to provide funds in excess of $101,000,000 to complete the Canal.

If there has been any laxity on the part of anybody in submitting a referendum in the past, the laxity is chargeable entirely to the Republican Administrations, which so changed the plans that the Canal could not be completed within the money appropriated. Nowhere in this article has Mr. Prendergast shown his partisanship so clearly as in his deliberate omission of the real facts of this matter.

Mr. Prendergast next attempts to justify the appropriation of more than $4,000,000 for construction purposes by stating that it was made necessary by the neglect of my administration. If he had been treating this question in a spirit of fairness, he would have stated that only an insignificant portion of the appropriations in this construction bill represent appropriations which were vetoed by me; that if there had been any failure to provide suitable appropriations for construction purposes last year the Republican Assembly of that year shared with the Senate the responsibility for it.

But the fact is that influences and pressure of all kinds from parties interested in this or that institution had caused the appropriation and accumulation of large sums of money which could not possibly be used, so that at the beginning of this fiscal year there was more than $6,700,000 unexpended, which had been appropriated in former years for this purpose.

"Intense Partisanship" in Prendergast Statement

It requires no argument to sustain the position that the State should not tax the people in such a manner that millions of dollars should be tied up without any use, and that the true and wise policy of the State should be to appropriate each year such money for these purposes as can be properly and economically expended.

Mr. Prendergast's intense partisanship caused him to set up a table of comparison between the administrations of Governors Dix, Sulzer, and Whitman and my own. Because he could not be fair and true to the facts, he omitted to say that in the Dix and Sulzer administrations the State paid for the $4,000,000 educational building and for the reconstruction of the Capitol, making nearly $7,000,000 which is included in Mr. Prendergast's totals, but which are not part of ordinary institutional construction.

Furthermore, he resorts to the cheap expedient of adding the Barge Canal appropriation to the appropriations of the present administration in order to make a striking comparison. And more than that, the figures which he gives in his statement are not the true figures in relation to any one of the four administrations. I am at a loss to understand how one who holds a responsible public position could inject into a discussion of the fiscal affairs of the present year a statement of the appropriations for the next fiscal year, over which my administration had no control and with which the Legislature and Governor of last year had nothing to do, and then insinuate that I am responsible for the magnitude of these appropriations.

Items Cited by Prendergast

Mr. Prendergast enumerates certain items included in the supply bill and special bills this year, and says that they are due to my failure to provide for obligatory expenses for the present fiscal year.

He cites the appropriation for the State census. Mr. Prendergast knows that the appropriation for the census ten years ago, in 1905, was made by the Legislature in 1905. He knows that the amount of the appropriation is dependent upon the scope of the census and that that could not have been determined until the present Legislature met. The appropriation for the 1915 census should be made in 1915.

He cites an item of $500,000 for the Constitutional Convention. Mr. Prendergast knows that the Legislature of 1894, after consultation with the delegates to the Constitutional Convention, made the appropriation for the convention in 1894; and that no appropriation for this year's convention should have been made until the delegates to this year's convention had been consulted. In 1915, as in 1894, the appropriation for the convention should be made in the year it convenes. In addition, Mr. Prendergast knows that these two appropriations were for special and unusual purposes, which do not occur from year to year, and he also knows that my administration made an appropriation of $1,502,000 for similar special non-recurring purposes.

He mentions an item of $425,000 for the Workmen's Compensation Commission. Last year the experts who were responsible for the organization of the Compensation Commission determined what amount was required for conducting the business of that commission, and the exact amount asked for was granted. At the time the appropriation was made no one could have accurately determined what the amount required in actual operation would be.

Mr. Prendergast mentions an item for legislative printing of $300,000. This is a plain attempt to pad the total. It may have been a mistake, but the fact is that the Supply bill of last year carried a similar appropriation, which covered every actual obligation of the State for this purpose up to the time of the passage of the Appropriation bill.

He mentions an item of $330,000 for canal repairs and lock tending. Last year the Legislature reduced the appropriation for this purpose to $300,000 [illegible] normal tenders were [illegible] cent. of such [illegible] done by the Superintendent of Repairs on the several sections increased this sum to approximately $450,000. All money expended in excess of this normal fixed charge for the purpose could be for one of two purposes—either to make expensive and permanent repairs upon the old canal, or to provide an excuse for putting on a large number of laborers who were politically valuable.

It was absurd to think of expending large sums of money for permanent repairs upon a canal which was to be abandoned within a year or two, and while I, as Governor, did not make this reduction, I was in entire sympathy with the action of the Legislature in reducing this appropriation, because I knew that for years, under administrations both Democratic and Republican, the canals had been made the football of politics. A proof of this was that more than 1,500 men were carried on the canal payrolls who were absolutely exempt from any civil service restrictions.

Mr. Prendergast speaks of an item of $267,000 for the State hospitals. This represents a reduction made by the Legislature in the appropriation bill of last year for which I had no responsibility, but concerning which I again wish to say that I am in entire sympathy with the action of the Legislature. The appropriations for State hospitals last year allowed, for all purposes except salaries and wages, the exact amount requested by the hospital authorities.

Appropriation For State Hospital

In the matter of salaries and wages a reduction was made for the following reason: An examination of the hospitals, which is set forth also in the report of the Commissioner of Efficiency and Economy, shows that the number of employes in the different institutions was so much too large that in all the institutions from 10 to 20 per cent. of the employes were off duty all the time. The reason the present Legislature is granting this deficiency and granting an increase in next year's appropriation is that the hospital officials and employes have the most compact and energetic political organization for promoting their own interests which exists, or ever has existed, in the State of New York.

Mr. Prendergast mentions an item of $316,000 for the Educational Department. Article XXVIII. of the Education law says that the Commissioner of Education, on or before the 20th of January of each year, shall make an apportionment for the annual appropriation by the Legislature for the support of common schools. In January, 1914, the Commissioner of Education made such an apportionment in accordance with the law, and he submitted to the Legislature a statement of the amount required for the support of common schools in accordance with the statute. The exact amount submitted to the Legislature was appropriated. In January of this year, it was the duty of the Commissioner of Education to make a similar apportionment and make a similar demand upon the Legislature for an appropriation for the support of schools to be made to the regular appropriation bill and not the supply bill. The law does not recognize any appropriation or any apportionment in between. And this appropriation of $316,000 represents a misconstruction of the law on the part of the Legislature.

Mr. Prendergast mentions an item of $85,000 for charitable institutions. The appropriation for charitable institutions was prepared last year by the Republican Ways and Means Committee, and adopted without any change by the Senate and the Governor. If the appropriations were too small, the Republican Assembly must share responsibility, but in this case I believe that the Republican Assembly was right, because an examination of the requests of these several institutions for items in the Supply bill shows that the major portion of the requests represents increases in salaries.

Mr. Prendergast mentions an item of $60,000 for the Health Department. This item represents the carrying out of new features of the organization of the Health Department which were not sufficiently developed last year to determine the extent of the appropriation required. If the fact is that new activities on the part of the Health Department in the prevention of diseases require this additional appropriation, I am sincerly glad that it has been made.

Mr. Prendergast mentions an item of $90,000 for State prisons. This $90,000, if it is required, represents a change of policy in the prisons. The policy previous to last year was to make the prisoners contribute to their own support more and more every year. If that policy had been continued there would have been no reason for any additional appropriation. The policy today, however, is for the State to contribute more and more to the support of its prisoners, and if that policy is continued, it is inevitable that the appropriation must be increased.

Thus a careful analysis of Mr. Prendergast's claim that $2,527,380 of this year's appropriations were due to my failure to provide for necessary obligations is absolutely false. None of the items specified above were due to any act of mine; none of them represent deficiencies. The appropriations for census and Constitutional Convention have no relation to the appropriations for last year. The Workmen's Compensation Commission appropriation represents an amount which only the present Legislature could determine. Of the other items, three of them are entirely unnecessary, and two of them are due to a change of policy for which the present administration, and not mine, is responsible.

Printing and Highway Repair Appropriations

Naturally Mr. Prendergast attempts to justify some of the extraordinary increases in the appropriation bill. He adverts to the printing item of $300,000 which appears in the appropriation bill for the first time in several years. Acquaintance with the financial history of the State would have told him that legislative printing is a proper supply bill item and that when an attempt was made some years ago to place an item for printing in the general appropriation bill it did not prevent a reappearance of the item in the supply bill. That is to say, all the money in sight was used up before the Legislature convened on the following year.

Mr. Prendergast's statement in relation to the outrageously high appropriation for highway repair is undoubtedly due to unfamiliarity with the facts. There was, as he says, a balance in the hands of the County Treasurers after the beginning of my fiscal year, but it is also true that this balance was obligated for 1913 work and not one cent was available for the work of 1914. It is also true that a balance of more than $500,000 was carried over into the present year, which ought to have made Mr. Prendergast see that the appropriation of last year, which was only half of that made for this year, was too high instead of being too low.

The fact is that Governor Whitman recommended in his message an appropriation of $2,000,000 for highway repair, but when the Republican bosses obtained control of the Highway Department the sum was increased to nearly $4,000,000. This increase—and I cannot say it too forcibly—was made solely for the purpose of providing more than a million dollars' worth of jobs to the camp followers of the Republican machine.

It is true, as Mr. Prendergast says, that 1,200 miles of road were completed last year. Mr. Prendergast neglects to say, however, that a large proportion of the added roads were of either brick or concrete and will not require any considerable sum for maintenance for a long time to come.

What Mr. Prendergast says about the repairs to highways in cities and villages is interesting, and especially interesting to those who know the inside facts. The supporting schedules for the highway maintenance appropriations call for nearly a million dollars for repairing roads within the limits of upState villages and cities.

The criticism of this indefensible plan by the press of New York City caused its partial abandonment. And the credit for cutting the sum of $225,000 from the original total belongs to the newspapers and not to the Republican bosses and Legislature.

The statement of State Controller Travis in relation to sinking funds reproduced in Mr. Prendergast's statement contains information that is true, but that places credit where it does not belong. Every one familiar with last year's legislation knows that the readjustments of the sinking fund was brought about by my efforts. The Hon. Francis Lynde Stetson, who appeared informally at the hearing on the matter, will so testify, I am sure, and so will most of the big bankers of New York City.

"No Defense" For Additional Tax

Before concluding let me consider one other statement made by Mr. Prendergast. He states that the failure of my plan to provide only such revenues as were needed for actual obligations created a cash deficiency of $6,235,536. Mr. Prendergast gyrates himself into this conclusion by ignoring the surplus of $12,300,000 at the beginning of the fiscal year. He then attacks the financial policy of Governor Roosevelt, Governor Odell, Governor Higgins, and Governor Hughes, which I adopted.

Every one of these Governors estimated the surplus as a part of the revenues and paid current obligations from it, and this financial policy worked to the great advantage of the State. Between the nebulous theories of Mr. Prendergast and the business methods of Governor Higgins, which experience proved wise, I prefer the way of Higgins.

Out of all this discussion one fact stands forth conspicuous and indisputable. The appropriations of the State have been increased nearly $20,000,000 in one year, and an addition of $23,000,000 in taxation has been imposed upon the people. To this fact there is no answer and there can be no defense.

WEDDINGS MONOPOLIZE CLOSING DAYS OF TOWN SEASON

Alliances Between Age and Youth Cause Society to Wonder—California a Lure Now for Honeymooners—Cupid Active in the Engagement Business—Brides Shun May.

WEDDINGS have monopolized the closing days of April to such an extent that society has had little else to talk about. There have been leisurely weddings and sudden weddings and wedding of age and youth. In fact, if the nuptials continue in point of suddenness and surprise, the Spring season will pass into social history as distinct from any previous period.

Maytime is here now, and society is already planning a gay season in the country. Before the month is over many of the town houses will have been closed, and the exodus to the seashore and inland resorts begun in earnest. The intermittent hot and cold waves atmospherically has kept many in town. Those who have been accustomed for years to sail for Europe about this time are seemingly well contented with things and conditions at home.

Word comes from Switzerland that they are preparing for the tourist season. Monte Carlo is in full blast, and Nice is very gay. Spain is hoping that she will get a quota of the tourists this season, and Italy is holding out inducements. Still, it will take a good deal of courage to make the trip abroad for pleasure this Summer. The Government is refusing passports for those who are anxious to cross to visit the scenes of the great battles or to tour in any of the countries now at war merely as sightseers. Some people are going just the same, but they undoubtedly have a good deal of the love of adventure in their make-up. The majority who are sailing, though, are intent upon some mission for humanity or are called abroad by their business interests.

The bridal couples, however, are moving in large numbers toward the West, and the usual European honeymoon trip has been eliminated altogether. The Panama-Pacific Exposition is proving a lure for the newlyweds. The report comes from the Middle West that many girls are getting married, or hastening their marriages, in order to include the trip to California and the exposition in their bridal itinerary.

It remains to be seen just how May will fare as to society weddings. Very few so far have been announced for the month, owing, no doubt, to the superstition of the brides. Of course, there are many girls who are superstitious about every month when it comes to marriage, as is proved by a recent census of unmarried females in the country. The topic that seems more to the front now is that which concerns marriage between elderly women and young men.

So frequently do marriages occur between youth and middle age that very little attention is paid to them unless the contracting parties are members of families distinguished alike for wealth and ancestry. Marriages between middle-aged men and women are also quite an ordinary occurrence these days, and even the union of very old people, both perhaps with one foot in Charon's boat, is so common that they receive hardly passing note.

It takes a union, though, between youth and age to start society asking questions. Why do so many elderly women marry young men? Aside from the wedlock point of view, it is not unusual to observe old women, the dignified dowager, the aristocratic matron, surrounded by a group of young men. At many of the smart dances of the Winter the old men, the middle-aged men, were to be found in the smoking room, or plastered like wall flowers in some snug corner talking unromantic business, while the matrons and dowagers were fox-trotting and supping with the men of the younger generation.

It is said that old men lose their capacity for romance sooner than the women. Men idealize, and women sentimentalize. The elderly woman who marries the young man is still in pursuit of youth, for it is a crime for a woman to grow old, and in the union she finds her helpmate still youthful in ideas and sentiment. As a rule, it is the woman who has been married to a crusty and unromantic old man, and separated by divorce or death, who marries some young fellow. And such a marriage generally takes place suddenly or secretly, either of which adds to the romance of the occasion, especially for the elderly bride.

SOME of the weddings set for May will be celebrated in the country, which is fresh and verdant now with flowering orchard trees and shrubs.

Tomorrow Miss Gertrude Munroe Smith, daughter of Professor and Mrs. Munroe Smith, and Lawrence Cushing Goodhue of Boston will be married at the home of her parents, 169 East Seventieth Street, at 4:30 o'clock. The ceremony will be performed by the Rev. Lea Luquser of Bedford, N. Y.

Miss Anne Swan Hubbard, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wells Hubbard of Boston, is to be the maid of honor, and the other attendants will include Mrs. Francis A. Goodhue, Mrs. Harold Freeman, and the Misses Genevieve Sanford, Elizabeth J. Russell, Dorothy Cramp, and Katharine Crane. The two pages are to be Masters George Walton Green and William Henry Wetherill, cousins of the bride.

Francis A. Goodhue is to act as best man, and the ushers will be Roger Hooper, Franklin King, and William A. Barron of Boston and Eben S. Doolittle of Utica, N. Y.

On Saturday afternoon Miss Margaret Eaton Porter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. Hobart Porter, and J. Horton Ijams, son Mr. and Mrs. John Tabb Ijams, will be married in Trinity Church at Hewlett, L. I., the subsequent reception to be held at Lauderdale, the Porter country place at Lawrence, L. I.

Miss Ida Miller Taylor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Miller Taylor of New Rochelle, sailed yesterday from San Francisco for Shanghai, China, where she is to be married on May 27 to the Rev. Francis J. M. Cotter, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Francis Cotter of this city. Mr. Cotter is a graduate of the General Theological Seminary and was ordained at the Cathedral in Albany last June.

Plans have been completed for the wedding of Miss Ione A. Ralli, whose marriage to Henry Butler Allen of Greenfield, Mass., is to be celebrated in All Souls' Church on May 29. Miss Julia A. Ralli is to be her sister's maid of honor, and the bridesmaids will include a younger sister, Miss Lois A. Ralli, and the Misses Margaret Allen, a sister of the bridegroom, and Miriam Walker. A young cousin of the bride is to serve as flower girl.

Thomas Lamb Allen will be best man.

The ushers have not yet been selected. The wedding reception will be held at 351 West End Avenue, the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Anthony P. Ralli.

THIS is the first week of the Spring season which is entirely void of announcements for indoor gayeties. The entertaining that will be in progress now till the heated term sets in will be along the most informal lines. Small dinner and theatre parties are going on constantly, and a few dances. The hostesses at some of the small May dances are planning to have Maypoles, which will add to the gayety of the scene.

Everybody seems to be keen on getting to the country, if only on motoring or week-end trips. The outdoor social season has commenced, and the lure of pastures green is growing. On Saturday society will be well represented from the Meadow Brook and other Long Island colonies at the meeting of the Meadow Brook Association, at the estate of Harry Payne Whitney's at Westbury, L. I. Polo starts the following week at Piping Rock.

The Newport season will begin shortly. Mrs. Vanderbilt plans to open the Breakers this week for the Summer season. Mrs. Rutherfurd Stuyvesant has leased the Morrell cottage for the season, and Mrs. Fletcher Ryer of San Francisco has taken the place in Bellevue Avenue owned by Mrs. Benjamin Thaw.

The season at Aiken, S. C., has been prolonged this year, but by the middle of May the last of the cottagers will have departed. This is the case at the majority of the Southern resorts. Mr. and Mrs. Guy Norman have returned to Newport from Aiken. The wedding of their daughter, Miss Hope Norman, and Elliot C. Bacon, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bacon, is to take place early in June. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock are not returning to Westbury, L. I., from Aiken until late this month. Mrs. William Jay, who is in deep mourning, will not go to Newport until late in May. The Duchess of Manchester is the guest of the Duchess de Chaulnes at Aiken.

An interesting party now touring in Virginia is made up of Mrs. Joseph E. Widener, Clarence H. Mackay, and Mrs. John Jacob Astor and a group of friends, who are visiting the historic points of interest. Since the war stopped all European travel society is fast becoming acquainted with the beauties of its own country, and many such trips have been planned for the coming Summer.

There was some entertaining last week at Neponset, Mass., when Alexander S. Cochran's new schooner yacht was launched. Mrs. J. Norman DeR. Whitehouse christened the yacht Sea Call. Mr. Cochran is considering a trip around the world in the yacht. Mr. and Mrs. John H. Hanan expect to spend most of the Summer cruising on board their steam yacht Surf, which is now on the way here from England.

Mr. and Mrs. Ulysses S. Grant, Jr., are visiting Mrs. Jesse Grant at her home in San Francisco, and taking in the sights of the Exposition. Mr. and Mrs. William Ives Washburn are at the Virginia Hot Springs for some weeks. Mr. and Mrs. George D. Cross are at their country place at Bernardsville, N. J., to remain until late in Autumn.

With a week of weddings came several interesting engagements. On the day of the Duke-Biddle wedding in Philadelphia, which was reported in the papers there to the extent of six and seven columns, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin N. Duke made known the engagement of their daughter, Miss Mary L. Duke, to A. J. Drexel Biddle, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Drexel Biddle. The double romance in the two families, coming on the day of the wedding of Miss Cordelia Biddle and Angier B. Duke, was of widespread interest.

Miss Duke, in 1912, was reported engaged to Prince Ludovic Pignatelli d'Aragan, which was denied. Her engagement to Mr. Biddle has been in existence since Easter week, and they decided to announce it formally at her brother's marriage. The wedding will probably take place in the early Summer at Ardsley. Angier Duke's bride is only 17 years old. They have gone to the Pacific Coast, and will spend the Summer with Mr. Duke's family on their return. The Biddles of Philadelphia have been almost as much of an institution in that city as the State House itself, and with the Drexel family, have possessed an unusual share of prominence, as well as money. The Duke family for years has been prominently identified with the tobacco business. Miss Duke is one of the greatest heiresses in the United States. Her fiancé is 21 years old, and still a student at the Phillips Exeter, and has inherited his father's fondness for athletics.

Another engagement of the week of interest to society was that of Miss Rosalie O'Brien, daughter of former Justice and Mrs. Morgan J. O'Brien, to Dr. Henry James of this city, son of the late Nathaniel W. James and Mrs. James of Baltimore, Md. Miss O'Brien made her début several seasons ago at the same time as her sister, who is now Mrs. Stuart Duncan Preston. She is a devotee of outdoor sports, having been identified with the success of the recent indoor horse show for the American hostels for refugees in Paris.

Dr. James just returned recently from France, where he was in service at Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney's hospital at Juilly, having gone over in the Fall with Mrs. Whitney and others. He is now associated with his uncle, Dr. Walter B. James. Their wedding will probably take place next month at the O'Brian place, Rose Crest, Good Ground, L. I.

Another engagement of widespread social interest was that of Miss Margaret F. Andrews, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul A. Andrews of Newport and New York, to Morgan Belmont, son of August Belmont. Miss Andrews has been active in the doings of the younger set since her début two seasons ago, and is devoted to outdoor life. She has appeared in numerous society entertainments and gained quite some renown as an amateur dancer, appearing in an effective Oriental dance Winter before last at the Junior League performance. Miss Breese's engagement was also recently announced. Mr. Belmont was graduated last June from Harvard University and is one of the best-known polo players among the younger generation in this country. He has just returned from Alaska, after a six months' hunt for big game.

AMONG the births of the week was a son born to Mr. and Mrs. Leonard M. Thomas, at their home, 13 East Eighty-seventh Street. A son was also born recently to Lord and Lady Decies at their home in England. Lady Decies, who is the second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George J. Gould, has two daughters. She was married to Lord Decies in February, 1911.

Alfred G. Vanderbilt, who sailed yesterday for England, will attend the English Derby as an official. He will inspect his house and stables over there, and probably see that they are fully protected against any stray bombs that might be dropped from a Zeppelin, should one come to London. He will return in six weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank H. Witherbee are leaving today for the White Sulphur Springs, W. Va. A musicale will be held on Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Newbold Le Roy Edgar, 125 East Fortieth Street, at which Christian George, pianist, will play.

SOMETHING new in the entertainment line will be seen on Thursday afternoon, when a Garden Gambol will be given at the opening of the Italian Garden at the Hotel Biltmore for the benefit of the Mayfair Relief Fund for war refugees and convalescents. Miss Julianna Cutting is to be in charge of the general dancing, and there will be capers and gambols by the Mayfair maidens, also exhibition dancing. The admission at the garden gate will be $2, tea included.

Mrs. J. H. Holden is Chairman of the Executive Committee, which also includes Mrs. W. C. De Lancy, Mrs. Hill Moller, Mrs. Kenneth Murchison, Miss Sarah W. Coolidge, Mrs. Arthur Murphy, Mrs. Rauel B. Kimball, and Miss J. M. Humphreys.

Among the patronesses are Mrs. Henry Alexander, Mrs. J. Stewart Barney, Mrs. Charles Steele, Mrs. John L. Waterbury, Mrs. Edward van Ingen, Mrs. P. G. Thebaud, Mrs. L. Cass Ledyard, Mrs. Archibald Rogers, Mrs. George R. Read, Mrs. Arthur M. Dodge, Mrs. Henry N. Cryder, Mrs. Marshall Clyde, Mrs. George H. Benjamin, Miss Alice Hill Chittenden, and Miss Robinson Smith.

The Metropolitan Opera House will once more open its doors on Saturday next, when the German artists of the company will appear in a special performance of "Die Fledermaus," a comic opera by Johann Strauss. The performance takes place under the protectorate of the German Ambassador, Count von Bernstorff, and under the auspices of a special committee of women, consisting of Mrs. William R. Sheperd, Chairman; Mrs. Rudolph Cronau, Secretary; Mrs. Harold Greene, Curtis, Mrs. Randolph Guggenheimer, Mrs. Ernst Krueger, Miss Edith A. Reiffert, Mrs. Albert A. Ripperger, Mrs. Ulrich Schoedler, Mrs. Emma Schwartz, and Mrs. Samuel Untermyer. The proceeds will be divided equally between the German Red Cross and the fund of the Deutsche Buehnenverein for the relief of artists suffering in consequence of the war.

The United Polish Societies of New York, of which W. A. Mazur is President, are to hold a celebration of the Polish Constitution Day on Saturday evening at Carnegie Hall. Speakers in Polish and in English will contribute to a program which will be varied by the singing of the Polish National Anthem by groups of Polish singers, and two or more tableaux are being arranged by Professor Richard Ordynski, who had charge of "A Night in Poland" scenes.

The body of the house will be by invitation entirely, but the boxes will be sold for the benefit of the American Polish Relief Committee's Fund. The first tier boxes will be $6; those on the second tier, $4. Among those who have already subscribed are Mr. Stengel-Sembrich, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Van Sinderen, Mrs. Edward J. de Coppet, and Mrs. Henry A. Alexander.

Tickets may be had at the American Polish Relief Headquarters, 8 East Forty-seventh Street.

THE week of weddings started off with the marriage on Monday of Miss Katharine Moore Barrows, daughter of the late President John Henry Barrows of Oberlin College, Ohio, and Alfred E. Richards, who was for several years a member of the Faculty at Princeton University, and is now one of the heads at the New Hampshire State College, Durham, N. H. They left later for a trip to California.

From Washington came the report of the marriage of Senator Henry F. Lippitt of Rhode Island and Mrs. Thomas K. Laughlin, a sister of Mrs. William H. Taft, and a sister-in-law of Irwin B. Laughlin of the American Embassy in London, who married Miss Therese E. Iselin, daughter of Adrian Iselin.

On Wednesday many of the bridegroom's Vanderbilt connections attended the wedding in Grace Church chantry of Miss Frances A. Dallett and William Thorn Kissel, son of Mrs. Gustav E. Kissel. On the maternal side Mr. Kissel is a descendant of the late Commodore Vanderbilt. On the same day Miss Helen Le Roy Miller was married to Malcolm E. Smith of Smithtown, L. I., in the Church of the Heavenly Rest. On Thursday noon Miss Helen E. Sachs and Nathan Straus, Jr., were married in the Temple Beth-El, Fifth Avenue and Seventy-sixth Street, with a breakfast afterward at the St. Regis, at which Mrs. William Jennings Bryan was among the guests.

Thursday was also marked with a sudden wedding, Louis E. Stoddard, the noted polo player, and Miss Mollie Andrews, a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Andrews, being married late in the afternoon in St. Thomas's Church, but not late enough to escape a battery of cameras which had flanked the church since noon. Mr. Stoddard's first wife died two years ago. Their marriage followed close on the announcement of their engagement. The couple plan to sail for Europe late this month. Another Thursday wedding was that of Miss Kate C. Rigga of 122 East Eighty-second Street, and Edward N. Perkins, son of Mrs. Edward C. Perkins of 11 East Eleventh Street, at the Church of the Transfiguration. Still another on that day was that of Mrs. Mims de Apestegula Middleton, a daughter of the late Marquis de Apestaguia of Madrid, Spain, and Raleigh C. Gildersleeve of New York, which took place quietly in the Marble Collegiate Church. This is the bride's second marriage, as last Fall she was divorced from John Izzard Middleton at St. Louis, Mo. She has a son eleven years old. She is a granddaughter of the Rev. Dr. Marvin R. Vincent of 20 East Ninety-second Street, with whom her sister, Miss Emilie de Apestegula, resides. Another sister is Mrs. John Wolfe, who married the son of Mrs. Christopher Wolfe of Tuxedo Park.

Mr. and Mrs. Jean H. E. Saint Cyr, whose secret marriage took place last Friday week in Lewisburg, W. Va., plan to make London their permanent residence. Mrs. Cyr was the widow of James Henry Smith. They are expected to arrive here during the week, and will be at the Ritz-Carlton. Mrs. Saint Cyr owns a house at 35 Grosvenor Square, London, which they will occupy. Her daughter, formerly Miss Anita Stewart, who was married to Prince Miguel of Braganza, pretender to the throne of Portugal, is older than her stepfather. Her first marriage took place in 1879, when she was married to William Rhinelander Stewart, from whom she secured a divorce twenty-seven years later, and several months after was married to the "Silent Man" of Wall Street.

The wedding of Miss Genevieve Clark, daughter of the Speaker of the House, and Mrs. Champ Clark, and James M. Thomson of New Orleans, will take place on June 30 at the Clark home in Bowling Green, Mo.

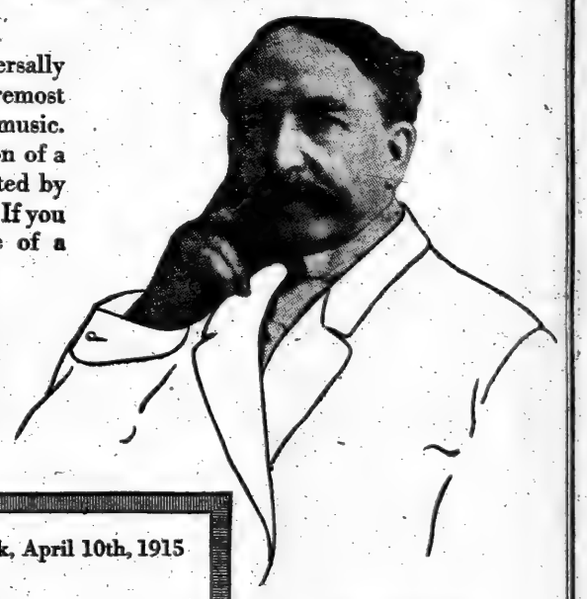
KRANICH & BACH
Player Grand PIANO
"I Have Never Heard Its Equal"
Homer N. Bartlett
Homer N. Bartlett is universally recognized as America's foremost composer of instrumental music. Unquestionably his opinion of a player-piano will be accepted by everyone as authoritative. If you contemplate the purchase of a player grand, the peerless musical instrument, Mr. Bartlett's strong endorsement of the Kranich & Bach should not fail to interest you. It follows:


Bartlett's "Grande Polka de Concert" is one of the most popular piano pieces ever published in America. This selection was first arranged for the player piano more than twenty years ago, and now probably heads the list of the number of rolls sold.
New York, April 10th, 1915
Messrs. Kranich & Bach
Gentlemen:
I cannot refrain from expressing the extraordinary pleasure and satisfaction with which I listened to the rendition of several selections on your Player Grand Piano a few days ago. The musicianly effects achieved—the perfect range from the delicate and beautiful legato tones to the magnificent climax surpassed anything I have ever heard on any player-piano.
The amazing thing about it all was the ease and simplicity with which these beautiful effects were produced, and the way in which passages were made to predominate over accompaniments by the Tri-Melodeme device was almost startling.
I have been present at numerous recitals and musicales where player-pianos were exploited, and many of them were exceptionally well demonstrated, but I can unhesitatingly say I have never heard the equal of the Kranich & Bach Player Grand for tonal beauty and artistic playing possibilities. Yours very truly,
Homer N. Bartlett

WHAT TO WEAR THIS SUMMER

In Going Over the Season's Gowns It Is Best to Assume That Wide Skirt Will Remain Until July or August.

THERE are breakers ahead for the woman who is starting in on the Summer sewing. It is not the song of the shirt but the song of the skirt these days. We are faced on all sides with discouraging facts. Conflicting conditions existing in fashions rise up and confront us with a problem every week.

Changing fashions have been the despair of the ages to everyone who is not a commercialist. We acknowledge they are the life of trade, but protest they are the death of us.

The one thing that we know we must do is to grapple with the problem twice a year, if not oftener, and try to get the best of it. Whatever the result, whether it is good or ill for us, the wise ones know that each season is a stepping stone to another.

Failures are stepping stones more than successes, if we use them rightly, as every philosopher from St. Augustine down has told us, but we are imbued with the feeling that by the time we know how to dress it will be time to die.

One can say that truthfully about many things—about life itself—so there is no reason to attach special significance to it in regard to dress. One has the feeling of envy for the individual who has the strength to disregard most of the fashions and only slightly alter the cut and fabric of her gowns and wraps from year to year as the season and the purse dictate.

These women are never fashionably dressed, but their very disregard of the written rules gives them an emphatic quality which stamps them and puts them apart from the others. You may not like their way of dressing, but you recognize that it suggests power—the power to think out something for oneself and stick to it.

Woman's Needless Worries.

There are few of us so strong and so egotistic. Most of us have the spark of discontent which leads us into many follies, even if it springs from a certain kind of humility which suggests to us that the ways of other women are better than our own and that the law of fashion is above our individual conception.

Some one has suggested that since machinery has taken the place of servants, apartment houses the place of homes, the desire to be a tourist an ambition for a local habitation and a name, and the kindergarten is substituted for the nursery, it is therefore well for women to have clothes to worry over. They might forget they had any responsibility in life, these students of social conditions argue. They remind you, unpleasantly, of David Harum's remark that it was good for a dog to have fleas to keep him from forgetting that he was only a dog.

Every woman will violently deny the suggestion that she hasn't enough to do in the world, but the fact remains that most of her activities are of her own choosing. She adds to and multiplies the tasks that life imposes upon her. Certainly she is nearly rushed to death no matter in what stratum of life she is placed, and she complains she hardly has time to sleep, but if a social surgeon were to operate on her activities and cut away the things that were not necessary she would find that she could lead a restful life.

Organizing of Summer Wardrobe.

These are the days which the poets laud and the people meet with resignation, but not always enthusiasm. Housecleaning, moving to the country, making clothes for the hot weather, debating on the vacation that must be arranged now, battling with the first hot days, are things that are not pleasant to think about, much less meet; but if we bring organized efficiency into the task we will find that the Summer will open out in a restful manner.

Now is the time to tackle the subject; to see what clothes we can alter, how much money we can spend, how it can be divided, and whether it is the better part of wisdom to give everything away and start out afresh.

Through the seasons there has grown up a suspicious feeling concerning the probability of any costume lasting from one Summer to the next. There are economically inclined women who continue to carefully put away the clothes that served until October in the fond hope that the next May will find them available. This hope is usually frustrated by those who design fashions. The wheel of things moves on with small regard for our personal hopes and the fates who spin out fashions have not an ear for our tale of economy.

Once in a while there arrives a season of repose in which we find to our heart's delight that the washtub or the cleaners will set things right and that new clothes are not needed for weeks to come until the heart of the season has arrived. This season is not upon us. The lucky woman may find it possible to alter some of the gowns of last Summer—if they were new then—but she will find even that task not to her liking.

MATCHING PARASOL AND FROCK.

Fashion Imposes Hard Task.

If she had saved the gowns of a decade ago she would have better luck. If she could open the closets and she could find gowns from 1860 and 1870 in the attic and bring them back into freshness she would have a pleasant and successful task, but to take a hobble skirt of last Summer and convert it into a circular or a melon-shape, or an accordion-plaited Loie Fuller affair, needs more than a dressmaker; it needs an optimist who has the qualities of a magician. It would take Aladdin's lamp, a mathematician, and a civil engineer, is the way one sewing woman put it yesterday.

There is only one sensible way to go at the task. Take a day full of sunshine, draw back the curtains, let up the shades, and spread out everything one possesses for the hot weather season into the searching sunshine of a May day. There will be no concealed faults. No fabrics will take on a color or a freshness which they have not. Whatever is tawdry will be shown in its full value. Whatever is torn, or frayed, or stained will be discovered. There will be no illusions. One will know the worst.

A day spent in this manner is well spent. It may save money, although it may demand money in the beginning. Every woman has gone through the experience of making over, in her mind, while she is trying to sleep some night, a gown that hangs in the back of the closet. She ends the mental task with a feeling of contentment and enthusiasm. The bubble bursts the next day when she investigates the possibilities of the gown in her hand, with the sunshine coming through the window. Its flaws are manifest; the task is impossible. So are our dreams often dispelled by sight and evidence.

It takes courage to discard any garment which is only half worn and which does not meet the season's requirements, and yet there comes a feeling of elation after it is done. It is no longer there to tempt one into the indiscretion of wearing it as it is, or into the extravagance of spending more money on altering it than it is worth. Women who keep their clothes hanging in the closets until they are not good for any one are not acting with charity or wisdom.

It is difficult to see why the industry of buying second-hand clothes has grown to such proportions and is attended with so much success when one considers how little is offered by these commercialists for any kind of garment.

One of the best-known women in New York engaged in this work thinks that $8 is a fair price for her to pay for an evening gown that has been worn only three times and belongs to the season. She often gives only $5 for a gown that cost $300 if it belongs to the preceding season. She gives $10 for a good coat suit and sometimes $15 for a three-piece suit. When asked what her profit was on such purchases, she said that she could rarely sell a gown for more than $15 and that her trade was very brisk at this price.

She did not think that a $7 profit on an $8 investment was unusally good because her expenses were heavy; she had to keep open a shop in the fashionable district and to offset the capital she was constantly putting into her stock. She might have to carry twenty or thirty gowns over because she could not find a purchaser for them.

She has no difficulty in getting clothes at this price, and the list of her clients reads like the social register. There is not a fashionable débutante, bride, or smart matron that she does not know sufficiently to give her an opening to bid for her clothes, and she has often had the chance to buy for $100 the whole outfit of a rich woman who is going into mourning.

Giving Away a Problem.

It would seem so much kinder to give a gown to some one who needed it than to sell it for $8, especially when one does not need the money. The answer to this statement is that it is difficult for rich women to give their clothes away where they will really help. Women who are not in society cannot wear these clothes, as they have no social opportunities for them, and the women who have the opportunities do not care to be seen in the gowns that have been exhausted by their friends, or put the amount of money into it that it needs for alteration.

There is much good reasoning about this statement. A young woman of high birth and admirable social alliances who is poor enough to work for her yearly income was given two dozen gowns and hats by a rich cousin, and every one of the garments is still in her closet. From some of them she has extracted the silk linings for petticoats, or a bit of lace to make a collar, but none was suited to her style of living. There was no charity in giving her the clothes, yet her rich cousin thought differently.

As there are few women who can find the right person to whom they can give clothes, if that person is going to sell them for $5 it is far better to secure the cash and give it away. Many women do this. Some of the best-dressed women are known to sell their clothes for charitable purposes; this is good business and good charity. It meets the demands all the way around the circle.

In going over the season's wardrobe it is best to stake one's chance on the wide skirt staying with us until July or August. There are dressmakers who are prophets, and who say that we shall probably wear the full skirts for two or three years at least. There are others who say it will be out of fashion by midsummer. The only way to be even partly safe is to compromise on moderate width with a leaning toward fullness.

If your last Summer skirts had long tunics the remedy is easy. That truism has been repeated over and again for two months. The added fact that the new skirts, both pleated and circular, have wide bands of a different fabric and sometimes of a different color at the hem, gives one even more hope for successful alteration.

Pleating is in high demand and the knife-pleated tunic, therefore, which was considered as an unfashionable garment, can be made into a skirt by the addition of a deep band. It may be of satin if the skirt is of cloth, or cloth if the skirt is of silk. No one objects to these combinations nowadays.

Then there is the question of the long sleeve to be answered. Suppose the gowns of last year, also the coats, had three-quarter sleeves—what then? Fortunately, fashion has brought about the use of double sleeves. The upper part is opaque, the lower part transparent; therefore one can add chiffon or muslin, net or lace to a short sleeve and bring it down to the wrist. These lower sleeves are very often full as well as transparent, and they are finished at the wrist with a velvet bracelet and a narrow ruffle. All these details are good to remember when you are up against the task of altering sleeves.

It is not a particularly helpful fact in fashion that hip yokes, as well as shoulder yokes, are acceptable, for the reason that skirts are so short that no one needs a suggestion as to how to lengthen them. The task of shortening them is easy. If, by chance, a skirt needs an extra depth of three or five inches, remember the hip yoke and use it instead of a band at the hem, unless it is a question of matching the fabric. You may employ a separate fabric as a hem, but you mustn't use it for a hip yoke.

There has come about an odd combination of fabrics in the last month which allows a pleated skirt to be attached to a straight, long-waisted, beltless blouse of another fabric. This idea is very helpful to the woman who is altering clothes.

Take, for instance, a white serge gown copied from a late Callot model in which the long, straight, girlish blouse was of white satin attached under a line of embroidered scallop below the waist to a knife pleated skirt of thin, supple white serge. The long, white satin sleeves were laced at the back from wrist half way to elbow with blue and red silk cords through white embroidered eyelets, and there was a turnover collar of white embroidered linen.

The Swastika.

C. V. C.—Will you kindly give me what information you can about the "Swastika" cross, what it is the emblem of, and where it originated?

The original place and significance of the "Swastika" sign are alike unknown, various theories having been put forward in answer to both questions. It is certain, however, that the symbol has been known for centuries, and in prehistoric times, in various parts of the world, as an emblem of benediction or good-luck. The word is from the Sanskrit and means "weal-making." The four-branched monogrammatic sign has been found in Europe, Asia, and America. It was known first in the bronze age, and it occurs in the Swiss lake dwellings. In the historic period it is found in Japan, Korea, China, Tibet, Armenia, Asia Minor, Greece, and its islands, especially Cyprus and Rhodes; Italy, France, Germany, Scandinavia, Great Britain—perhaps only under Scandinavian influence—Ohio, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alaska, Mexico, and Brazil. It was not known in early India, and is not known to be native to Egypt, Babylonia, Assyria, Phoenicia, or, till a late date, Persia. It was particularly adopted by Buddhism, and its presence in Japan, China, and Tibet is thus explained. Its origin as a symbol has been the object of endless speculation; some scholars say it is a solar symbol; others an earth symbol, wind symbol, &c.; others that it is merely decorative in its origin. The cross, the lotus petal, the circle, &c., have been suggested as derivations for its form. It is probably chiefly talismanic.

An American Citizen.

JULIUS LEVI.—I am a German and have lived seven years in New York City, but have not been naturalized as a citizen of the United States. I have a son born in New York. Is he a citizen?

The law of the United States of America recognizes as citizens all children born on United States soil. The German Empire does not, for that fact, however, relinquish its acceptance of an American-born son of a German subject as a subject of the empire. When such a child is of age he has the choice of remaining as a citizen in the country of his birth or of returning to be a subject or citizen in the land of his father's nationality. In neither case are naturalization papers required.

Our National Flower.

C. R. ROTHWELL writes as follows: "I notice that in your 'Queries and Answers' of April 4 you give a long list of State flowers and say nothing about the national flower, the pansy, which was created national flower by act of Congress in 1803. Section 2 of this act states that the national sentiment expressed in connection with the emblem shall be 'Liberty, Justice, Union, Culture, and Peace,' and that the last three words, 'Union, Culture, and Peace,' shall constitute the motto. This act was passed to celebrate the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition in 1893.

Mount Morris Park.

In answer to the question as to the history and naming of what is now Mount Morris Park the following letters have been received:

FERDINAND TUSCH: "Morris Park, Morris Avenue, Morris High School, and Morrisania suggest origin. The American Colonel, settled on the tract later known as Morrisania, in 1650, about 1,200 acres irregularly on the east bank of the Harlem River, extending up to Spuyten Duyvil Creek. The most notable of his distinguished progeny were Lewis, 1726-98, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and Gouverneur, 1752-1816, Minister to France, United States Senator, &c. The site of his house was Cypress Avenue and 130th Street. Another Morris house still remains in St. Mary's Park, St. Anne's Protestant Episcopal Church, St. Anne's Avenue and 140th Street, was a gift of the family, and contains remains and memorials of the family. Doubtless Stephen Jenkins's 'Story of the Bronx' will sustain and enlarge the above."

MANADOES.—A correspondent in last Sunday's issue asks who was the owner of the race track adjoining Mount Morris Park when it was acquired in 1839 and after whom the park was named. Your correspondent is probably confusing what was formerly known as Mount Morris and Morris Hill, which overlooks the site of Fleetwood Park race track in the Bronx, with Mount Morris Park. Neither Riker nor Tollman mentions a race track adjoining Snake Hill, as it was then called, and the city maps do not show the location of a race track in that part of the city in the late thirties. Harlem Lane, now St. Nicholas Avenue, became a speeding course twenty years later. The hill and the land to the west belonged to the Benson family, the old homestead which was built before the Revolution and standing till 1854, being located midway between the hill and the Albany Post Road, what would now be 122d Street, east of Seventh Avenue. The Bensons also owned some of the land to the north and south of the hill. A large part of the land to the south was owned by the Vredenburg family, and the Sickles family held a large slice to the east of the hill. The land to the west of the hill was kept intact until the streets and avenues were cut through and the homestead was demolished. T. A. Emmet, father of the venerable Dr. T. A. Emmet, acquired a strip directly south of the hill as a Summer and country home. Harlem village stretched out to the east of the hill, the business centre being at the Five Corners, now about the junction of Sylvan Place and East 120th Street. To the north of the hill were a number of large plots holding the country and Summer homes of wealthy New Yorkers.

"Aside from the impossibility of obtaining a suitable, accessible tract of land for a race track adjacent to the hill, the lack of roads and transportation facilities to this part of the island from downtown, makes it extremely doubtful that there was a race course adjoining the site of the park. Before the opening of the New York & Harlem Railroad to Harlem, about 1839, there were four stages daily to Manhattanville and an hourly stage to Harlem, also a steamboat line from Peck Slip to Harlem Bridge, but the only road to Snake Hill was a narrow country road called the Spuyten Duyvil road, running from the Five Corners to Meyer's Corner, about 131st Street and St. Nicholas Avenue. This ran to the east and north of the hill.

"The land was purchased 'for park purposes' when the engineers engaged in laying out the city streets according to the city plan of 1811 reported that it would be cheaper to buy the hill than to cut it through. The project to acquire the park was supported by the old Harlemites, as there was no public square in Harlem after the Harlem Commons was sold, and it was pushed by the wealthy New Yorkers who had Summer homes in that section to the north, as they believed that by blocking the extension of the Middle Road (Fifth Avenue) it would make access to their restricted section more difficult, and it would prevent the cutting through of some estates which extended across the line of the avenue. Especially interested in the passage of the purchase bill were some of the vestrymen of St. Andrew's P. E. Church, which stood near the site of the present church, a few blocks north of the park. Among these vestrymen were Aaron Clark, who was Mayor of the city from 1837 to 1839; Lewis Morris, Edward Prime, Jacob Lorillard, Colonel James Monroe, Archibald Watts, and members of the Blount, Sands, Ray, Wilmerding, Randel, Sidell, and Anderson families. Concerning the name I find in my notebook on parks two references: 'Named in honor of Lewis Morris, a resident of Harlem, who took an active part in securing the passage of the bill for acquiring the land for a park,' and 'named in honor of Robert H. Morris, Mayor of New York, 1841-1844, during whose administration it was laid out. Price, $40,000.' It does not appear on the map of 1850."

The Dacia.

READER.—Please tell me facts about the Dacia—tonnage, speed, purchase price, for what company built, &c., and also about the owner. Is he an American citizen by birth or naturalization? If the latter, when was he naturalized and what was the country of his birth? What is his standing in Bradstreet's and Dun's?

The Dacia, which was taken into the harbor of Brest by the French on Feb. 27, while en route from Galveston to Rotterdam, is a vessel of 3,544 tons displacement, built for the Hamburg-American Steamship Line, and sold by that company to Edward N. Breitung for the sum of $165,000. Mr. Breitung is an American mine owner, banker, and business man, born in the United States, the son of a member of the House of Representatives. The Query Department cannot supply further personal information. More detailed questions as to the Dacia may be referred to Mr. Breitung's New York office or to the Hamburg-American Line.

The Lithuanians and Letts.

K. H. STITZER.—Kindly advise me what part of Russia is inhabited by the Lithuanians and Letts, and what is their religion.

The Lithuanians and Letts, who are closely related racially to the Slavs, live in East and West Prussia and the Baltic Provinces of Russia. They number about 4,000,000. The prevailing religion among them is Lutheran, although there is an appreciable number of Greek Catholics.

Thomas Edison.

JOHN GRAF.—Will you kindly give me the correct place where Thomas Edison was born, where he started his career, and his first invention?

Thomas Edison was born in Milan, Ohio, and began work as a telegraph operator, working in Boston and later in New York as Superintendent of the New Gold and Stock Telegraph Company. As soon as he was able he set up his own laboratory in Menlo Park, N. J. His first invention was a "repeater" for use in the telegraph.

The Wealth of Nations.

W. S. A.—Will you kindly tell me how the wealth of nations is reckoned, what constitutes its basis of computation, and whether there are any books on the subject? What are one or two of the simplest and most direct?

The wealth of nations is reckoned on a basis of the nation's real and personal property. The United States Department of Commerce publishes reports and bulletins on this subject. For more general literature we must refer you to the Public Library.

Bermuda.

E. J. H.—Kindly settle a friendly dispute between another reader of your admired columns and myself as to whether Bermuda is a West Indian island.

The Islands of Bermuda are not included in the West Indian Archipelago. There are about 360 of these Bermudian islands, of which 15 or 16 are inhabited. Their situation is east-southeast of Cape Hatteras. They are owned by Great Britain and are of great strategic importance.

The Society for Psychical Research

UNINFORMED.—Will you kindly tell me whether there is a New York branch of the Society for Psychical Research—if not, whether there is one in this country, and where?

The headquarters of the American Society for Psychical Research is at 154 Nassau Street, New York City.

A Calendar Inquiry.

C. C. ADAMS.—Please state in your column what day of the week was Feb. 22, 1895?

Feb. 22, 1895, was Friday.

Jewish Population.

C. K.—Please tell me the number of Jews in the whole world.

The London Jewish Year Book for 1910 estimates the number of Jews in the world at 11,625,656. Whitaker's Almanack states the number of followers of Judaism, in its classification of the world's religions, to be 13,052,846.

Sex Ratio in Population.

E. J. V.—Will you kindly inform me what is the proportion of men to women in the United States by recent census?

The census of 1910 shows the proportion of males to females in the United States to be 106 males to 100 females.

"So Long."

H. I. C.—Will you please explain the phrase "So long?"

It would be interesting to have the verdict of readers in ascertaining the origin of this form of saying "good-bye."

Religious Statistics in Germany.

M. P. C.—Please tell me the Roman Catholic population of Germany, the Protestant population, free-thinking population, and total population of the country.

The Roman Catholic population of Germany is, approximately, 20,300,000; the Protestant population, 35,400,000; the "non-Christian" population, 20,000, and the total population of the country, 64,925,993. It is, of course, unnecessary to point out that population statistics antedate the war.

Heads of Governments.

DOROTHY LA VASEUR.—Will you please publish the names of the present rulers of the following countries: Brazil, Chile, Canada, (Governor General,) Australia, (Governor General,) Japan, China, Switzerland, India?

De Wolfe and De Wolf.

G. H. D.—Will you kindly inform me if Elsa De Wolfe is related to De Wolfe Hopper? Is there an Elsa De Wolfe Hopper who is an actress? Who is Edna Wallace Hopper?

Miss Elsie de Wolfe is not related to De Wolf Hopper. The name is not spelled in the same way. There is no actress, or, so far as we know, any person, named Elsa—or Elsie de Wolfe—Hopper. Edna Wallace Hopper is an actress who was the third wife of De Wolf Hopper. She is now Mrs. A. O. Brown.

British and American Wealth.

M. B.—Will you be kind enough to advise me where I can obtain information, or to inform me yourselves, on the following points: What is the combined wealth of Great Britain and her colonies, also her annual income, and the same information in regard to the United States and her Territories?

The annual revenue of the United Kingdom is $918,805,000, expenditures $917,929,000; British colonies, N. E. S., revenue $113,365,000; expenditures $102,248,000; Commonwealth of Australia, revenue $76,687,000, expenditures $75,652,000; Australia, State, revenue $200,880,000, expenditures $196,836,000; New Zealand, revenue $60,944,000, expenditures $61,711,000; Canada, revenue $138,108,000, expenditures $98,161,000; British India, revenue $386,176,000, expenditures $378,962,000; Union of South Africa, revenue $84,117,000, expenditures $80,802,000. The revenue of the United States is $992,249,000, and the country's expenditures $965,274,000; Philippine Islands, revenue $13,490,000, expenditures $14,745,000. These are not fixed or "average figures," but are taken from the census reports of the latest available year. The wealth of the United States is $130,000,000,000, of Great Britain and Ireland, $80,000,000,000. Further statistics can be found in "Whitaker's Almanack," "The International Whitaker," "The Statesman's Year Book," "The American Statesman's Year Book," and "The American Year Book."

A Royal Philanthropist.

C. C. TRACEY.—Can you tell me the name of the German Prince who is a celebrated oculist and has given up his life to treating the poor for nothing? I believe his wife worked with him.

The Prince to whom you refer was Charles Theodore, Duke in Bavaria, who died Nov. 30, 1909. He was the father of the present Queen of the Belgians. His wife was, before her marriage, the Princess Marie-José of Portugal. The little Belgian Princess Marie José is named for her grandmother.

"Worldly."

S. N. M.—Will you be good enough to tell me the meaning of the word "worldly," as "a worldly man"?

Webster gives the definition of the word, in the specific sense to which you refer, as "interested in the enjoyment of the present existence."

German Army Officers.

E. B.—Will you be good enough to answer the following questions: Are there any officers in the German Army, above the rank of Lieutenant, who are not noblemen, and who have not "von" attached to their names? And is the State of New York a republic?

It is undoubtedly true that titled candidates are preferred as officers of the premier regiments of the German Army, but there is no prohibition for untitled men. On the contrary, many of the present officers are manufacturers' sons, more well-to-do, in many cases, than the scions of the old nobility. Many, too, are the sons of "captains of industry" who have been ennobled.

The State of New York, like all other States under the Constitution of this country, has a republican form of Government.

Robley D. Evans.

Mrs. H. G.—Will you kindly tell me when and from where Robley D. Evans was appointed to the Naval Academy of the United States?

Robley D. Evans was appointed to the United States Navy Sept. 20, 1860, from Utah; he was graduated from the Naval Academy in March, 1863.

Sebastopol.

CONSTANT READER.—Will you please give me the old and new pronunciations of Sebastopol?

Lippincott's Pronouncing Gazetteer gives the pronunciation, in English, of Sebastopol just as it is spelled, with the accent on the second syllable. The Russian word is spelled Sevastopol, and is pronounced Sevastopol, with the accent on the penultimate syllable.

The German "Von."

I. D. S.—Please explain the significance of the prefix "von" to some German names. Of course most people know it is an indication of some distinction, either hereditary or acquired, but they do not know (I do not) as follows: Is it conferred by the German Emperor as a title of nobility? Does it carry any privileges or emoluments? Is it recorded in the Heraldry Office in Berlin? Does the recipient receive a diploma from the Emperor in awarding it? Is it hereditary? Is it possible for any one in Germany to assume it?

The title of "von," as a prefix before the surname, was in feudal times the privilege of the landed barons, who thus designated, as in other countries with like prefixes, their ownership of lands. In modern times, however, the prefix "von" may be granted as a title of nobility by the German Emperor or the Kings of the various kingdoms of the empire. It does not carry any privileges or emoluments with it. It is recorded in the Heraldry Office in Berlin if granted by the Emperor as Kaiser or as King of Prussia, in Munich if granted by the King of Bavaria, Leipsic if conferred by the King of Saxony, &c. The recipient is not given a diploma with it. It may be, like the English title of Baronet, personal or hereditary; that is, it may be granted to a man for his lifetime only, or may descend to his sons. It cannot be assumed by any one, but may be earned by any deserving German subject and conferred as a reward for service or eminence.

VACUUM CUP TIRES

With this heavy car average as a basis, the light car owner's expectations of far greater mileage service are easily realized, for mileage increases as weight decreases.

This assurance of top-notch mileage service is made the more pronounced by the toughening process developed by us since the A. C. A. tryout and applied in the construction of 1915 V.C.'s.

This process gives 50% more wear resistance. It also doubles the effective life of the Vacuum Cups, guaranteed not to skid on wet or greasy pavements.

As to prices, our new schedule makes Vacuum Cup Tires the lowest priced tires having any kind of non-skid device added to a tread of regular thickness.

Pennsylvania Gray and Puregum Red Inner Tubes also materially reduced in price—each bearing an unqualified guarantee.

SECOND THOUGHTS ON FIRST NIGHTS

The Art of Frances Starr—The Deception in "The Lie."

OF all maddening questions, this is the most baffling: "What's a good play to see?" When, in the face of all experience, it is asked of you, several courses may suggest themselves. You may sternly question the questioner as to his taste and mood, whether he yearn for melody or melodrama, whether he would laugh or weep, smile or sigh. You may firmly detain him till you have made a brief but careful report on every play in town, which measure has the special virtue of quite discouraging a second offense. Or you may fall upon him and beat him to insensibility or, distracting his attention, take suddenly to your heels. Or, if time presses and you would run no risks, you might take refuge in some such sure suggestion as "Chin-Chin."

"But I've seen that," he objects, much aggrieved; "I've seen it three times."

And then you are undone. The lot of the reviewer, whose task is simply to describe and analyze the plays as they succeed one another on Broadway, is happy compared with that of the Playgoing Committees of the Drama League and the Drama Society, which must needs recommend them. So when one evasively declines to tell "what's a good play to see," deride him not. He need not thereby be betraying a lack of profundity and intimacy in his acquaintance with the drama. He may be merely betraying a lack of profundity and intimacy in his acquaintance with you.

With which disarming preliminaries, this particular reviewer of dramatic entertainment hereby records the fact that were he asked to name the three new plays which, as written and presented, had given him the keenest pleasure and satisfaction this season, he would name "The Phantom Rival," "The Man Who Married a Dumb Wife," and "Marie-Odile." And if—at the point of a gun—he were asked to tell what example of the player's art had most deeply impressed him, he would name that remarkable performance by Frances Starr as the little novice in the far-off Alsatian convent.

It is not peculiarly a difficult part in the common usage of that term, but the play is dependent on it as few plays are dependent on a single rôle. "Marie-Odile" is one of the best things Edward Knoblauch has done, and Mr. Belasco has risen to the occasion, but, in a sense, the honors here are all in one hand, and that hand is Frances Starr's. How easily could you find another actress on the American stage to play it as well? The part is long and arduous. The first act, which must lift those who stray into the theatre and transport them a thousand miles from Broadway, is a triumph of atmosphere, and to this the one who plays the little novice deftly contributes a hundred delicate and suggestive touches. The embodiment is right in every gesture and intonation, but these are externals, matters of technical cunning, of technical proficiency. There is more. She has seen and caught the poetic ideal in Mr. Knoblauch's story and has made it live. There is in her presentment of this wide-eyed, child-like girl in the old mountain nunnery a virginal loveliness, an inner beauty, a spiritual radiance that illumines, that transfigures, the play. It is a superb performance.

Tomorrow night begins the last week of the run of "Marie-Odile" at the Belasco Theatre. That is the occasion of these paragraphs, of these respects paid to the art of Frances Starr.

OF the considerably too many plays produced on Broadway since this frantic season began, several dramatists have each contributed more than one. Thanks—if that is the proper word—to Robert Mantell, Shakespeare heads the list. Shaw comes next with six plays, and, whether he likes it or not—it is difficult to believe it really pains him—there will be a seventh tomorrow evening, when Arnold Daly moves to the Park Theatre and marks the move with a revival of "Arms and the Man." What with Bennett and Bonheur, Brieux has had four brief hearings and Willard Mack has had four plays, long and short. Roi Cooper Megrue has been satisfied, reasonably enough, with two, and, while statistics are happily not available, it is no hazardous guess to say that Mr. Megrue has had more performances in New York this season than any other playwright, beginner or veteran, man or woman, foreign or native, alive or dead. And then there is Henry Arthur Jones.

Since first the curtains rose last Summer, Mr. Jones has had to bow his acknowledgments at three separate premières, and here he is back from Bermuda with a new comedy ready for production in the Fall. "The Goal" and "Mary Goes First" had already been presented when, on the night before Christmas, "The Lie" was played, "for the first time on any stage," at the Harris Theatre. It has been there ever since.

A supplementary review of "The Lie" is justified, if for no other reason than that the present company is different in several particulars from the one assembled for the opening. The most important and enriching change was made when the rôle of Sir Robert Shale, the impoverished and importuning old baronet, was assumed by that delightful actor, G. W. Anson. Recently this column sang the praises of George Giddens, who has reappeared so charmingly as balmly Walter in "You Never Can Tell," and admiring note was then made of how venerable was Giddens. Anson is his contemporary. If the occasionally accurate theatrical records have the matter right, each trod the boards for the first time in Edinburgh late in the year '65, though in their chaffing moments each doubtless vows the other first went on with Betterton, if not, indeed, with Burbage.

G. W. Anson is the son of an actor and the father of an actor. The younger Anson we knew for his work here during the two seasons of the New Theatre and for his agreeable appearance as Van Tuyl in "Romance." His several appearances this season have been painfully fleeting. The elder Anson was last seen here in the revival of "Man and Superman," and now he is winning easy laughter in "The Lie." Lawson Butt and Mercedes Desmore do well enough for the spectator at "The Lie" to hear up under the loss of Vincent Serrano and Violet Heming, now transferred to other footlight vineyards.

"The Lie" is not one of Mr. Jones's best plays, but it is one of his good ones. For all its somewhat gingerly, insecure, house-of-cards structure, it is extremely interesting, but is not the interest kept lively by means of a promise, implied and not fulfilled? Consider this. Elinore Shale has sacrificed everything to shield her younger sister Lucy when to the latter a nameless child is born. Long afterward, when the scandal stirs to unexpected life, this Lucy—Judas sister—steals Gerald, the man she loves, from her by leading him to believe that Elinore was the mother of that baby. From then on you watch the slow, inevitable coming of the truth. From then on your await the moment when, in the light of that truth, Elinore and Gerald will meet face to face. However poignant, however bitter, that meeting is what the wise men call an obligatory scene. Mr. Jones owes it to you. Up to the last moment you are led—by devices, deliberately led—to expect it. Yet the curtain falls with that meeting still postponed. Don't you leave the theatre feeling a little defrauded and mapping out, as you go, the scenario of "The Lie's" unwritten epilogue?

"The Lie" is now in its fifth month. In these dissembling days of cut-rate tickets he would be a hardy annalist who sought to say just how successful any play in town had been. But this much may be recorded: "The Lie" has lifted the hoodoo from the Harris Theatre.

PROCTOR'S FIFTH AVENUE—"The Telephone Tangle," a comedy playlet, with Dorothy Regal in the principal role; Lillian Goldsmith and company in a dancing novelty, entitled "The Lorelei"; the Primrose Four in songs.

THE FIRST-NIGHT CALENDAR.

"ARMS AND THE MAN"—G. B. Shaw's comedy, revived by Arnold Daly; tomorrow night in the Park Theatre.

"THE MIRACLE OF SAINT ANTONY"—A playlet by Maurice Maeterlinck, presented with three other playlets and a pantomime by the Washington Square Players; Friday night in the Bandbox Theatre.

"THE LOST CO-RESPONDENT"—Butler Davenport's farcical comedy, postponed from last week; tomorrow night in the Bramhall Playhouse.

ARNOLD DALY and company will move from the Garrick to the Park Theatre tomorrow night to continue their season in revivals of G. B. Shaw's plays. Tomorrow night the English author's military comedy, "Arms and the Man," in which Mr. Daly has already won success, will be presented. In the supporting cast will be seen George Giddens, Charles Laite, Montagu Love, Stanley Dark, Anne Sutherland, Doris Mitchell, and Fania Marinoff.

"You Never Can Tell" will not be dropped from Mr. Daly's repertoire. It will be given the last three nights of the week and Saturday matinée with the same cast that has been giving such a satisfactory performance at the Garrick. "Arms and the Man" will be the bill the first half of the week, including a matinée Wednesday.

In his little Bramhall Playhouse, the latest addition to Manhattan's collection of jitney theatres, Butler Davenport will present his new farcical comedy, "The Lost Co-Respondent," tomorrow night. The play was to have been acted last week, but the opening performance was postponed to give time for more rehearsals.

The Washington Square Players will give the third bill of their season in the Bandbox Theatre Friday night. Like the preceding programs, it will be made up of four playlets and a pantomime.

"A Miracle of Saint Antony," by Maurice Maeterlinck, will be the feature. So far as known, this playlet has never been acted before. It is not in the Belgian poet's usual vein, being described as a satiric legend, rich in humor. Ralph Roeder made the translation and will act the principle role. Others in the cast will be Josephine A. Meyer, Florence Enright, Helen Westley, Walter Frankl, and Samuel A. Eliot, Jr.

"Forbidden Fruit," an adaptation by George J. Smith of a theme by Octave Feuillet, will be another foreign sketch on the program. Then there will be a playlet by Rose Pastor Stokes, with an East Side tenement setting, "Saviors," by Edward Goodman, and a pantomime by Gertrude Pfeiffer.

THE QUEST OF THE GOLDEN BACKGROUND

By ZELDA SEARS

With her capital performance as Mrs. Dean in "The Show Shop" at the Hudson Zelda Sears has for months been contributing to the gayety of a play that offers tell-tale glimpses behind the scenes in the theatre, and now, infected by the spirit of James Forbes's amusing farce, here she is admitting the layman to another precious professional secret—the mysteries of theatrical photography.

OF course, the background is not so important if one has had sufficient foresight to have been born beautiful. A really handsome woman can take her place before a blank white canvas and be photographed, served, as it were, garnished only with her own good looks, and editors will kneel humbly on her doorstep and beg for the resultant portrait to enliven their illustrated supplements. It's different when you have a face that your friends describe as "interesting." Sooner or later the press agent begins to hint that he is having difficulty introducing your features into the public prints with the frequency demanded by his professional pride, and suggests that he'd like something a little out of the line of ordinary portrait photography—something he could "hang a story on."

That's been said to me so often that the very sound of the words fills my soul with anguish. My nature is peace-loving. Of my own volition I do not wander far afield. My idea of a happy day is one spent in an armchair with a book, not cantering through the city and its suburbs looking for new backgrounds against which to be photographed. So far as I know, the only localities in this vast metropolis with which I have not been involved photographically are the snake house at the Zoo and the interior of a tank at the Aquarium. It's almost foolhardy of me to mention those two places. It's likely to suggest to our press agent an article on my strange power over the reptilian world. Of course I haven't any power, strange or otherwise, but no press agent worthy the name is hampered by a little thing like fact. I can almost see the article now, accompanied by my photograph with a boa constrictor around my neck, a Gila monster in my lap, and bunches of garter snakes on any otherwise unoccupied portions of my person. It would make a very nice article for any one of the deeper-hued yellow journals. It's really a wonder no one has thought of it before.

And the Aquarium might be utilized nicely in illustrating an article headlined "The Musical Ear of the Denizens of the Deep." That would give any ambitious actress an opportunity to pose in five feet of water trying to soothe the savage breast of a snapping turtle by playing the Meditation from "Thais" to him on a clarinet.

Speaking of water reminds me of a most sensational episode into which I was reluctantly dragged by an ambitious press agent on a still hunt for space. The background was in this instance the broad buzzum of Lake Michigan, and the costume was a diving suit—a singularly unbecoming one, and most uncomfortable. Just to give the story a pleasing touch of verisimilitude they insisted on my actually making the descent. The press agent was a strong-willed man, and argument is my pet aversion. I would rather be drowned any day than try to convince anybody of anything!

So down I went into thirty feet of the coldest water that ever existed outside an ice pitcher. To this day my flesh creeps at the remembrance of the chill that struck through the rubber diving suit to my shivering body. My very marrow was frapped. But the press agent was warm and radiant and photographed me going in and coming out, photographed me while having the face plate of the helmet screwed on and while it was being taken off, photographed the professional divers who assisted at the ceremony, and even photographed the placid surface of the waters when they had closed over my devoted head. Unfortunately, he could not photograph me, cold and unhappy, sitting on a slimy rock at the bottom of the lake, scared to a custard, breathing very smelly air pumped down to me through thirty feet of dirty rubber garden hose, and wishing to heaven they'd pull me up. The photographs were a great success. They got a page story, the press agent got his heart's desire, and I got pneumonia.

Another unhappy experience, born of the demand for something different in the photographic line, was when a misguided press agent decided to present me to a long-suffering public as a famous huntress. Goodness above knows that my maiden name wasn't Nimrod—not by a long shot! I hate to hunt a pair of gloves, let alone any animate thing. And as for killing any animal, it would be simply impossible. If pursued by a wild beast, my idea would be to run like the mischief in the direction of a drug store, where he could be mercifully chloroformed. However, there is in my disposition a weak desire to please. If people will only talk to me long enough, they can persuade me to do almost any idiotic thing.

I hied me to Fifth Avenue and purchased what that discriminating street pronounced to be a suitable hunting costume. It looked to me like a mésalliance between a bathing suit and a riding habit, but who was I to question the dictum of Fifth Avenue? The press agent borrowed a gun—a sort of a musket, I think it was; anyway it was very large and dangerous looking—and we sallied forth for Long Island, where a trusting friend had promised to lend me her dog. She had two, an Airedale and a Pomeranian.

I wanted to take the latter, but the press agent wouldn't let me. He said they weren't usually used for hunting. My impression had been up to that time that all dogs hunted naturally. But then my information about sporting matters is very limited. For a long time I had an idea that not eating oysters in Summer had something to do with the same jaws. However, that is neither here nor there. We took the dog and the gun and went forth. Really it seems to me that hunting is a greatly over-estimated sport. We hunted over several vacant lots and never found a thing. It was Autumn and the foliage was beautiful and I gathered a bouquet, so I didn't mind meandering around. The press agent took several pictures, showing me how to hold the gun, and having great trouble with the dog, who did not pose very well.

I got my feet wet, which always makes me irritable, and the photographer got very cross with the dog because he could not teach him to point. He said he could get a very "snappy" picture with me squinting along the gun and the dog pointing. I offered to hold the gun with one hand and point with the other, but he didn't seem to think that would be the same thing. While we were discussing the matter the dog had been doing a little hunting on his own account and discovered what apparently struck him as a very promising looking hole in the ground. He gave one or two excited sort of barks and dove in. The result was electrical. There never was such an outburst before or since. Talk about the wails of a lost soul. Why, the noisiest lost soul would seem to be talking on its fingers if compared to that dog. A blind man could see that he had found some awful animal and been attacked. I begged the press agent to rescue him, but he said that his only experience in menagerie work consisted in once having interviewed Bonavista, the lion-tamer, and he didn't feel that he was qualified to interfere.

Zelda Sears and Patricia Collinge in "The Show Shop."—Hudson.

Of course I couldn't let a borrowed dog get chewed to hang nails and never lift a finger to save him. The press agent held the gun and the bouquet, and I reached into the hole, got the dog by one leg and pulled him out. The outraged animal whose home had been invaded came, too. He and the dog were too interested in each other to be separated.

My memory of exactly what happened next is a little blurred, but I feel sure that the early Christian martyrs had absolutely nothing on me. Talk about being thrown to wild beasts in the arena, I know exactly how it feels. The press agent said afterward that the animal was a woodchuck, but privately my belief has always been that it was something far more ferocious. The dog got distinctly the worst of it, and tried to climb into my lap for protection, in his excitement, quite overlooking the fact that I was standing up at the time. It was very awkward for all three of us. In the melée, I was severely bitten in the leg, and my hand chewed almost to a pulp by the dog, who nervously mistook it for some portion of his adversary's anatomy. It is not true that a taste of blood renders animals uncontrollable. After gnawing my ankle, the woodchuck, with great dignity, gave the Airedale a distinctly contemptuous look, and deliberately withdrew to his hole, bearing with him all the honors of war that could be garnered in that vicinity.

The photographs taken previous to the encounter were a great success. There weren't any taken after. The dog and I were too upset. The press agent was the only calm one. By the way, it turned out later that my bouquet was largely poison ivy; luckily I am immune. The press agent wasn't. It's always been a pleasant memory to me that I let him hold it.

The most imaginative young press photographer in the whole wide world interviewed me a short time ago in quest of photographs to illustrate an article about "Well-known women in their homes." I have no more home than a rabbit. The old song, "It's Home Where the Heart Is," could be suitably paraphrased in my case into "It's Home Where the Hat Is." Just at present I live, move, and have my being in two rooms in a quiet little hotel in a side street. When the aforesaid imaginative young man made his appearance I showed him my restricted quarters, hoping he would pronounce them quite impossible. On the contrary, he smiled a smile that would have made the Cheshire Cat look like an amateur, said "charming!" and commenced to unlimber his camera. He looked about my 12 by 12 living room with the sort of capable alertness that always conquers me. I felt myself becoming wax in his hands.

He said: "First something exceedingly homelike!" calmly removed a bit of needlework from the hands of my maid, placed it in mine, posed me beside my reading lamp, pressed the button, and said: "That will do nicely for 'Miss Sears in her Living Room.'"

He looked fixedly at an anaemic fern, excused himself from the room and returned almost momentarily bearing a rubber plant and a palm that usually grace the hall of the hotel. In a few deft moments he grouped his booty on the window, along with my own poor floral invalid, posed me in front of them, photographed the result, and announced in triumph: "Miss Sears in Her Conservatory."

The piano was his obvious prey. He placed me before it, my hands upon the keys, adjured me to look as "soulful" as possible—not an easy task with a face like mine—and exclaimed: "Miss Sears in Her Music Room." Then he delicately suggested that I change to a negligée and a breakfast cap, which accomplished he moved my modest dressing table into a suitable light, arranged it according to his own ideas of what an actress's dressing table should be, recorded the combination in his trusty camero, to be labeled "Miss Sears in Her Boudoir."

Just here a friend with a small child made her appearance. That was beer and skittles to the artist. He placed the child firmly in my arms and said ecstatically: "Now for something sweetly domestic!" Useless for me to protest that I did not care to appear "sweetly domestic"—that I'd never had a child, and my photographic appearance with one in my arms might be misconstrued; that I was so unfamiliar with children I scarcely knew which end of a child you put the hat on. Nothing availed. One might as well succumb gracefully to the inevitable first as last.

Then as a fitting finish to our afternoon he whisked me into a borrowed touring car, broke the speed limit over to Fifth Avenue, and backed the car up against the iron gates of a most palatial residence. I fancy it was J. Pierpont Morgan's. Here he placed me at the steering wheel—a most uncomfortable place for a woman who doesn't know a carburetor from a case of epilepsy and is agonizingly afraid they will start accidentally. Then, backing across the avenue so as to get as much as possible of the palace background into his picture, he pressed the bulb. I am morally certain some trusting editor is printing that picture labeled "Zelda Sears at the wheel of her new Panamus touring car, leaving the gates of her New York home."

When I saw the proofs of those pictures my faith was everlastingly shattered in the saying "The camera cannot lie." My two small rooms looked like the interior of Windsor Castle, and a picture of myself in evening dress which the imaginative photographer had posed on the back stairs of the hotel, looked as imposing as the celebrated Queen Louise of Prussia descending the steps of her palace.

If the camera cannot lie, believe me the camera plus a good press agent can at least prevaricate.

SCENES AND STORIES OF THE STAGE

"INSIDE THE LINES" AT THE LONGACRE.

INTRODUCING MISS KINGSTON

It is a curious commentary on the present theatrical season that Gertrude Kingston, who occupies a unique position in the London theatre as founder of the Little Theatre and an actress for whom G. B. Shaw has written a number of plays, should make her first appearance on the New York stage in the little Neighborhood Playhouse. In a season when Manhattan's multiplicity of playhouses suffers from a dearth rather than a surfeit of good plays, a season, moreover, in which every Shaw drama presented has proved more or less of a success, it seems a bit odd that she has not had a hearing on Broadway.

It cannot be urged that Miss Kingston's presence is not known to local managers or that she is a stranger to them, for it is said Mr. Shaw wrote personal letters to several suggesting that they present her to the New York public in his drama, written especially for her, "Great Catherine," since, as the author himself expressed it, she was the only living English-speaking Queen. Perhaps some Broadway manager will make the pilgrimage to Grand Street during Miss Kingston's brief engagement in the Neighborhood Playhouse and "discover her."

The other day Miss Kingston, who recently returned from Boston, where she gave some of her plays in the Toy Theatre, talked of her own playhouse and gave some impressions of her visit here.

"People often say that the idea of my Little Theatre," said Miss Kingston, "is to present the uncommercial play. As a matter of fact it seemed to me the time had come when the uncommercial play should be the commercial play. That is, I believed there were enough people who did not care for an everlasting diet of crook, crime, and graft plays, who liked to see drama acted that bore some relation to the possibilities and plausibilities of life to make a small theatre pay. Admitting that 90 per cent. of the people who go to the theatre go to be lifted out of themselves—to laugh, to cry, to forget their troubles without regard to any fidelity of the play to life—that would leave 10 per cent. who really want to see serious plays. When I say serious I do not mean necessarily the melancholy dramas of some of the Russian writers, for instance, but those plays which resemble life and its problems as experienced by the average man and woman.

"So I built the Little Theatre with a seating capacity of 400. It is one of the old Adams houses just off the Strand, near the homes of Mr. Shaw and Sir James Barrie. It was opened in 1910 and it has done very well, though there have been a number of serious problems to contend with. To begin with, we have to advertise a play more heavily in London than here. Five hundred dollars a week is only a moderate amount to spend on advertising a play during its London engagement, and whether the theatre seats 400 or 4,000 makes no difference. And then I think our plays are rather better cast than are yours, particularly those in which you have stars. I imagine this means a higher average salary, though this is offset somewhat by the fact that our players, with the assurance of a long run, are often willing to work for less money.

"This is my first professional visit to New York," Miss Kingston continued, "though I was here once before. That was three years ago, when I ran over intending to spend the week-end and stayed three or four weeks instead.

"The thing that impresses me about your life here is its extremes of luxury on the one hand and of inconvenience on the other. For instance, even your poorest tenement is equipped with a bath having hot and cold water, a luxury boasted only by our better-class homes in England, and then you step out on the street and in two weeks wear out a pair of boots on your badly paved and torn-up streets that in England would last two years. You leave brilliantly lighted Broadway and in a minute are submerged in the blackness of a side street in which you fear for your life.

"The work your little playhouses like the Neighborhood and the Bandbox are doing has interested me immensely. I saw the Washington Square Players the other night and was struck with the intelligence displayed in their program of playlets. They tried things, as for instance the Andreyev playlet, that professional players would not have the temerity to attempt, or, having attempted, might not have the intelligence to do. They seem sincere in their undertaking, and, after all, if one is sincere one's efforts are bound to demand a certain respect. In this connection something Mr. Shaw has just written me in a letter is apropos."

And Miss Kingston read this distinctly Shavian bit from a long, typewritten letter:

"'In my experience I have noticed that nothing that is not fifty years out of date is ever done except by cranks or amateurs and it is sound policy to make friends of these little bands in their days of small things, as you will find twenty-five years later they are the only important survivors of their generation.'"

THE LAST NIGHT AT WALLACK'S

Being an Epilogue Written by Oliver Herford and Spoken by Rose Coghlan After the Farewell Performance at a Famous Playhouse.

THE Play is done, and with it another page
Of History is turned. Upon this stage
The voice of dark Melpomene that thrilled
Your soul, and Thalia's sprightly tones that filled
Your heart with mirth, are now forever stilled.
Tomorrow there will be the clash and clang
Of pick and shovel, and the alien gang
Of chartered Vandals who with drill and blast
Will shatter one more relic of the past.
And the dull passer, pausing on his way
To Terpsichorean Travesties will say,
Exulting, in the language of the clown,
"Another skyscraper! New York's some town!"
And as the weeks go by, will rise and rise
A Titan monster stretching to the skies,
Yet tho' by measured cubits it outspan
The Woolworth tower, or Metropolitan,
Or shame the Singer Building's crown of gilt,
'Twill never reach the heights Elysian
Won by this house that Lester Wallack built.
Know then although these walls be swept away,
Where Thalia and Melpomene held sway,
And commerce sit enthroned in their stead,
The spirit of Lester Wallack is not dead.
There are today a kindred few who fight
To keep the sacred flame of art alight,
That flickers feebly mid the fumes obscene
From brazen altars, rear'd by hands unclean—
Iscariots of the Drama, that profess
To love the Truth, but love the Goddess less
For her pure beauty than her nakedness!

"Tut! tut!" I hear you say, "Have you no tact!
We came to feast on Fancy—not on Fact.
Is this an Epilogue, or is it a Tract?"
Dear friends, the fault is mine. I should have known
That while a First Night Audience may groan
And gnash its teeth, 'tis quite the other way
On a Last Night—then every one is gay,
Greeting the flattest joke with noisy cheers
And laughing hugely—to keep back the tears.
So let us place on serious thoughts a ban
And strive to be as cheerful as we can.
Ah, me! Some tell us that departed men
Come back in ghostly shape to earth again.
It may be so; one thing is certain, quite,
If there be ghosts, then ghosts are here tonight.
Draw closer, friends—closer in Spirit, I mean,
And in the mind's eye peer behind the scene,
Behind the ancient curtain, drawn by gray
Old Time, betwixt today and yesterday.
Even as I speak, there seems to come between
My eyes and you a phantom picture screen,
A tapestry of woven memory,
Wrought in the loom of time, and I can see
Another audience sitting in your places
And yet not wholly other; there are faces
Among the ones I look upon tonight
Whose eyes send back to mine the answering light
Of Memory's masonry—by which I know
That other audience of years ago.
Just three and thirty years ago these walls
Echoed with eloquence and curtain calls,
With lusty cheers and ladies' laughter light,
For it was Lester Wallack's opening night.
Then Lester Wallack in his house was King,
His graceful genius breathed through everything.
To serve him was a privilege, and we
Who loved him, here salute his memory.
We played "A School for Scandal"—we, I say—
Gilbert, Tearle, Elton, Leeson, Holliday,
Edwards, Pope, Taylor, Pearson, Floyd and Eyre—
Edwin, Gwinette, Kerr, Elliott and Sinclair,
Boniface, Ponisi, and one more, I forget—
Oh, yes! Rose Coghlan—(we have never met.)
Who can forget John Gilbert's voice and mien
And splendid acting in the "Quarrel" scene.
He really was Sir Peter—as for me
I had my hands full acting Lady T.
How I remember on the opening night
In this same dress, standing just out of sight,
There in the wings, in trepidation blue
Waiting my entrance—
(A voice)
Lady Teazle!
"Heavens, 'tis my cue"—
(Voice)
"Sir Peter! Sir Peter! You may bear it or not, as you think fit, but I ought to have my own way in everything—and what's more, I will, too."

What am I thinking of? There's no one there!
I must have fancied it. Yet I could swear
It was John Gilbert's voice; it rang so true.
It went right through me. Did you hear it, too?
Ah, now I know! How like John Gilbert's tact.
He always loved to do a kindly act.
He meant it in a friendly way to jog
My mind and tell me that an Epilogue
Must not go on forever. Well, he's right!
I'll take the friendly hint and say good night.

Just one word more, dear people, as you go
Again into the clamor and the glow
Of Broadway, pause for one last look upon
This Honored House; tomorrow it will be gone.

NOTES WRITTEN ON THE SCREEN

VITAGRAPH THEATRE—"The Chalice of Courage."
STRAND—"The Woman."
BROADWAY—"Help Wanted."
81ST STREET—"Shooting of Dan McGrew."

QUITE the most interesting announcement of the season in the motion-picture world was the one made last week that Geraldine Farrar, prima donna of the Metropolitan Opera House, had been engaged by the Lasky Feature Play Company to act before the camera in several of her famous characterizations. The announcement is important because in securing Miss Farrar the movies have invaded the most exclusive artistic circle for their talent. Other operatic artists have acted for the movies before, notably Lina Cavalieri, but this is the first time a reigning queen of the world's greatest opera house has been persuaded to divulge her art outside the sacred confines of the great opera houses.

The Lasky Company say they were anxious to secure Miss Farrar quite as much for the prestige she will unquestionably bring the movies as for any profit that may accrue to them by their coup. The latter they hold an unknown quantity because of the large salary they must pay the diva. This salary is not given out, but $25,000 would seem a reasonable minimum since her contract calls for eight weeks' work this Summer. It may be even more than this, though that amount would seem a quiet Summer's work not to be hay-fever-sneezed at. It is figured that Miss Farrar's name in front of a moving-picture theatre will draw the most determined anti-cinemas within, and that once inside they will be converted.

In the Broadway Theatre this week the feature film will be a photo-dramatization of Jack Lait's drama, "Help Wanted." Lois Meredith acted the principal rôle for the screen version, a rôle in which she was seen when the melodrama was first acted in New York. New South American travel scenes and new comedy pictures will be included in the bill.

"The Shooting of Dan McGrew," based on Robert W. Service's poem of that title, will be the feature offering in the Eighty-first Street Theatre the first half of the week. The star of the picture is Edmund Breese. The latter half of the week "Woman and Wine" will be projected.

The Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady's story, "The Chalice of Courage," has been arranged for the screen and will be shown in the Vitagraph Theatre as the feature of the bill this week. It is in six parts and was produced by Rollin S. Sturgeon with a cast of players from the Western Vitagraph group, including William Duncan, Myrtle Gonzalez, George Holt, and Natalie De Lontan.

William C. De Mille's melodrama of Washington political life, "The Woman," will be shown this week in the Strand Theatre. The play was originally acted in the Republic Theatre several years ago, when it was produced by David Belasco with a cast that included Mary Nash, Jane Peyton, and Milton Sills. In the movie reproduction the principal parts were taken by Lois Meredith, Theodore Roberts, Mabel Van Buren, and James Neil.

In the ballroom of the Hotel Astor tonight the Friars will give one of their occasional dinners. This particular dinner will be in honor of John Ringling, of circus fame, and the Friars have planned to make it one of the most successful of the season. The list of speakers looks as if Mr. Ringling had let himself in for a bit of chaffing. It includes such ground and lofty comedians as Irvin Cobb, Raymond Hitchcock, George M. Cohan, De Wolf Hopper, Rennold Wolf, Alf T. Ringling, and Wilton Lackaye.

Nemo WEEK = Beginning MONDAY MAY 3

Four Old "Nemo Friends" You'll Quickly Recognize as "Real Friends," Vastly Improved

THIS Nemo Week is an event of vast importance to all womankind. For more than two years the corset business has been a riot of fads and freaks. Corsets were little more than rags. Some women wore no corsets, others were induced to desert the corset-friends of a life-time to join the absurd, disfiguring and unhealthful "slouch."

But women are now wearing real corsets, and have risen en masse to demand the style and healthful comfort that the Nemo alone can give. As a result, the sale of Nemo Corsets, especially the old, well-known and favorite models, is greater than ever.

Nemo Week marks the annual high tide in the corset trade. At that time, dealers everywhere have full lines of Nemo Corsets. You can get the exact model and size you need. Therefore, NEMO WEEK is the BEST TIME to buy Nemo Corsets.

For All Average Full Figures

(In EXTRA SIZES—38, 40, 42 and 44—$6.00.)

For Full Figures, Flesh Rather Soft
No. 506 NEMO SELF-REDUCING. Four elastic gores in front of skirt, and elastic bands at back, make this the most wonderful and comfortable figure-reducing corset in existence. Long skirt, medium bust, sizes 22 to 36..... $5.00
(In EXTRA SIZES—38, 40, 42 and 44—$7.50.)

For a Heavy, Sagging Abdomen

Agencies Will Sell Seats for Greek Performances.

Granville Barker has solved the problem of distributing more than 20,000 tickets for the three performances of Greek tragedies he will give in the new Stadium of the College of the City of New York, by an arrangement with the various theatre agencies of the city. By this arrangement, fifty agencies dealing in cut-rate and advanced-rate tickets will sell the seats at the regular prices. These range from 10 cents to $2, according to location. The agencies are scattered through Manhattan and Brooklyn, so seats may be booked conveniently. Tickets for the performances in the amphitheatres of other Eastern colleges may also be purchased through the agencies.

"Iphigenia in Tauris" and "Trojan Women" will be the dramas presented. The dates for the performances have been set for May 31, June 2 and 5.

On With the Dance.

The coming hot weather will not cause the Danse des Follies above the New Amsterdam Theatre to close. An artificial cooling plant will be installed and it is planned to keep the resort open throughout the Summer. In the theatre below, Ziegfeld's "Follies" will begin their annual engagement early in June.

Palisades Park to Open Saturday.

Palisades Park, the amusement resort overlooking the Hudson across from the 125th Street Ferry, will begin its new season next Saturday. Workmen are busy getting things ready for the opening and patrons will find new devices to amuse them.

Naturally the war will be reflected. "Through the Dardanelles" being the name of a new water ride in which the relative positions of forts and attacking battleships are shown. The trip

The bathing pool will again be a feature of the resort. This is one of the finest still-water baths near New York.

Gamut Club Doings.

Mrs. S. Ludlow Neidlinger, Chairman of the Dramatic Committee of the Gamut Club, will entertain the committee and the players who will be seen in a program of playlets to be given a week from tomorrow afternoon in the Candler Theatre, this afternoon in the clubrooms. "The Death of Tintagiles," by Maurice Maeterlinck; "Self-defense," by Anne Moore, and "The Courtship of Then, Now, and Tomorrow," by Anna Wynne, will make up the program in the Candler.

A Green Room Benefit.

An interesting program has been announced for Tuesday afternoon, May 18, for the benefit of the building fund of the Green Room Club. The program will include several playlets, "The Wonder of the Age," by Sada Cowan; "Back to the Yards," by R. Sawyer Goodman; "The Hooneymooners," by Thompson Buchanan, and "The Bomb."

TRUCKMAKERS TO MEET IN DETROIT THIS WEEK

Convention Under Auspices of Chamber of Commerce Will Discuss Many Subjects That Affect Industry.

More than 200 delegates are expected to attend the motor truck convention in Detroit on May 5 and 6, judging from acceptances of the invitations already received. Practically all of the leading truck companies will be represented, and there will also be delegates from an even larger number of newer and smaller but nevertheless active companies. Among the companies that have sent in the names of their delegates are makers of the Adams, Armleder, Atterbury, Autocar, Baker, Chase, Commerce, Couple-Gear, Denby, Federal, General Motors, General Vehicle, Indiana, Kalamazoo, Kelly, Kosmath, Maccar, Mack and Saurer, Moon, Menominee, Packard, Pierce-Arrow, Reo, Republic, Selden, Signal, South Bend, Standard, Sternberg, Studebaker, Velie, United, Walter, Waverley, White, and Wilcox.

Although promoted by the Commercial Vehicle Committee of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, the convention is an open affair in the interests of the industry as a whole, as were the first and second truck conventions, held in March and June, 1912, in New York. It will, however, be open only to manufacturers of complete vehicles, as the truck manufacturers feel that they have many business problems to consider among themselves before taking up the aspect of questions relating to the parts makers and retail truck dealers.

Papers dealing with pressing problems of the industry will be presented and discussed at length, and probably resolutions expressing the sense or recommendations of the gathering on various subjects will be voted upon. The number of papers has been limited purposely to allow time for full general discussion that will bring out all points of view and crytallize opinion resulting in definite action. Among the important subjects to be dealt with in addresses and discussions are the following:

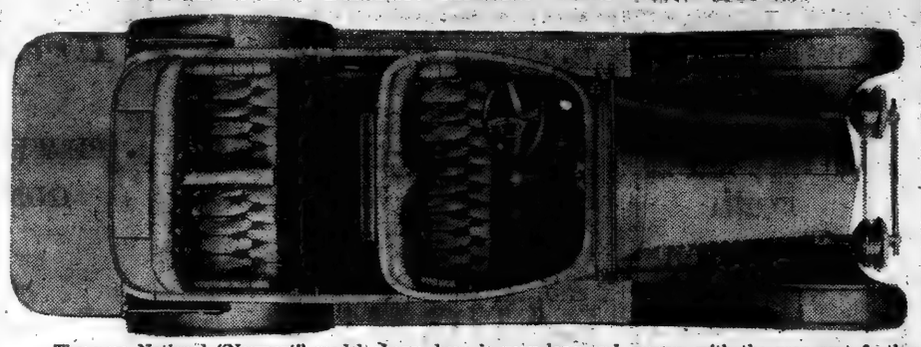
Business Conditions and Trade Prospects, by W. W. Wardrop.
How to Improve Conditions in the Truck Business, by John W. Van Alen.
The Clayton Act and Federal Trade Commission, by Charles Thaddeus Torry.
Standard Service Policy, by Alvan Macauley.
Time Payments, by W. T. White.
Standard Lead Ratings, by H. Kerr Thomas.
Second-Hand Trucks, by W. L. Day.
Truck Shows or Demonstrations, by M. L. Pulcher.
Investigation of Service Conditions, by Vernon Munroe.
Selling Through Dealers, by Robert O. Patten.

The convention will be opened by President Charles Clifton of the N. A. C. C., and will be under the direction of the Commercial Vehicle Committee, consisting of Messrs. White, Chairman; Macauley, Wagoner, Thomas, and Pulcher. The first session will begin at 1:30 P. M. Wednesday, following the regular monthly meeting of the N. A. C. C. Board of Directors in the forenoon and "a get acquainted" luncheon. There will be two sessions Thursday, beginning at 9:30 A. M. and 1:30 P. M.

Highway Marked in California.

The Lincoln Highway is entirely marked across the State of California, one telegraph pole to the mile being painted with the familiar red, white and blue marker in the country and one pole to every block in the cities.

NOVEL BODY DESIGN MARKS THIS NEW MODEL.



The new National "Newport" model shown here is very long and narrow with the rear seat further forward than usual to give better riding for its occupants. The rear seat is divided by an arm rest, in which there is a glove and veil compartment. Other arm rests inside the car at the sides are shown. A covered baggage compartment back of the rear seat gives much room for impediments.

PLANS INTERCITY RUN.

Scheme for Novel Contest Outlined at Dinner to C. G. Sinsabaugh.

Marking the completion of a recent change in the automobile trade paper field, a dinner was given at Churchill's on Friday night to C. G. Sinsabaugh, who has come from Chicago to be the editor of Motor. The host was Clifford Ireland of Peoria, Ill., Western representative of the Contest Board of the American Automobile Association. There was a strong representation of the Three A's present, including John A. Wilson, President of the organization; A. G. Batcheider, Chairman of the Executive Committee; Richard Kennerdell, Chairman of the Contest Board, and W. H. Traband, Jr., Secretary, and F. A. Croselmire, member, respectively, of the same board. Others present included Alfred Reeves, general manager of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce; William Sweet, general manager of the Motor and Accessories Manufacturers; Julian Chase, formerly editor of Motor, who has just taken over the editorship and part ownership of Horseless Age; David Beecroft, editor of The Automobile, Nathan Lazarnick, C. T. Scharps, C. Briggs, and Duncan Curry.

The suggestion of Mr. Sinsabaugh for an intercity run with contests features, with Washington as a starting point, met with hearty approval by those present. He has been chiefly responsible for the success of the intercity runs held for eight seasons now between the Chicago Automobile Club and the Chicago Athletic Club, and is thoroughly up on events of this kind. The sanction of the A. A. A. was promised for the proposed intercity contest, which will probably be run in the early Autumn, for a trophy to be presented by the Three A's. Mr. Wilson caused hearty applause by announcing that he would offer an additional cup for the winner. The losing team in the contest will be expected to give a dinner to the other contestants.

THIRTY STATES USE CONVICTS ON ROADS

Different Systems of Employing Prison Labor in This Way Described.

Thirty States at the beginning of the present year had on their statute books laws providing for the employment of State prisoners in road building. Arizona, Arkansas, Idaho, Louisiana, Maryland, Montana, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, Ohio, Oregon, Virginia, and Washington follow practically the same system, providing that the control of this work shall be vested in the State Highway Commission. The Highway Commission or State Engineer makes requisition to the State prison authorities for such number of prisoners as he can use effectively, and the prison authorities turn over to him such prisoners as are suitable for the road work.

The Prison Commission or Board of Control of State Institutions is held responsible for the development of the convict road work in some nine States—Colorado, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Missouri, North Dakota, Oklahoma, and Wisconsin. State prisoners are turned over to the county authorities to be worked on the county roads in Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, and South Carolina. This system is not approved by the National Committee on Prisons and Prison Labor, which holds that the State under no circumstances is justified in delegating the responsibility for its convict wards to county authorities.

The system in New York State divides the responsibility for the construction work and maintenance of the camps between the State Highway Department and the Commissioners of the counties in which the roads are to be built, with the State Superintendent of Prisons in final authority. In Utah, West Virginia, and Wyoming the Highway Department and the Prison Department co-operate in the control of this work. The Prison Department is fully responsible for the care and discipline of the prisoners, while the Road Department is called upon to do the work which it is equipped to do, the building of roads.

The committee has found this latter system essential to the successful development of convict road work. The Prison Department is in a position to care for the prisoners and to handle such matters as food, clothing, housing, medical attention, the affording of educational facilities, and recreation.

Your First Choice
—This Month You Can Get It

Hudson will be your first choice in Light Sixes. It is first choice with so many that demand exceeds supply. All last summer there were thousands on our waiting list. But this month we can make prompt deliveries, due to big winter output and trebled capacity.

What is true of the Hudson is true of the leader in every class, as you know. The car that stands out as first choice finds over-demand each summer.

That is why men should choose early—before winter outputs are sold. It saves them delays in delivery.

Sales Have Trebled

Hudson sales have trebled since this Light Six came out. But this spring—like last spring—there is likely to be a considerable shortage of Hudsons. That will mean you must be content with a second-choice car, or lose weeks of pleasant driving. Choose now and avoid that.

Day of Light Sixes

This, as you know, is the day of Light Sixes. Few men who pay over $1,100 buy any other type. Overweight and over-tax is ended, never to return.

The Light Six—if truly light—is the highest-grade car ever built. It must be to be staunch. It must employ much aluminum. It must have special steels. It must have a small-bore, high-speed motor, which is very economical. This new-type car has cut tire cost and fuel cost in two.

The Hudson is the pioneer Light Six. It is by far the leader of this type. It is the lightest of its class.

It is the only one designed by Howard E. Coffin, the creator of the Light Six type. It is a finished product. Four years have been spent in refining every part. Every detail shows it.

It is, above all, the proved Light Six. Over 12,000 cars are now running. Half of them have run for two seasons, on millions of miles of road. Any owner will tell you the car is right. That's a vital fact to know in any new-type car.

For all these reasons, Hudson will be your first choice. Its beauty, its reputation, its records will appeal to you. Find this out, for your own sake, while you can get a car.

Why put up with punctures and flat tires?

Why let them "alienate" your motoring pleasures and the fun of your entire party? Been lucky so far? So were others—even those you see puncture-stalled by the wayside, doctoring their tires with sultry faces and "by the sweat of their brow."

Avoid such strains on your time, temper and tires:

Schofield's Liquid-Air

stops punctures and slow leaks while you ride

It stops them at once and for good, without bother or attention on your part. Not a "filler", but a tire tonic that does away with the cause of most rim-cuts and blow-outs. It gets you more wear out of your tube, and is guaranteed for the entire life of the tube.

It is the only Reliable puncture remedy, because it depends on a mechanical, not a chemical action.

If your tire maker says it injures your tube, we'll buy you a new tube at his mere say-so.

All these claims are backed up by a guarantee that Is a guarantee.

You know how one lone mosquito can exasperate you. So a tire "gone lame" can "suck the pleasure" out of your riding for days, to say nothing of the resulting punctures in your friendships, your checkbook, or possible accidents.

This is no attempt to scare you. You know such things happen every day. They may happen to You to-day—to-morrow—are sure to happen to you sooner or later—unless you have your tires treated with Schofield's Liquid-Air.

Write, phone or call for free demonstration. We send our men anywhere in Greater New York and Westchester County to treat your tires.

INTERESTING HAPPENINGS IN MOTORDOM DURING THE WEEK

STANDARDS COMMITTEE OF S. A. E. HOLDS SESSION

International Tire Sizes, Wiring, Vehicle Taxation, and a Dozen Other Matters of Import Discussed at Detroit.

The Standards Committee of the Society of Automobile Engineers, as well as nine divisions or sub-committees thereof, held a meeting in Detroit last week. The International Standards Division of the Committee, which is constituted of members of the society resident in this country and abroad, has been considering for some time what can be done in the matter of harmonizing the dimensions of American and European solid and pneumatic tires, with a view to having them interchangeable throughout the world. The advantages of such a universal standard are obvious as benefiting the entire automobile industry and the users of motor vehicles, because uniform standards mean not only better and cheaper products but quicker replacement service. It is the purpose of the S. A. E. Committee to take up the whole subject, concerning effort first on solid tire standards.

The standards of the American Society established some years ago, insofar as the mounting of solid tires on motor trucks is concerned, have been not only a distinct success but are already being conformed to by the wheel, rim, tire and truck manufacturers in this country almost without exception. The benefits had from the fact that the truck manufacturers can equip their product with any make of tire at any time without the expense and delay consequent upon modification of the wheels thereof, are very much appreciated. The users of motor trucks are also reaping the same benefits from this condition.

The S. of A. E. has not only standardized the fundamental dimensions involved in the mounting of solid tires, thereby securing interchangeability, but has recommended concentration upon only three diameters of tire with a view to reducing tire costs and bringing about the carrying of tires in stock at all necessary places. The diameters are 32 inch, 36 inch, and 40 inch. A clear majority of American truck manufacturers are now using these three diameters of tire exclusively. Tires of these three diameters are, of course, made in several widths, but probably 85 per cent. of the production are in 3½, 4, 5, and 6 inch widths. The committee is in conference with European societies and associations as to the feasibility of standardizing the described characteristics of solid tires internationally.

The standardization work of the society has been conspicuous as to devices of electrical equipment on gasoline automobiles. A careful study is being made as to the possibility of simplifying practice in this connection. The Electric Equipment Division is now considering in a preliminary way the desirability of standardizing certain mounting features of gasoline, engines and electric motors used for starting them, so far as methods of attachment are concerned when flywheel drives are used with inclosed types of flywheel.

Owing to the extensive use of the ground-return or single-wire system, in gasoline automobile electrical equipment, the adoption of standard drawings of the bulb bases, sockets, and plug ends for this system, is likely, the same having been approved at the last Standards Committee meeting for the purpose of submitting the same to the society for adoption next June. There have been no plug end standards and it is frequently found that plug ends will not interchange in the same socket with bulb bases. Standard dimensions for plug ends which will make them interchange in both ground-return and insulated-return (two-wire) systems have been prepared.

The problem of limiting headlight illumination to conform to proper regulations in city and country driving is a vexing one. It has been considered repeatedly at committee meetings of the society, which is endeavoring to formulate a simple test which can be conducted upon occasion by laymen in municipal and State administration. The society will, of course, not approve any particular device or devices, but it is thought that if the general requisite conditions of eliminating "glare" can be defined the method of ascertaining the same by a practical test would be of great value to the manufacturers of the devices and the constabulary officials.

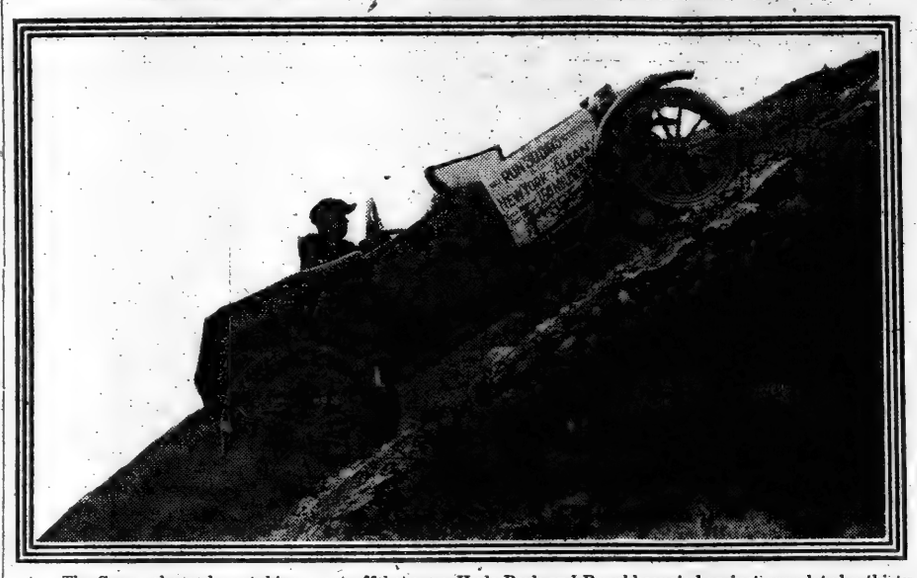
At the present time the ordinances in effect in the various parts of the country differ greatly, and their enforcement depends in large part upon a personal equation which will differ from block to block in a city. Among the basic considerations in the connection are the distance through which headlights provide illumination on the road, the maximum height of the beams from the ground, possibility of changing the amount of illumination from the seat, and of nullifying an approved set of conditions by the installation of a bulb of higher candle power. Gas-filled bulbs now being introduced in the market also constitute an element for consideration in the further development of the present situation.

The adoption of two classes of motors for use upon electric vehicles, one designed for 80 to 85 volt operation and another for 60 to 66 volt operation, characteristic curves for all of the voltages to be furnished by the manufacturers, is under contemplation. It is thought that there should be on each motor a name plate setting forth the manufacturer's name and address, the type of the motor, the frame size, its voltage and ampere output at specified speed, both high and low figures being given for the high and low limits of voltage recommended. The number of cells in standard battery equipment recommended by the division is as follows: Lead acid type, 42; nickel iron alkaline type, 60.

Relative to the investigation involving the development of a vehicle taxation formula, based upon the destructive effect upon the road, the Research Division of the society has been in consultation with the highway commissions of the States of the Union in an endeavor to obtain information relative to the quantity and quality of not only vehicles but the traffic and roads as well. The United States and certain foreign Governments have been asked for assistance and in every case evidence of a desire to co-operate has been expressed. A chaotic condition of affairs, however, exists relating to the classification of vehicles, the nature of the traffic, the amount of new roads being built, the repair and maintenance of existing roads and other closely identified facts.

It has been felt that a formula, if proposed, would of necessity be as simple as possible, with not over two or three variables at the most, in order to be workable. Otherwise the clerical work involved in its application would be of sufficient magnitude to condemn it from the start. How a formula which possesses all of the attributes incident to a strictly engineering principle, is fair and equitable, and does not contain over two or three variables can be developed is not known. In the construction of such a formula, the following would have to be considered as factors: horsepower of the vehicle (if motor driven); total weight of vehicle; weight of driving wheel; size of wheels, type of tire, gear ratio; speed of vehicle; total time in service and class of service.

TAKING A SHORT CUT ON A LONG ECONOMY TEST.



The Saxon shown here taking a cut-off between Hyde Park and Poughkeepsie has just completed a thirty-day run of 154.8 miles a day between New York and Albany, or a total of 4,642 miles. This distance was made on a total of 71 pints of oil and 148½ gallons of gasoline, at a total cost of $27.64 for these two items, or an average of $.00595 a mile and an average of 31.31 miles to the gallon of gasoline.

CHANGE IN VEHICLE TAX IS NEEDED, BUT DIFFICULT

Present Condition, in Which Automobiles Pay All and Horse-Drawn Vehicles None, Unfair, Says Hugo —More Revenue Required, However.

By FRANCIS M. HUGO,
Secretary of State.

There can be no doubt that the present system of collecting moneys from motor vehicles is not entirely an ideal one. It does not make every user of the road pay something toward its maintenance. The present variation in the charges between the low and high powered motor cars and the failure to differentiate between the broad and narrow tired vehicles leaves much to be desired from the point of view of simple equity.

The highway maintenance and repair fund is at present provided for in three ways—by appropriations from the State, counties, and towns. To deal with the first of these, the State originally took over the construction and direct management of the State highways in 1898, when the Higbie-Armstrong act first became effective. Of course, while every person in the State indirectly contributes to highway construction, maintenance, and repair, motorists alone are the only ones paying a vehicular tax direct.

There is, therefore, a rough injustice in the present arrangement, and now that the cost of road maintenance, especially on the main roads, has risen so much, it is a question whether all vehicles pay in fair proportion to the damage they cause and whether the motorists who pay no local personal property tax should not be compelled to pay a somewhat larger proportion toward the general expense of road upkeep.

In the case of the motor vehicles, every motor car must first pay an annual tax, fixed according to the horsepower of the machine, and varying from $5 to $25, although commercial cars pay a flat tax, regardless of the horsepower. Speaking generally, motor cars are the only vehicles in this State at present which are compelled to pay any tax for the use of the roads, while horse-drawn vehicles escape entirely. Whether this exemption is fair or unfair is a matter which the Legislature will have soon to decide. If the principle is to be adopted of making vehicles which use the roads pay more heavily for that use, it goes without saying that the present scale of motor car taxation will have to be changed and that all vehicles, motor and horse drawn alike, will have to pay their share.

Various schemes have been put forward for taxing gasoline, tires, or the vehicles themselves by weight or seating capacity, instead of the present system—namely, by horse power only. Regarding horse power, nominal or actual, it is probably the most unsatisfactory standard to take as a basis for even experts themselves are still groping in the dark to find a satisfactory basis upon which the power of the internal-combustion engine can be calculated. Such a system will inevitably become obsolete in a few years as further developments and alterations in the explosive engine take place. And in such a method electric and steam vehicles have had to be taxed upon an entirely different basis.

But it must be confessed that taxation by weight alone has not proved to be satisfactory. Over a century ago the laws of England recognized this, and by an act of Parliament it was provided that tolls should vary in accordance with the width of the tires upon the wheels, a very sensible provision. The effect was to encourage broad tires, for there is nothing more destructive to the roads today than the heavily laden, narrow steel tired vehicle, which pays a totally inadequate proportion for the harm it does to the highway.

The whole question of the width of tires on vehicles is one which ought to be considered by the Legislature in resurveying the question of taxation for road purposes. In theory, at any rate, a combination of factors should be taken into consideration, and it is well to discuss how different methods would work. As regards a gasoline tax, the authorities have already pointed out good and sufficient reasons why such a proposition would be a difficult one to carry out in practice.

By levying the several taxes above suggested, no class of traffic could escape payment of some share larger than at present toward road upkeep. However, any change in the present system will provoke strenuous opposition from all classes of road users. It is clear that if the system of taxation for road upkeep is altered, a new system of road management will also before long become inevitable as well. By whatever means it is attained, it is clear that a larger share of the expenses of road upkeep should be paid by the actual road user, whether he owns mechanical or horse-drawn vehicles.

Never saw a year like it!

Over a year ago, when the engineers finished the last tests on the 1915 Sixes and said "Go ahead" to the Manufacturing Division, we knew the 1915 SIX was good. So we started in to make a whole lot more Sixes than we sold in 1914. War times—yes, and the calamity-howlers busy as usual. And yet thro' it all the sales of this Studebaker SIX kept jumping so from month to month that we wish we had built twice as many.

For there's going to be a BIG shortage of Studebaker Sixes months before the season closes.

It's simply that the public has stamped its "O.K." on the car. At $1385 it gives all that a SIX can give. It's as handsome a car as you ever laid eyes on—a big, roomy, massive car—long, low-lying and with graceful lines that flow unbroken from radiator to tail-lamp—not faddish, but refined and in perfect taste. And with a satiny lustre that STAYS bright.

Then, too, Studebaker SIX has made good on the roads. It was the FIRST of the Sixes at less than $2,000. Other Sixes have followed—slashing prices until most of them only cost a couple of hundred dollars more than a Studebaker.

But not one of them has the experience that Studebaker has—or will have it for one or two years to come. For you must remember that this was the FIRST of the Light Sixes—and this SIX has been on the roads THREE years. In over 20,000 owners' hands, Studebaker engineers have been able to watch this SIX—to see where this and that little improvement might be made.

And it takes time and study like that to get Balance into a car such as this Studebaker SIX has—to get the marvelous riding qualities that this Six has—to smooth away the wrinkles and develop a motor as silent and powerful and vibrationless as this Studebaker motor—to develop the wonderful accessibility that you find in this car.

You can't just sit down and design such qualities into a car. Takes the roads to make designs GOOD. And Studebaker is the only manufacturer of Light Sixes that has had that opportunity to study its cars on the roads in any numbers and for any adequate time. And so when you look at the car itself and what it has accomplished and what stands back of it, you can appreciate the reasons for its wonderful popularity—and for our saying that if you want this SIX the public has O.K.'d—you'd better see your Dealer NOW.

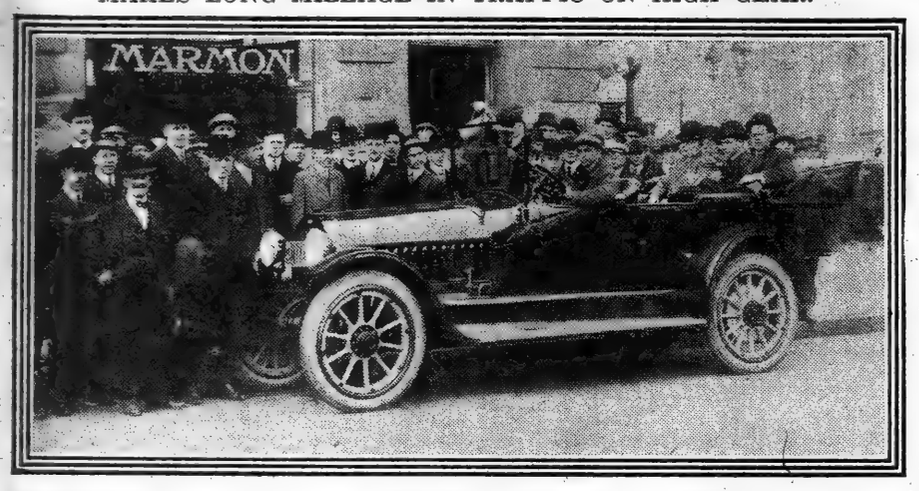
THINGS THAT ARE OF CONCERN TO THE MOTORIST NOWADAYS

MAKES LONG MILEAGE IN TRAFFIC ON HIGH GEAR.



Seventy-five starts from a dead stop on high gear in the congested traffic of New York's most crowded streets without stalling or killing the engine was the record made by this Marmon 41 seven-passenger touring car last week. During the test, which was conducted under the auspices of the Technical Committee of the Automobile Club of America, the car covered 12.8 miles on one gallon of gasoline in one hour and twenty-two minutes. For a good portion of the time the car, owing to traffic conditions, had to be slowed down to two or three miles per hour.

Later, without disturbing the carburetor in any way, the special calibrated one-gallon tank was refilled and the car was taken over to the Ocean Parkway in Brooklyn and driven on a non-stop test where it covered 16.9 miles on one gallon of gasoline.

Fred Barbour was pilot of the machine and J. P. Simons of the Stromberg Company, had charge of the adjustment of the carburetor. Ferdinand Jehle, laboratory engineer of the Automobile Club of America, had charge of the test. Factors that contributed to the record were the use of Goodrich Silvertown Cord tires, which are part of the regular equipment in all cars of this make, the use of an "H" type Stromberg carburetor and the employment of Howard Marmon's new cone type clutch which has a seamless lining made by the Thermoid Rubber Company.

CIRCUIT OF LONG ISLAND MAKES GOOD TWO-DAY TRIP

For the Most Part the Roads Are in Good Condition on Short Tour Outlined by A. C. A., Which Covers Both South and North Shores.

Long Island roads at present offer a generally uniform surface, the usual Spring dragging and scraping in the majority of cases having been completed. On the few short stretches where operations are still in progress little inconvenience is experienced by reasonably careful drivers. Most of the roads toward the eastern end of the island are natural gravel roads, which the repairs, effected after the Winter's wear, have put in very fair condition.

The level nature of the country traversed along the southern shore enables a fair speed to be maintained, though motorists should be careful to observe local restrictions in this respect. The many places of interest as well as distinctly attractive scenery at the eastern end and skirting the bays and harbors on the north coast add immensely to the enjoyment of the trip. Excellence in the matter of hotel accommodations along most of the route is a detail that will appeal to the discriminating motorist. The Bureau of Tours of the Automobile Club of America recommends the two-day trip outlined below:

Leaving the A. C. A. the route proceeds by Broadway, Fifty-seventh Street, Second Avenue, and across Queensboro Bridge, upon which considerable construction work is in progress, calling for extreme caution, especially at the eastern end, though the roadway itself is kept clear for traffic. After crossing the Plaza and Jackson Avenue, Thomson Avenue is followed to Winfield, where the right fork is taken and the excellent surface of Queens Avenue followed to Jamaica. Here turn left into Hillside Avenue, which is in fair condition, and at the Peace Monument take the right turn into Bergen Avenue, leading into Merrick Road, which is followed practically without a turn except in some of the towns passed through.

Good macadam surface is found all along the route through Springfield, Valley Stream, (where, as well as in Lynbrook, two miles further, a right turn for the Rockaways occurs,) to Rockville Centre. The detour to Long Beach is approached by taking the right fork in Rockville.

The same fine surface continues through Baldwin, Freeport, Merrick, Bellmore, Seaford, and Massapequa to Amityville, after which five or six miles of rather rough and pitted macadam is encountered as far as Babylon. Past the South Shore Field Club and Brightwaters, and through Bay Shore, Islip, and East Islip the surface is excellent, and just before West Sayville a top dressing of gravel has put what was a rough bit of road into fine condition. To Sayville good concrete is found, and on to Patchogue gravel that is in places somewhat worn.

The road from Patchogue to Brookhaven is under construction, making it necessary to use the Robinson Boulevard, running along the north side of the railroad. As a matter of fact, this bit of road is shorter than the regular route and more direct, although somewhat rutted at present. Moderately good surface occurs between Brookhaven and Moriches, with fair macadam through Centre Moriches and East Moriches. After East Moriches the main road is followed through Eastport to Westhampton, over a graded gravel surface, with a few soft stretches just before Westhampton. Fair gravel surface continues through Quogue and East Quogue to Good Ground, the remainder being dressed and in fair condition through Southampton along the Hampton Road to Bridgehampton.

From Bridgehampton a most enjoyable run may be made by continuing straight along the Bridgehampton Road through Easthampton and Amagansett, a settlement of considerable antiquity, to Montauk Point, the eastern extremity of the island, and then circling north and returning by way of Fire Place Road to Easthampton and Bridgehampton.

Excellent macadam continues to Sag Harbor and across Hog Neck to the ferry. After crossing the ferry good macadam surface is encountered through Shelter Island. The night's stop-over might well be made at one of the hotels to be found on the island resort, which, owing to its unique situation and the magnificent marine views to be obtained, is a favorite stopping place for New York motoring parties. It is about midway along the tour, being 113 miles from New York.

From Manhanset, Shelter Island, the automobile is ferried over to Greenport, whence, running west along South Avenue, a fair gravel surface will be found through Southold, Peconic, Cutchogue, and Mattituck. With the exception of one or two short stretches, the same conditions exist through Laurel, Jamesport, Aquebogue, Riverhead, and along the Middle Country Road and Parker Road to Wading River. From Wading River to Shoreham, and for about a mile beyond, the gravel surface has become worn, but beyond the road improves considerably, and the surface of the Old Post Road through Miller Place to Port Jefferson is quite satisfactory.

The road from Port Jefferson by way of Setauket to Stony Brook Station is fair macadam, though at present there is some construction work in progress, to avoid which motorists may prefer taking the more northerly road through Stony Brook. The lower road will, however, be much the more direct on the completion of the work this Summer. Good gravel surface continues for the next three miles to St. James, but is immediately followed by a much inferior bit of dirt road to Smithtown Branch. At this point the left-hand turn should be taken and a detour made, passing the station to Smithtown, as the direct short stretch between Smithtown and St. James has been newly-plowed and would be somewhat heavy after rain.

The route now emerges on to the Jericho Pike, which is in very fair condition to the famous Yellow House, one mile beyond Commack. At this landmark a right turn is made along East Northport Road, which consists of good macadam surface into Northport, on Northport Bay.

From Northport a very fair macadam and gravel road leads through Centreport, Huntington, and Cold Spring Harbor, where, immediately after crossing the bridge, a right turn is made for Oyster Bay. The same satisfactory road surface is met through Locust Valley, Glen Cove, Sea Cliff, on Hempstead Harbor, to Roslyn, after which the North Hempstead Turnpike, through Manhasset, Little Neck, and Bayside to Flushing is in its usual excellent condition.

The most satisfactory route from Flushing into New York City is by Jackson Avenue, through Corona, Woodside, and Long Island City to Queensboro Bridge, as it is more direct than any other, and the road surface, on the whole, is in excellent condition. Crossing the bridge, the outward route is reversed to the clubhouse, thus completing the circular tour of 225 miles.

The Hupp Motor Car Company announces the appointment of Lee Anderson as sales manager to succeed Frederick A. Harris, who resigned May 1.

In the second annual tire mileage contest of the Ajax-Grieb Rubber Company, Inc., of Trenton, N. J., the results have just been announced. The winner of the first prize of $500 is a Wisconsin chauffeur, Garth C. Jenson, who drives a Cadillac for John Weisby of Stevens Point. His mileage was almost 22,000. He lacked just fifteen miles of that total. He was slightly more than 500 miles better than Frank Gray, chauffeur for Carl M. Gottfried of Chicago, whose Peerless car he piloted 21,483 miles, using one single Ajax tire, and thereby won the $300 prize, while 21,039 miles won $200, the third prize, for Alfred C. Smith of Springfield, Mass.

SAXON $395

The Modern Horse-and-Phaeton for the Woman

Here is an automobile that a woman can use as easily and economically as the horse and phaeton of years ago. It requires no groom. It never has to be harnessed. It doesn't eat except when running.

Mrs. Ray M. Mackey, Saxon owner, of San Antonio, Tex., writes: "My Saxon is very easy on tires and gasoline. It has the power to climb hills on country roads and to get in and out of traffic on crowded streets without difficulty. I like its neat and up-to-date appearance."

The Saxon is always ready; turn the self-starter and it is at your service—for making calls, for shopping or taking you and the "kiddies" into the country.

It can go miles in the same time and at the same expense that the horse and buggy took to traverse a few city blocks.

This Roadster seats two grown-ups and a child comfortably, or one grown-up and two or three children.

Many women have so far not attempted to drive an automobile because the cars were too heavy and too extravagant in upkeep cost.

The Saxon Roadster is different. It offers you all you can ask in comfort, reliability, ease of handling, and gives you every automobiling pleasure at the minimum cost—$395 to buy; less than ½ cent per mile to run.

Let us show you why the Saxon is the easiest and most convenient car to drive

There is an opportunity for live, aggressive dealers to handle Saxon Cars in territory still open. Write or call for further details.

PAIGE

"The Standard of Value and Quality"

Power

FEW of us have the need or desire for a racing car. But every man wants to sit behind a motor car which responds eagerly—buoyantly—to the slightest touch of the throttle.

Steep hills and heavy, clinging sand roads have no terrors for the Paige owner. Whether he be driving the Glenwood "Four-36" or the Fairfield "Six-46," he knows that he has but to "step on" the accelerator and the hills flatten out like smooth boulevards. From a walking pace to the speed of the winds—this range is at the service of every Paige driver without a change from high gear.

Sit behind the steering wheel of either of these cars. Sense the flexibility and power under the impressive, "deep chested" hood just in front of you. Swing easily up those grades that are the despair of many vastly higher priced automobiles.

Then, ask yourself if you could possibly require more of any motor car. And remember that the "Six" costs only $1395. The "Four"—$1075.

The supreme dollar-for-dollar value of Paige cars is established by comparing them, feature for feature, with any and all other motor cars of lower, equal or higher price. We don't have to ask the intelligent purchaser to make that comparison.

Power
With Economy

The quiet overhead valve motor guarantees you more power than you will ever need. No matter how much power you use, it is economical.

Every power impulse of the Inter-State overhead valve motor is delivered directly over the piston. Every particle of gas that enters the firing chamber is used to drive the car. There are no pockets where gas can be wasted.

This guarantees more real horse-power delivered to the rear wheels with less gasoline than any other type of four-cylinder motor.

There are three reasons why you should own an Inter-state.

Power—with Economy—is only one essential we offer, and you want.

The Inter-State is selling strictly on merit, and "value received."

SUFFRAGE RECRUITS GAINED ON BOWERY

Women Enlist Aid of Clerks in Pushing Their Campaign in Lodging Houses.

BALL AT TERRACE GARDEN

"Antis" Adopt a Slogan and Decide to Centre Their Fight on New Jersey.

The Bowery lodging houses claimed attention of workers in the suffrage campaign last week. Returns which were discouraging at first are improving and now show about 50 per cent. of the mass of men who make their homes in these houses in favor of votes for women.

The work is under control of Miss L. L. Dock of the Nurses' Settlement in Henry Street, who is in charge of suffrage work of the southern end of the city for the Woman Suffrage Party. Men who first made the rounds gave discouraging reports, and the women, going into it themselves, did better through statistics they got from the night clerks of the various houses. The women themselves distributed literature among the men and were treated with courtesy. A difficulty they found was in stemming the tide of life histories, which were poured into their ears long enough to get in their own work.

A third of the residents of the Bowery lodging houses they found were well paid working men, some of them making as much as $5 a day, but who had no families or had separated from them. The remaining two-thirds were of the difficult drifting population. The men in charge of the lodging houses appealed to the suffragists as being sympathetic, and it was after trying different methods that they placed their appeals in the hands of the night clerks, who gave them the responses of the men.

Ball at Terrace Garden.

Vaudeville and movies will be a feature of a ball to be given at Terrace Garden by the Women's Political Union on Wednesday evening. Between the vaudeville acts, which will precede dancing, Mrs. Raymond Brown will make a suffrage speech. The chief guests of the ball are to be Marcus M. Marks, Lindon Bates, Jr., William Harmon Black, Frederick C. Tanner, and Thomas E. Rush. The boxholders are Mmes. William Floyd, Laura Bayer, Laurent Oppenheim, Robert Niles, Charles Parmalee, Calvin Tomkins, John Winters Brannan, Sumner Gerard, Marcus M. Marks, Francis Higginson Cabot, Lewis L. Delafield, Emanuel Einstein, James Erskine Neal, Joseph Griswold Deane, Eldon Bisbee, Stephen H. Brown, W. P. Draper, H. O. Havemeyer, Alexis W. Stein, Norman de R. Whitehouse, Ogden Mills Reid, the Misses Alice Greenlief, Leslie Johnstone, Anna Constable, Charlotte Barnes, Mary Halton, and Mr. Fatman.

Mrs. Joseph Griswold Deane is Chairman of the Publicity Committee, Mrs. Edward McVicker of the Entertainment Committee, Mrs. Emanuel Einstein of the Political Committee, and Mrs. Francis Higginson Cabot is Chairman of the ball.

Among the patrons are Mr. and Mrs. C. Nicholl, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Adamson, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Wadhams, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Parsons, Mr. and Mrs. Frederic C. Howe, Mr. and Mrs. Learned Hand, Thomas M. Mulry, Ralph Folks, Cabot Ward, Edward R. Finch, Walter R. Herrick, Mrs. Stanley M. Isaacs, Leo Koenig, Mr. and Mrs. Irving Blum, Mrs. Lewis L. Delafield, and Mr. and Mrs. William Jay Schieffelin.

Tickets may be had from Mrs. Francis H. Cabot, 37 East Seventy-fifth Street or at the door, Terrace Garden, the night of the ball.

Luncheon for Officials.

A campaign luncheon at which Governor and Mrs. Whitman and many of the city officials will be guests will be given at the Hotel Astor on Saturday under the auspices of the Empire State Campaign Committee. It will be the last large gathering of the suffragists for the season. The speakers will be Collector Malone, Granville Barker, and Dr. Anna Howard Shaw.

The Woman Suffrage Party will have a hearing tomorrow before the Baptist Conference, which meets at 11 A. M. in the parish house of the Madison Avenue Church, Thirty-first Street and Madison Avenue. After a half-hour business session suffrage will be taken up. Mrs. James Lees Laidlaw will speak.

A meeting of the Men's League for Woman Suffrage will be held at the home of Frank Melville, Jr., 6 Montague Terrace, Brooklyn, on Friday evening. The speakers will be Alfred J. Boulton, President of the Labor Men's Suffrage Association, speaking on "Suffrage for Women"; Frederick W. Hinreich, and Leon J. Godley, First Deputy Police Commissioner Walter J. Randolph will preside.

Miss Lucy Eastman and Miss Winona Marlin of the Women's Political Union will open a suffrage shop at noon tomorrow at 1,300 Third Avenue, between Seventy-fourth and Seventy-fifth Streets. The shop will be open from 10 A. M. to 10 P. M. daily.

The "roving shop" of the Union has taken up a new position at Delancy Street and the Bowery, where Simon Steingut gave it a send-off and has promised the women his help.

The National Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage last week adopted as its slogan the title of "Representatives of Heaven, Home, and Mother," which the "antis" say was given them by the national suffrage President, Dr. Anna Howard Shaw. The heaviest artillery of the anti-suffragists, it was decided at that meeting, would be turned on New Jersey as the first State on which there would be a vote on suffrage.

There were present at the meeting Mrs. Arthur M. Dodge, Miss Alice Hill Chittenden, New York; Mrs. E. Yarde Bresse, Trenton, N. J.; Miss Caroline W. Stewart, Glen Ridge, N. J.; Miss Clara Vezin, Elizabeth, N. J.; Mrs. John R. Emery, Morristown, N. J.; Mrs. Orville D. Oliphant, Trenton; Mrs. Horace Brock, Philadelphia; Mrs. John B. Heron, Pittsburgh; Mrs. Rowland G. Hazard, Peacedale, R. I.; Mrs. Daniel A. Markham, Hartford, Conn.; Mrs. Sherman Joost, Plainfield, N. J.; Mrs. William B. Glover, Fairfield, Conn., and Mrs. Bernard S. Gostin, Macon, Ga.

William S. Bennet refused to speak for suffrage against Miss Alice Hill Chittenden, the State Anti-suffragist President, in a debate that was to be held at the Thirty-third Assembly District Clubhouse, 2073 Third Avenue, last week. The "antis" consequently assert that he is afraid of them.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS

THE second number of The Musical Quarterly, published by G. Schirmer and edited by O. G. Sonneck, well maintains the standard set by the first, and indeed improves upon it. There is much variety and interest in the contributions, and the appeal of all the articles is to the intelligent and thinking music lover, whose attention is given to matters bearing upon the higher interests of the art of music, and is not at all concerned with the minor doings of musicians. The number is opened by an article by John F. Runciman of London on "Noises, Smells, and Colors," that has a perhaps unexpected timeliness in view of the recent attempt to perform in New York Scriabine's "color symphony" "Prometheus." Mr. Runciman used to be known as a vigorous and uncompromising radical. He is still vigorous and uncompromising, but not radical enough to swallow the attempt to "break down the barrier" between music and the arts appealing to other senses; and he has some caustic and well grounded comment on the tragic case of the new composers who have at their command so many means of saying a new thing, and a desire to say it and yet have nothing new to say.

An interesting contribution to nineteenth century musical history is the article by J. G. Prudhomme of Paris, giving some hitherto unpublished letters of Wagner's relating to the ill-fated performances of "Tannhäuser" at the Grand Opéra in Paris in 1861. They do not, perhaps, put the incident in a new light, but they intensify some of the lights and shadows that have heretofore been thrown on it.

Sir Charles Stanford's "Thoughts Concerning Folk Song and Nationality" develop "the vital necessity of folk song to a nation and of founding its creative output upon a basis of full knowledge of the characteristics and atmosphere of their style." He quotes a remark of Brahms who, not long before his death, was lamenting the musical prospects of his own country:

> He looked around and saw nothing. The schools of composition were so hidebound that they were turning out two classes of as widely different characteristics as conservatives and anarchists; both coming from the primary cause, red tape teaching; those who succumbed becoming Philistines, those who kicked against the pricks becoming revolutionaries. Between them both healthy progress was becoming inanacled. "Over there," he said, pointing toward England, "things are different. Something will come out of that country. And over there," pointing toward Russia, "there is great movement." Brahms fixed his judgment upon the results of a broad-minded system of education.

Sir Charles discusses the character of folk song and its significance in artistic music, with concrete examples for the various peoples of Europe, especially the Irish, with whose songs he has had much to do, as an Irishman himself. He calls attention to certain similarities between Irish and Hungarian intervals and rhythms; and notes a striking similarity between the theme of the last movement of Beethoven's seventh symphony and the ritornelle of the Irish song "Kitty of Coleraine," one of the many which Beethoven arranged for Thomson.

"German Opera Since Richard Wagner" is the subject of a searching criticism by Edgar Istel, in which he finds not much that is good or likely to be lasting, and believes that the present is an end of a period of development, brought to a close by the existing war, whose results are likely to determine the future of European opera. Henry F. Gilbert, in discussing "The American Composer," finds that there are as yet no real American composers. American music is still largely imitative; but he has faith in its potentialities, in the development of an art in whose texture will be interwoven all the various strands of race consciousness that are making the American people.

Other articles are about "The Judgment of Paris; or, the Worth of Beauty," by Charles F. Farnsworth; "Music and Material Expression, a Plea for Aristotle," by Cyril Scott; "The Study of Indian Music," by Frances Densmore; "Tower Music of Belgium and Holland," by William Gorham Rice; "Vincent d'Indy," by Edward Burlingame Hill; "Translating to Music," by Sigmund Spaeth; "The Occupation of Musician in the United States," by Henry I. Harris.

The ninth series of the proceedings of the Music Teachers' National Association appears under the title of "Studies in Musical Education, History, and Aesthetics." It gives the papers presented at the thirty-sixth meeting of the association in Pittsburgh last December; also the proceedings of the American section of the International Musical Society—now, alas, disrupted by the war—held at the same time. The papers of the Music Teachers' Association are naturally and inevitably mostly devoted to technical matters of musical pedagogics; but there are several that speak of more general topics. Jaroslaw de Zielinski discusses "Musical Evolution in Russia," giving a résumé of a subject about which numerous books have lately been written. Elias Blum of Walla Walla, Wash., describes "Music in the Pacific Northwest," where the achievements are of importance mostly as a foundation for futrther development. Serious and thoughtful and of more than technical interest, though connected with problems confronting the teacher, is Professor Waldo S. Pratt's essay on "The Problems of Standardization." Frederick W. Root's paper "About the Old Songs," treats of the needs of singers and students of singing. Paul Stoeving has an interesting account of the "National Union of School Orchestras" in England, which he calls "A New Mission for the Violin."

Among the more interesting discussions of the problems confronting the teachers are the President's address; "The Will to Practice," by Charles H. Farnsworth; "The New Era in Piano Study," by Henry Holden Huss; "The Physiological Memory as Related to Piano Playing and Teaching," by Hans Schneider; "The Future of Harmony as a Study," by George C. Gow and Charles H. Mills. The annual register of musical societies and other statistical information are of value for those concerned.

M. Julien Tiersot, being one of the most distinguished authorities on French folk song, was a natural choice as editor of the volume of "Sixty Folk Songs of France," just issued by the Oliver Ditson Company, in its five series entitled "The Musician's Library." In France, as in England, systematic attempts to rescue the remaining specimens of the people's songs have been only recently made; but these efforts, according to M. Tiersot, in his preface, "however belated, have been conducted with such energy that we may today feel assured that France need yield to no other nation in respect to the abundance, variety, and vitality of her folk songs." The aim of this collection is to give a general view of this primitive art. Most of the provinces have contributed their share, but the songs are not presented in groups according to the locality of their respective origins, but according to their character—that is, their subject and use. There are narrative songs, epics in miniature, gay songs, mostly for dancing; satirical songs, songs of love, songs connected with rustic toil and rural fêtes. Though the originals are always sung without accompaniment, accompaniments have been added here to suit the taste and the need of the modern reader. A series of notes gives more detailed information about each one. It is not necessary to speak of the simplicity, the haunting charm of these songs. Most of them will be new to American singers, but they will all be found a delight, and the collection as a whole is full of the spirit of France. It is French music, the strong and healthy root from which the art of France has grown. It could not be mistaken as belonging to any other nation.

Two volumes, entitled, respectively, "Folk Dances of Denmark" and "Folk Dances of Finland," by Elizabeth Burchenal, are published by G. Schirmer, and will contribute to the growing interest in folk-music and folk-dances. Miss Burchenal is a well-known teacher of such dances, who has accomplished much in introducing them into the New York public schools. The former volume, containing seventy-three dances, is a translation of the work issued by the Danish Society for the Promotion of Folk Dancing. In both the dances are described in detail, with analysis of the movements and diagrams, and the music is given with numbered measures, to which reference is made in the text. Everything practicable has been done, apparently, to enable the dances to be taught to pupils not familiar with them.

A set of five songs by H. T. Burleigh of New York, to verses of an Oriental character by Laurence Hope, is published by G. Ricordi & Co. Mr. Burleigh has written his music in a correspondingly Oriental vein.

A considerable number of songs by Mrs. H. H. A. Beach of Boston, who has attained distinction as an American composer, is put forth by G. Schirmer—Op. 72 and Op. 73, two in each, to German poems; Op. 75, four songs to verses for or about children; Op. 76, two songs to English verses.

By the same firm are published several new songs by Sidney Homer: Op. 27, six "Songs of the Old South," the verses by Howard Weeden; Op. 29, "Babylon the Great"; Op. 31, "Sheep and Lambs;" Op. 32, "The Battle of Blenheim." John Alden Carpenter is the composer of "The Day Is No More," from Tagore's "Gitanjali"; Gabriele Sibella of four Italian songs, Frances Wyman of four songs for medium voice; Edward Horsman sets more words of Tagore's, "The Bird of the Wilderness," and Frank La Forge adds four more to his long list of songs published by this house.

"Ears, Brain, and Fingers," by Howard Wells, is an ingenious system for teaching the elements of pianoforte playing, wherein it is attempted to train systematically the pupil's ear and develop his powers of concentration and to teach him to listen to music intelligently. Hearing himself is rightly declared to be an essential in a pupil's training. The details of the author's system are ingeniously worked out, and this book contains in the compass of comparatively few pages material that covers a considerable period of study.

"Graded Lessons in Harmony," by Frank H. Shepard, (G. Schirmer,) is a posthumous work of one who wrote several pedagogical works on harmony and piano playing. The plan of the book is to carry on simultaneously several different lines of training and to secure knowledge not only of harmony but of other related subjects in a broad culture of music. Thus there is not only what is ordinarily taught as harmony, but also drill on the keyboard, analysis, ear training, part writing, and composition. The material is presented in the form of lessons, highly compressed, that give an opportunity for much elaboration by the student.

G. Schirmer has made reprints of a large number of Percy Aldridge Grainger's British folk-music settings, that have given so much pleasure and aroused so much interest in New York in the musical season just closed. Among them are "I'm Seventeen Come Sunday," for mixed choir and piano; "Shepherd's Hey," for piano; Irish Tune from County Derry for piano; "Willow, Willow," for voice and piano; "Molly on the Shore," for violin and piano.

Professor Horatio W. Parker wrote the oratorio of "Morven and the Grail" for the centenary festival of the Handel and Haydn Society held in Boston in April. The text is the work of Brian Hooker, the Connecticut poet who collaborated with Professor Parker in two operas, "Mona" and "Fairyland." The oratorio is now published in vocal score by the Boston Music Company.

CHEERFUL signs of confidence in the real estate situation have been presented in many parts of the country within the last few weeks. From all of the suburban centres around New York the prevailing reports are thoroughly optimistic. Building operations are increasing, the leasing market, especially for Summer occupancy, has, in many localities, been above the average, there is a healthy buying demand, and, with easier mortgage and financial conditions, metropolitan operators are closing contracts on many large structures, both of the business and apartment type, which have been awaiting the return of more prosperous times. Despite the tax burden, which New York City owners always have with them, there is a tendency to take a hopeful view, and in the following pages will be found many reasons presented by close students of the realty situation for this return of confidence in stable conditions.

HARLEM BUSINESS REVIVAL

Stores on 125th Street Filling Up Demand for Small Apartments.

By B. WALTER BARNETT, of Barnett & Co.

Realty conditions in Harlem have greatly improved since the first of the year. The change is especially noticeable on 125th Street, between Third and Eighth Avenues, where business property is renting better than it has for several years.

With the exception of one or two, the numerous temporary stores carrying cheap stocks of merchandise have been driven out by the crusade of reputable merchants against them. Several new firms have located on the street under long leases during the last month, and by Fall there will be very few, if any, vacancies found. Judging from past and present conditions, there is a great business future in store for Harlem's principal thoroughfare, which is one of the busiest streets on Manhattan Island. It is crowded morning, noon, and night, and well into the morning again. It is the next natural stop for the northward movement of trade. Fifty-ninth Street is somewhat handicapped owing to the greater part of the north side being occupied by Central Park and the fact that no trunk line railroads stop there.

One-hundred-and-twenty-fifth Street has the advantage of being an exceptionally wide street, and is open from the East River to the Hudson, and having a ferry connecting the Jersey towns so that the people from Leonia, Hackensack, Englewood, Morsemere, &c., can reach it in less than half an hour's pleasant travel to shop.

Washington Heights residents can reach it by the Broadway subway and Amsterdam Avenue cars. The New York Central & Hudson River Railroad, the Harlem Railroad, and the New York, New Haven, & Hartford Railroad all stop their local and express trains at the Union Depot, 125th Street and Park Avenue.

Every avenue going north has a bridge connecting with the fast growing Bronx, and it is expected that before June 1 all the trolley lines of the Bronx will cross the Willis Avenue Bridge and run through 125th Street to the Fort Lee Ferry, which will give the merchants of this vicinity an opportunity to bid for the Bronx buyers.

Several important improvements are contemplated for Harlem in the way of large business buildings, and a boom is predicted by many during the coming year. The Harlem Board of Trade and other organizations are endeavoring to obtain better station accommodations from the New York Central Railroad, and it is reported that plans have been prepared for a handsome new station to be located in a ten-story building, which will be used for hotel purposes above, where rooms can be had at a reasonable rental to accommodate the drummers and out-of-town people who desire to remain in this section.

The new Hotel Teresa, a handsome twelve-story building occupying the entire block front on the west side of Seventh Avenue, between 124th and 125th Street, is reported as doing wonderfully well.

Another strong factor in reviving business will be the completion of the new Lexington Avenue subway line, with express station at 125th Street and Lexington Avenue, which will bring people from Pelham Bay on the east and the Yonkers line on the west to this street.

What Harlem needs most at the present moment is modern apartment houses with suites of three, four, and five rooms, that would rent for about $10 or less a room. We have plenty of the old-fashioned kind that were erected years ago, but the majority of prospective tenants will not even look at them.

There is a great shortage of this class of small apartments throughout Harlem, as inquiries at real estate offices will show, and a builder who has the courage to erect such structures will find them leased from the plans before the finishing coat of plaster is on his walls. Many good plots in the best sections of Harlem are lying idle at the present time, and in many cases could be purchased by a reputable builder for such an improvement on very easy terms for about their assessed valuation.

APARTMENT RENTING.

Financial Conditions Have Not Affected High-Class Structures.

By DOUGLAS L. ELLIMAN.

It would naturally be supposed that, during the financial convulsions attendant upon the opening of the great war in Europe and the subsequent recovery therefrom, renting, at least of the more expensive apartments, would proceed slowly.

Yet the facts are quite the reverse, for with a somewhat larger production of the large and, therefore, costly suites along Park Avenue the supply has been quickly absorbed. In all my experience, dating from what might be called the renaissance of apartment building about twelve years ago, there has never been a better or more consistent demand for the best the builders can produce.

Many have hesitated to depart from the safe and conventional building of six to nine-room apartments where the demand was clearly apparent, and I well remember at the time the plans of 998 Fifth Avenue were presented for criticism how skeptical I was when I realized what rents it would be necessary to obtain if the building was to be a financial success.

It seemed very doubtful if eighteen people could be found to pay $12,000 to $20,000 per annum. There was no evidence of such a demand, and yet when the building was ready there were at least one hundred interested prospects from which the eighteen tenants were quickly obtained. Since then other nearly as expensive suites have been produced and even more quickly rented.

The last and perhaps most spectacular instance of this was the renting of the building at the northwest corner of Sixty-sixth Street and Park Avenue, where the largest typical apartments in the city were completed just after the outbreak of the war. These were all rented at an average of close to $11,000 each before Christmas.

The builder of these apartments then undertook a new operation at the northwest corner of Park Avenue and Fifty-fourth Street on New York Central leasehold, modifying the size of the apartment somewhat, supposing that the demand for the largest suites had been satisfied for the time being. He was mistaken, however, in so far that several prospective tenants appeared who were not content with the sixteen and fourteen rooms provided and persuaded him to throw two suites into single apartments of exceptional size and accommodation. This building, which will not be ready until next October, is already over 75 per cent. rented.

Diagonally opposite on another Park Avenue corner is a building containing smaller suites in which the renting is proceeding with nearly equal success, and further uptown there are seven other new buildings which show the same unusually strong early demand.

A few years ago renting in new buildings in the Spring was very unusual, but now the builders have grown to expect it and fear something is wrong unless their buildings are half rented when the ordinary renting season opens in late July or early August. To be sure, some buildings do not begin to rent until then and fill up before October anyway, but this year the activity in renting so early augurs a real scarcity in the Fall.

Many older buildings which have lost tenants to the newer ones have benefited greatly this Spring, and nearly all the vacancies left from last Fall have been satisfactorily rented.

Many believe that there has been an overproduction on the east side, but the evidence is overwhelmingly to the contrary, and with the present attitude of the lending institutions against new operations there is absolutely no fear of it for some time to come.

TAXATION THE GREAT PROBLEM FOR REALTY INTERESTS—THE ADDITIONAL STATE BURDEN

President McAneny of Board of Aldermen Discusses City's Financial Condition and Future Needs—Realty Interests Failed in Strong Protests to Legislature—Where Relief May Be Looked For.

By GEORGE McANENY, President of the Board of Aldermen.

Without doubt the most important problem now facing real estate interests in the City of New York—or, for that matter, the city itself—is that of taxation. Two circumstances will combine to make the burden of the immediate future particularly heavy: first, the direct tax for State purposes to be imposed upon the city by the Legislature, and, second, the necessity for including in the next annual budget part of the moneys to be expended upon non-self-supporting permanent public improvements—moneys previously realized through bond issues.

The inclusion of this second item marks the first step in the "pay-as-you-go" plan adopted by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment in September last.

It is now estimated that the direct tax will alone add not less than eighteen points to the city's budget for 1916, and the "pay-as-you-go" policy may add ten. So that if this year's average rate of 1.90 for general city purposes holds good, as a starting point for next year, the new rate is likely to hover about 2.15.

There is a vital difference in the nature of the two principal budgetary additions to which I have referred. The provision for financing permanent improvements through the budget means not a loss, but a gain, to taxpayers in the long run. It is a measure of thrift. Year by year an increasing proportion of the amount to be expended upon permanent improvements will be carried in the budget, until, at the end of four years, all such improvements—excepting those that are in fact self-sustaining, like subways, docks, and water supply—will be financed out of current revenue.

The agreement we have made to issue fifteen-year serial bonds to cover improvements not wholly placed in the budget within the next four years, and to take up such short-term notes as are still outstanding on account of improvements for which provision has already been made, will add something more.

But, through the adoption of the new policy, we shall have a steadily decreasing appropriation for interest and sinking fund charges, and, except for the subways and other self-supporting investments, there will be no need in future for sinking funds; and, as the long-term city bonds now outstanding are redeemed from the sinking funds now maintained for that purpose, the net debt of the city will decline.

The direct State tax is, however, in a sense, almost all dead loss, for practically none of this additional contribution to the total State taxes will be spent within the city or for the city's benefit.

The adoption of the "pay-as-you-go" policy, by the present administration, was welcomed by real estate owners who had made a study of municipal affairs, for the reason that they saw that, though their bills might be higher at the start, they would ultimately reap a substantial benefit through the more conservative and thrifty method. I should be able to add that these same real estate owners hold a far different attitude toward the State tax proposition, and that they vigorously oppose it. But, unfortunately, they do not. No organization representing real estate has, so far as I have been able to learn, gone into the question of the necessity for such a tax or protested against it.

As a matter of fact, they appear to have paid little or no attention to it, and this in spite of the fact that it has been clear from the beginning that the city's share of the new levy would add anywhere from ten to twenty million dollars to the budget in one lump! I am bound to say that if civic organizations and taxpayers' organizations had shown half the zeal in entering their protests in Albany that some of them showed last Fall in opposing expenditures for schools, parks, preventive health measures, &c., their appeal might have saved the city many millions.

It is not my present purpose to suggest any change in the way of raising revenue to meet the extraordinary outlays that must be met by the city within the next few years. That question is now being studied by the commission appointed by the Mayor, which may or may not recommend revenue-producing devices other than taxation upon real estate.

I propose merely to outline briefly, in the simplest possible terms, the situation we may reasonably expect to face, so far as the necessary expenditures of the city government are concerned. With the figures before them, the readers of THE TIMES may possibly draw conclusions of their own as to the manner in which the revenues should be raised; and they will no doubt be interested in weighing the relative advantages of carrying a larger budget with the continuance of present municipal services and a smaller budget representing a reduction of these services.

The total budget for 1915 is $199,000,000. This represents a net increase over the 1914 budget of approximately $6,000,000, which came about notwithstanding the reduction of $2,000,000 in the cost of conducting the departments under the Mayor, the Controller and the Borough Presidents. Provision had to be made for an increase of $7,000,000 in debt charges alone, owing to the continued issuance of new bonds to take care of the old and new obligations, the payment of war rates of interest and exchange upon the one hundred million dollar loan obtained in September last, the redemption of revenue bond issue to cover the unusual cost of snow removal in 1914, &c.

There was an increase of $3,500,000 in the allowance made for deficiencies represented by uncollectible taxes. There was also an increase of $1,000,000 in the educational budget, chiefly due to mandatory salary advances ordered by the Legislature, and by the employment of more teachers to take care of the increased number of pupils.

Only about one-third—or, to be exact, $71,000,000—of the total budget represents the costs of departments whose expenditures are really subject to the control of the Mayor and the Board of Estimate. Within this class of appropriations, in the face of a normal year's growth of the city itself, and an increasing demand for the expansion of municipal facilities to meet that growth, the allowance made is, as I have already pointed out, $2,000,000 less than the corresponding expenditures of the year before.

The "pay-as-you-go" plan begins with the 1916 budget, in which we shall include one-fourth of the permanent improvements authorized or to be authorized during the present year. The cost of these improvements, looking at least a year ahead, is at present estimated at about $24,000,000, so that the amount to be included in the budget under the terms of the resolution of last Summer would be $6,000,000. The inclusion of the first maturing installments of the fifteen-year bonds, issued to meet the remaining three-fourths and to refund the corporate stock notes outstanding, would add, perhaps, $2,000,000 more.

The next year—that is, in the budget for 1917—one-half the cost of the permanent improvements will be included; in 1918 three-fourths, and in 1919 the whole cost. Thereafter, unless succeeding administrations reverse the present policy, the city will pay for such improvements—that is, those that are not self-sustaining—entirely out of current revenue.

In his recent speech before the Committee of One Hundred and Seven, the Mayor expressed the opinion that so far as the cost of running the city and borough departments is concerned, it would be possible to repeat what was done this year—that is, through every economy in administration to keep the department expense accounts—notwithstanding the annual increase in the work they have to do—not only as low as the current year, but lower.

It may be that the Mayor is a little too hopeful in his estimate of savings under this head. The margin of opportunity for such saving is much narrower than is generally supposed; but, assuming that he is right, we are, nevertheless, apt to have a budgetary increase due to the other causes I have named—chiefly the direct tax and partly the inauguration of the pay-as-you-go policy—of not less than $20,000,000 or $22,000,000. As each additional $800,000 adds one additional point to the tax rate, this would mean a total addition of twenty-five or more points, bringing the rate to the 2.15 I have been forecasting.

According to the Mayor's estimate—no one will believe that he errs on this point—no further actual reduction can be made in the cost of running the city Government after 1916, if we are to render the same service as at present. It is not to be expected that a direct tax, costing the city $14,000,000, will be repeated year after year; but it must be remembered that the amount included in the budget for the cost of improvements will be greater each year, offsetting in whole or in part whatever reduction may take place in State taxes. And, if the State tax is repeated in anything like the extraordinary figure of the present year, the budget, of course, will have to go still higher.

It has been frequently, and quite accurately, stated within the last few months that New York City faces the following alternatives: the increase of the burden of taxation upon the owners of real estate; the development of new and additional sources of revenue, other than the tax on real estate, and the curtailment of municipal activities.

There are some people who continue to suggest that the third of these alternatives is the one to adopt—that is, that the city should do less for the people in return for the taxes they pay, and leave more for them to do out of their own funds, spent privately, in addition to what they pay in taxation. There has even been criticism of the present administration for "extravagance" in its expenditures for current needs. The distinguishing characteristic of this criticism, however, has been its vagueness.

I do not well see how any charge of extravagance can make much impression upon the minds of the citizens in view of the fact, simply stated and amply verified by official records and figures, that, where the Mayor and his fellow-members of the Board of Estimate have had control, they have reduced expenses and not increased them. During my four years' service as President of the Borough of Manhattan, I found it possible to cut 19 per cent. from the cost of the administration of the borough, on the basis of borough activities and functions that I found upon taking office. Other Borough Presidents reached similar results, and many of the Mayor's departments are now able to do likewise.

While expenses were going down, the output of work of the Borough departments went up. Some of them increased their efficiency, as shown in the actual results of their work, two or three hundred per cent. In other words, there has been no loss, but rather a gain in efficiency in the reduction of cost, as the result of constant attention to economies great and small.

Through the continued development of economies of this sort in budget making, made possible not only through the disposition of department heads, but through the better organization of the budget-making bureaus of the Board of Estimate, the process of keeping costs down as far as practicable will continue. But if the reductions of the coming year do much more than offset the allowances that will have to be made to meet increasing needs, I shall be agreeably surprised.

It will, of course, be possible, if we so elect, to make some further reduction in the appropriations by cutting out in bulk provisions made for preventive health work, police and fire protection, education, street cleaning, the maintenance of pavements and other municipal activities. Such a thing is quite possible; but would it be either practical or desirable, and would the citizens of New York stand for it?

It has been my experience that it is very much easier for the critics of a city administration to advocate economy in general terms than it is to recommend any specific economy. At least that has been true during the present Administration. The fact that it is so difficult to put one's finger upon any particular appropriation and demonstrate that it is wasteful, is, in itself, a tribute to the care with which the Administration has guarded the public funds.

Let us not forget that during the period that we are now considering—the period covering the next three or four years—New York City will continue to grow in population; there will be more children to provide schools for, more tenement houses and construction work to inspect, more buildings to be guarded from fire, more traffic to be regulated and more people to be protected by the police, and greater areas of street surface to be cleaned and more pavements to be kept in repair.

There has been a good deal of talk to the effect that the so-called "social services" rendered by the city should be curtailed. I confess that I do not understand very clearly what this term means, and certainly when applied to the routine activities of the city government. Such criticism is apparently based upon the false assumption that the present city government has been broadly extending the work of the departments having to do with social conditions, and that the expenditures in this direction are excessive.

As a matter of fact, the expenditures for such purposes during the past five years have been less in proportion to population than during the period preceding. For five years, for instance, the city has not bought a single new playground or recreation field. There has been just one that has been added—in the Brownsville section of Brooklyn—and that was paid for by the people of the neighborhood themselves. In every other branch of the ordinary spending for such purposes there has been shrinkage and not expansion.

I am afraid that the people who criticise the functions the city government performs under the head of what they call "social service" lose sight of the fact that these are things that come within the ordinary routine spending of any modern city, and that they have a direct relation to the maintenance of the health of the community and the proper education of its youth. If one set out to prune such appropriations, he would find that no saving in particular that could be made without really curtailing the city in the performance of duties generally acknowledged to be imperative, and that even where such savings could be made they would be so small as to have no material effect upon the budget situation as a whole.

It should also be borne in mind that if New York were permitted to drop behind in its system of education, its preventive health work, and in similar activities, real estate would probably be much harder hit than it possibly can be by carrying the cost of these branches of the city's work. It is because New York does offer at least up-to-date educational facilities and sanitary protection that it is considered desirable to live here, and it is perhaps trite to add that the desirability of the city as a place in which either to live or to work, in short as a place of residence, must add to the desirability and, therefore, the value of its real estate.

When I say that the administration has practiced genuine economy I do not mean that it has saved literally the last dollar that can be saved. Perhaps I have already made that fact clear, but I should like to emphasize it. No doubt the cost of administration of some branches can yet be cut without cutting the service itself.

The Mayor has told of the conspicuous economies that have recently been secured in the Water Department, Department of Docks, and the Fire Department, and improved methods of management will no doubt bring about continued economies elsewhere; but it is through savings of this sort that the city officials hope to keep the 1916 budget at least as low as that of 1915, before the addition of the extraordinary new charges we have been discussing.

If we keep the departmental budget even at a standstill in total amount, we are, of course, cutting it down upon a per capita basis, because the city never ceases to grow. It is true that this growth so far as taxable values of real estate is concerned has been disappointing of recent years. With the opening of the new transit lines, and with better general industrial conditions, we are sure to see an improvement in the general municipal situation. So, if the practice of economies enables us to keep the city's own expenditures down, the increase in the total assessed valuation of real estate should at least bring about pro rata declines in the tax rate.

This hope is justifiable without taking into consideration the possible development of new sources of revenue, the easing of the direct tax burden after 1916, and the administrative economies that—as a result of future Home Rule legislation—may be achieved in fields that are now closed to the Board of Estimate through barriers fixed at Albany. We may look forward with some hopefulness, if not with distinct expectation, to these forms of relief.

REVIEW AND PROSPECTS OF THE AUCTION MARKET

By JOSEPH P. DAY.

With an experience, active participation and observation in the real estate market in New York City covering twenty years on which to base an opinion of the future, I am firmly convinced that no such period has existed in that time which favored the buyer as does the present.

Everybody concerned with the auction branch of the real estate market is fully aware what it presents in the way of opportunities, but the general public are yet to understand what the actual condition is.

One of the noticeable features easily discernible to the more careful investigator is that the daily assemblages attending current auction sales are rarely graced with the presence of the speculators whose names were household words until a few years ago wherever realty was discussed and understood. Even the less daring, but nevertheless potent, speculative bidders at auction sales are conspicuous by their absence, and whenever they do attend a sale it is merely out of force of habit and idle curiosity.

All of this must readily impress the reader as meant to convey the thought that competition is next to lifeless. So it is and has been, in a general way, for more than a year, and it was during that period that buying at auction was perhaps the most attractive for bargain getting in the history of the salesroom. Curious to relate, however, few, very few, took advantage of the numerous chances, and to that lack of public interest may be ascribed the unusually large number of sales "to the plaintiff."

Conditions in the auction branch are yet much the same, as intimated above, but as to how long that situation will prevail it would require more than even intimate knowledge of all the market whims, failings and probability to divine what the turn will be.

From the present improved condition of business and the good signs for a further strengthening of all lines of trade and finance, one might with reasonable safety predict that the direction for the dull-for-sellers but bright-for-buyers market for realty at public auction was not going to exist longer than the Summer.

The war, of course, is the more potent of all the factors that have served to throw real estate into its stage of depression, and it therefore was the more keenly felt because it came at the tail end of a period of uncertainty. However, the effect on the United States, and in particular New York City, is pretty well understood now, and to this general recognition that the country is going to benefit ultimately is due the prevailing rising trend in all lines of business and commerce.

Unless history is reversed real estate will come in for its turn at the end, but the promise is now bright that when interest is again reverted to real estate it will receive a double measure, for in the last analysis land forms the base of all human endeavor. And today witnesses a palpable change in real estate feeling.

It is a time when we may well pause and survey the situation. We look backward and we look forward. Backward we check up the notable exceptions that saved the year 1914 from being a do-nothing period in the auction market at voluntary sale.

The Pearsall property at the junction of Williamsbridge Road, Bronx and Pelham Parkways, adjoining the Morris Park Station and the Pelham Park Station of the New York, Westchester & Boston Railroad, a tract of about 500 lots, were offered at public auction for the purpose of liquidating a corporation which had held these lots for many years. Despite rather pessimistic predictions of the real estate world, this sale proved to be successful and all of the lots were disposed of.

Another was the sale of the Johnson property, located in the Bay Ridge section of Brooklyn, and overlooking New York Bay and Staten Island, a portion of the property of the late Tom L. Johnson. The heirs were anxious to liquidate the estate and this property was put upon the market, and all Brooklyn dealers were rather agreeably surprised to find that it was sold and sold at better prices than were generally predicted.

The American Real Estate Company, close students of real estate conditions, had vision and confidence, and offered a portion of their holdings at Broadway at the Yonkers line. This property had been somewhat developed by them, they having put in a number of street improvements, but not being large enough to warrant putting their large organization at work carrying forward a final development, they turned it into the auction market and had a very successful sale.

Another successful sale was that of the Hennessy estate. This property was located in the Bronx on Aqueduct and Burnside Avenues in a section which has been very attractive to builders for the past seven or eight years, property which was particularly desirable for residence because of the character of certain development and its proximity to good trolley service and in close connection with the Subway, and also because it was near the New York University. This property sold at figures which were above the expectations of the Hennessy heirs.

Owing to the tightened money of last year a great many developments and operations in real estate were deferred. That these have started up again is shown by the daily records in the papers of large corner plots being in the market for development as apartment houses costing from $600,000 to $1,000,000; particularly along Park Avenue has this been so.

Forward we see a line of new conditions that must soon be reflected in a broadened and stiffened auction market. The immense orders of our manufactures for European countries will send a golden flood of money to this country. Our factories and railroads will be benefited enormously. Our grains, meats, and other commodities are finding big and profitable markets, and in the wake of fast returning prosperity real estate will be in demand for uses growing out of this trade expansion. The future of real estate and the auction market looks very bright.

It is the general belief that the year 1915 will see a quickened interest in the auction market. With the renewed activity in the stock market, the putting into circulation of large amounts of money which have been continually held in banks and trust companies, and with the gathering confidence in the business world, it would seem that we have passed the last stage of business depression and are on the upward turn, that we have a much brighter outlook for the balance of the year and a fairly active market for the year 1915.

One of the first sales which will be held this year in the auction market will be the properties of the Henry Lewis Morris estate, comprising several parcels in the Bronx, also some properties in Manhattan, and a number of lots in Brooklyn and Queens.

TWENTY-THIRD STREET'S NOVEL MARKET

An important move toward the rejuvenation of Twenty-third Street has just been made in the opening of the greater portion of Stern's old department store as a general market building, known as the Cosmopolitan Garden. Since the desertion of that old-time shopping block by the retail merchants the problem of readjustment has been a serious one. On the north side of the street a solution has been effected in the remodeling of some of the former retail structures for wholesale concerns. The former Flint furniture building is occupied by a wholesale toy firm, the old Putnam and Dutton headquarters are tenanted by firms from the old dry goods section, and a big cloak and suit firm is in the eight-story building at 43 to 47.

The south side, which was more popular in the busy retail days, has shown slower development, and the Cosmopolitan Garden operation is the first serious effort there to restore the famous block to a semblance of commercial prosperity. In the alteration of the big five-story structure adjoining the twelve-story building erected by the Sterns a few years ago the exterior has been treated in an artistic manner, while the interior has been admirably equipped for the sale and display of goods. Over $175,000 has been spent in the changes. A number of five-year leases have been made to butchers and grocers, in addition to dealers in all sorts of household goods and fruits and vegetables.

"It is a new and in many respects an interesting undertaking," said Albert B. Ashforth, the renting agent of the market. "We are very well satisfied thus far with the number of the leases and the high character of the tenants. We will now endeavor to educate the public to the benefits of this new city market. Arrangements have been made whereby all goods will be delivered to any part of the city, and we believe this new venture will bring a good proportion of the old retail shoppers back to Twenty-third Street."

One result of the new market was the leasing a short time ago by the House of Free Sugar, a large grocery concern, of the building at 56 and 58, just west of the market, and a restaurant has taken space in the adjoining building at 54.

One of the radical changes is the demolition of the old dry goods store formerly occupied by Le Boutellier Brothers. The property is owned by the White and Hoffman estates. Several rumors have been current that the demolition meant that some big improvement was planned by the owners, but this was positively denied yesterday.

It has been stated that one reason for razing the old structure was to save taxes, but this would amount to barely $500. The building, it was explained, was in very poor condition due to its age and lack of occupancy in recent years, and its maintenance expense became greater than the value of the building warranted. With the gradual expansion of wholesale interests in the Twenty-third Street centre, it is expected that a modern loft structure will be erected there in the near future.

THE BROOKLYN MARKET.

New Subways Will Furnish Much Needed Stimulus.

By WILLIAM C. DEMOREST, President of Realty Trust.

The real estate situation in New York City today resembles the case of the sick man, who, although entirely cured, still required some stimulating influence to imbue him with the confidence that all is well and that he is ready to resume his active pursuits.

Fundamentally, nothing ails the realty market today; the banks are in the finest condition ever, mortgage money is easier than it has been since before the starting of the war, building loans are not difficult to procure, and even the most pessimistic calamity howler cannot find any suburban section that is "overbuilt."

In fact, the contrary is now the case. Throughout the suburban area there is a decided scarcity of new houses ready for occupancy, and this condition is especially evident along the line of the dual subway system.

The real estate market is unquestionably in need of some sort of stimulus, and the opening of the various subway lines now in course of construction—many of them are already nearing completion—will prove to be that stimulus.

I have the utmost confidence in the future of real estate, especially along the new subway lines, and this confidence is shared by the real estate development companies, lending institutions and many of our best known builders. Realty Trust and its subsidiary companies control real estate along the dual route, aggregating more than $6,000,000.

I frankly believe that the assessed valuation of all property along the new subway lines will at least double in value within the next decade; in fact I think that this is far too conservative an estimate. Among the properties which we control is Mapleton Park, Brooklyn, which has three stations on the Sea Beach subway. With the commencement of operation over this line, which is now predicted for June 10, we anticipate a repetition of the Bronx boom.

In Borough Park we also own a large number of houses close to the Culver line of the dual system. Our Long Island interests are represented by the Malba Estates Corporation, which has made a veritable beauty spot out of a tract of approximately 170 acres of water front, extending from the Malba railroad station on the North Shore division down to a point at Powell's Coves, where Long Island Sound and the East River meet.

According to the statement made to me the other day by Chairman McCall of the Public Service Commission the Sea Beach Subway will be in operation by June 10, and it is upon the result of that event that we are predicting vast activities in this section, especially on the part of apartment house builders.

Ten years ago this section was farm land; today its population exceeds 5,000, has a new school with a capacity for 1,800 pupils, and while the subway will bring this section within thirty minutes of Manhattan's centre, our plan of developing Mapleton Park will nevertheless maintain in this section the atmosphere of suburban life.

BILLS REALTY APPROVES.

Advisory Council of Realty Interests Requests Owners' Support.

The Advisory Council of Real Estate Interests, through its law committee, Walter Lindner, Chairman, urges property owners and taxpayers' associations to communicate with the Governor, indorsing the following bills introduced into the Legislature:

The Sanders bill, Senate Int. No. 1,303, which provides that the provisions of the labor law relating to construction, alteration, and structural changes in buildings, and authorizing the Industrial Board to make rules and regulations in respect thereto, shall not apply to cities of the first class.

The Mills bill, Senate Int. No. 1,333, which amends the labor law by providing that in New York City the Fire Commissioner may waive the requirement for a fire alarm system in buildings not over four stories or buildings equipped with automatic fire sprinklers if, in his opinion, such signal system is not necessary for the safety of the occupants.

The Thorn bill, Assembly Int. No. 1,123, which amends the labor law by making the present provisions of the section relative to fire walls around stairways apply to buildings more than six stories in height instead of to buildings more than five stories in height.

The Thorn bill, Int. No. 1,656, which amends the labor law by authorizing the Industrial Board to suspend the enforcement of mandatory requirements of the labor law, when there are practical difficulties or the provision would work unnecessary hardship, until the next session of the Legislature, when recommendation for repeal or modification shall be presented to the Legislature.

LAND VALUE MAPS.

How They Are Prepared and Their Value to the Property Owner.

The land value maps for 1915 have just been issued. The Tax Commissioners have given the widest publicity to these maps, to enable the public to judge of the fairness of assessments.

The purpose of the land value maps is to get the value per front foot of lots of standard size. The standard size of lots in Manhattan and the Bronx is 25 by 100, in Brooklyn 20 by 100. The attempt is to secure a unit for a lot, uninfluenced by peculiarities of depth, grade, or proximity to corners.

Thus if a lot is below grade, the unit represents the value that the lot would have if it were on grade. If a lot is below the standard of 100 feet in depth then the unit value would be that of a lot of 100 feet in depth.

When the value of a particular lot is determined account is then taken of the depth, proximity to a corner, and other influences that render the lot more or less valuable. The Neil-Hoffman rule is employed in order to arrive at the value of a lot below or above 100 feet.

Thus, if a lot is only 50 feet, its value would be two-thirds of its value if it were a 100-foot lot. But the Tax Commissioners have declared that this rule is not controlling on them, and they will set it aside whenever they think it just.

If a lot has rock upon it, the cost of removal will be taken into consideration in arriving at the value of the lot. If a lot is so much below grade as to need filling, the cost of filling is subtracted from the value of a lot at grade. All the surrounding conditions are taken into consideration in determining the value of a lot above or below grade.

It is interesting to note the methods the Tax Department follows in arriving at the value of corner lots, as well as lots that are in a measure influenced by corner lots. The appreciation of a lot due to its corner position varies in accordance with the values of the intersecting street and the nature of the neighborhood.

In a suburban section it may not be more than 25 per cent. appreciation for a corner lot. But if the corner lot is at the intersection of two busy shopping streets the appreciation may be as much as 200 per cent. over that of an adjacent interior lot.

Where an appropriate improvement of a neighborhood demands a lot of greater width than the standard lot, then that lot will be worth relatively more than a lot of standard size. Thus in the tenement section a lot 37½ by 100 is worth relatively more than a standard lot 25 by 100, because a tenement cannot be erected with profit on a standard lot of 25 by 100. So in a district devoted to factories and lofts a lot 50 by 100 is worth more than twice as much as a lot 25 by 100.

On the other hand, if an appropriate improvement cannot be erected on a plot less than 25 feet front, the depreciation due to its unusability must be taken into account.

MAYOR DEPLORES DIRECT STATE TAX

City Administration Is Making Every Possible Effort to Conserve Realty Values.

ECONOMY PROGRAM UPSET

Direct State Tax Will Cause a Sixteen-Point Jump in Our Present Tax Rate.

By JOHN PURROY MITCHEL.

The city administration has done its utmost to avoid the possibility of a direct tax next year, with the inevitable increase in the tax rate which would accompany the payment of New York City's share of such tax. We are mindful of the real estate situation and are doing what we can to conserve real estate values, not only in the interest of the city as a whole, but because we believe that the welfare of the individual citizen is involved.

The yearly influx of population calls for new building, and a revival in the building industry will not only give employment to thousands of artisans who are now out of work, but will enable tenants to obtain accommodations at lower rents. From every point of view it is highly desirable that capital be attracted into real estate improvement.

Aside from general business conditions, which are reflected to a great extent in the real estate situation, the heavy tax burden is the immediate reason why real estate is suffering as it is at present. The budget increased this year $6,000,000 in round numbers, but, as a matter of fact, the cost of administration decreased $2,000,000 as a result of a very careful paring process which the Board of Estimate adopted last year and which it is continuing this year.

The increase in the budget was due to factors over which the city authorities had no control, such as $2,000,000, representing the cost of snow removal last year, and $6,000,000 which had to be appropriated to cover uncollectible taxes, the cost of the $100,000,000 loan, and an increase of $1,800,000 in the cost of public education.

Our program of economy for next year would have enabled the city to get on without any increase in the tax rate if it had not been for the direct State tax, and now it appears that notwithstanding the efforts that we have made to relieve the situation the tax rate will go up in spite of us 16 or 17 points.

There is another factor in the real estate situation which contributes to the burden of the taxpayers, and that is the matter of building inspection. My refusal to approve the building inspection bill, which passed the Legislature, was not due to a lack of appreciation of real estate burdens. Aside from the fact that the bill distinctly weakened the Tenement House Department control, which I believe is essential to the welfare of tenement house dwellers, it was so drawn as to put a heavier burden than now exists upon real estate owners.

It didn't benefit in any degree the owners of existing houses, or houses when constructed; as a matter of fact it penalized the owners of such houses by adding another inspection—that of the Bureau of Buildings—to the inspections that they now have. Even building constructors would in the end not have been benefited except such of them as might have been able to dispose of their houses by sale immediately after construction.

The bill in question provided that building plans need be filed only in one place, but in view of the fact that the bill left, for example, with the Fire Commissioner the power to vacate premises, it is manifest that a wise builder before beginning operations would have been compelled for his own safety to submit his plans to the Fire Commissioner.

The real solution of the building inspection problem lay in the plan proposed by the Committee on Building Inspection, which I appointed, which committee recommended that the Board of Estimate and Apportionment be empowered to effect such administrative changes as would bring about a real simplification of building inspection.

The problem is an administrative one, not legislative. Notwithstanding the failure to get proper legislative relief this year the administration will set itself to the task of trying to find some way to minimize, even if it cannot eradicate, needless inspections.

SUBWAY ENHANCES VALUES.

Mr. Kennelly Shows Contrast in Values in Upper West Side.

By BRYAN L. KENNELLY.

It is almost inconceivable at the present time for people to realize the tremendous enhancement in values that must take place in the next year or two in real estate along the lines of the new subway routes. The New York public as a whole does not go backward, but always looks forward, but if it will go back with me for twelve or thirteen years, when I sold lots on Broadway at public auction for the late Charles T. Barney in the neighborhood of 139th Street and 140th Street, at $5,000 apiece for inside lots and corners at $7,500, and find the same lots selling today for $25,000 apiece and corners at $40,000, they will realize, perhaps, the enormous increase in valuations, notwithstanding the many difficulties that real estate has had to go through. That has all happened since the subway routes were projected.

Property along the new Jerome Avenue subway route, within twenty or thirty minutes of the heart of New York, and also in the Borough of Queens, where lots today can be purchased at very reasonable prices within eight or ten minutes of Times Square, should greatly increase in value and provide an active market; to say that these lots would double in value would be putting it mildly, but if they will just follow the example I have given above the realty public can have some insight as to what is in store for well-located property along the lines of these subways.

To think that one can go from Long Island City to Coney Island or any part of the Bronx for 5 cents seems incredible, and with the tremendous increase in population and prosperity to this country, by reason of the European war which will cause a great inflow to this country of the very best class of labor, and which will no doubt bring into existence hundreds of thousands of new manufacturing concerns to keep these good people busy, New York real estate must hold its place in the march to prosperity.

I am a great bull on the real estate market, and feel that from now on we are going to see a good, healthy increase in values, which I look for, especially along the lines of the subway routes.

State Enumeration in May.

The State of New York will make an enumeration of its population in May to furnish a basis for Legislative reapportionment, which will be made by the Constitutional Convention. It is expected that more than 11,000,000 inhabitants will be counted.

City's Land Holdings.

New York City is the largest land owner within the city limits, holding property valued at [illegible].

BUSINESS GROWTH IN TIMES SQUARE

COLUMBUS CIRCLE ACTIVITY

Theatre and Trade Interests Steadily Pushing Northward to Fifty-ninth Street.

One of the tallest buildings on an exceptionally narrow plot in New York City is about to be erected in the upper part of the Times Square section. It will cover the lot at 1,562 Broadway, between Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh Streets, adjoining the Palace Theatre, with its big office structure on the north.

The plot has a frontage of 20 feet by 80, so that the full depth of the building itself will be but a little over 70 feet. The new improvement has been designed by James C. Green, who has solved the problem of giving an artistic touch to a tall, narrow shaft by a Gothic treatment at the lower and upper stories, with two small Gothic turrets overtopping the roof cornice at each end. The style is that of the Louis XII. period, and it suggests the treatment carried out with more freedom and detail by Mr. Green in the Hearst Building, now nearing completion at Columbus Circle, with large frontages on both Broadway and Central Park West.

This new Broadway structure is being erected by the F. H. M. Realty Company on land leased on a long term from the Burnett family, which has owned the small plot for many years. The structural cost is estimated at $65,000. The building will be equipped with two elevators and all other modern improvements. The old house now on the site will be torn down early this month, and next Fall the new building will be ready for occupancy.

Another noteworthy improvement in this section of Times Square which indicates the expansion of business north of Forty-second Street will soon be under way on the southeast corner of Seventh Avenue and Forty-ninth Street, where a sixteen-story structure will be erected exclusively for the occupancy of moving-picture film concerns. Special facilities for the preservation of films, in the way of fireproof vaults and other features, will be installed, and on one floor will be a theatre for the trying out of new "movie" productions. The growth of the film business has been so great in recent years that a specially equipped building has long been needed, and a large proportion of space has already been taken.

The building will be erected by the George Backer Construction Company interests under the name of the 727 Seventh Avenue Company, the land having been leased from the owner, George W. Godfrey of Scranton, Penn. The cost of the building is estimated at $750,000, and it will be ready for use in the Spring of 1916.

The recent leasing of the long vacant Wendel Building, on the northwest corner of Broadway and Fiftieth Street, is another indication of the growth of trade in that Broadway section. The opening of the Strand Theatre a year ago and the successful leasing of all its ground floor stores have played a large part in stimulating business advancement.

The gradual expansion of the theatre centre up to Fiftieth Street has been a contributing factor in giving a healthier tone to the realty market. Around Columbus Circle, the completion of the Hearst Building with its commodious stores, and other improvements in the vicinity and on Fifty-seventh Street for high-class business interests are illustrations of the stability of the business growth in the Broadway blocks above Forty-fifth Street which, up to a short time ago, had been for many years in a quiet state.

Country House Rentals.

Burton, Thompson & Co. have leased for Mrs. John MacAdam her residence at Sea Cliff, L. I., to a client for the Summer season.

Fish & Marvin have leased for Miss Elizabeth Thatcher her property at Briarcliff Manor, N. Y., consisting of about one acre, with residence, to Miss E. D. Southwick.

At Dobbs Ferry-on-Hudson Kenneth Ives & Co., have rented for Charles P. McClelland his residence on Clinton Avenue to Edwin F. Rorebeck; for the Misses Masters the Lindens to A. S. Hardy; for Francis R. Masters his residence to H. R. Kohn, and at Hastings-on-Hudson for Preston L. Ford his residence to Richard I. Hussey.

Herman Frankfort has leased cottages at Woodmere to R. S. Stern, A. Davidsburg, W. Emerich, and A. A. Leventhal.

The estates of Tappan Zee has rented houses at Philipse Manor to Mrs. Arthur I. Hills and to P. W. Minnick.

TRANSFERS AND MORTGAGES

A UNIFORM SKY LINE.

The Zone System and How It Works in Germany.

The zone system, as applied to the regulation of buildings, originated in Germany, and receives the name because most of the cities were walled and grew in zones.

It has two characteristics—grouping buildings of different classes and limiting the density of building progressively, allowing the buildings to be higher and to cover more of the lot in the centres where the land values are greater and business needs require more concentration, making the requirements more and more severe as the distance from the centre increases.

Under the German rules of districting the height of buildings is invariably regulated with relation to the width of the street upon which the building is situated. In the zone of greater concentration a height a little in excess of the street width is allowed; in the other zones it must not exceed the width, and in the outer zones the maximum limits are less.

The proportion of the lot that may be covered by buildings also is almost invariably limited progressively, buildings on corner lots in each zone being allowed to cover more than those on inside lots.

The older or inner city is the first zone or district. Here the highest buildings are allowed. They must not exceed the width of the street plus about ten feet. The number of stories is restricted to five. Here in the inner city also the greatest proportion of the lot may be covered with buildings, three-quarters for the ordinary lots and five-sixths for corner lots.

Factories are allowed, but they are discouraged. The city presents the appearance of being fully built up to a fairly uniform height. The outer city in course of development grew in concentric rings around the inner city. This outer city is divided into an outer, an inner, and a country zone, in which the height of buildings allowed progressively decreases and the amount of lot that must be left free of buildings progressively increases.

In each of these zones are residences, factories, and mixed sections. In the residence section factories are forbidden. In the factory sections, situated along the harbor and railroads, residences are forbidden.

The building regulations are complex. Height is only one of many factors—such as length, depth, minimum courts of various sorts, light, angles, &c. All these factors vary absolutely and proportionately in each zone, and all must be included in any calculation of house dimensions in the different zones.

In Dresden the ordinances are somewhat complicated. Many small communities have from time to time been absorbed by the great city. The same conditions exist in them in miniature as exist in Dresden itself. The provisions of the ordinances of Dresden as to its inner and its progressively outer districts must be applied to each of these minor communities.

Another tendency in modern building ordinances is to make rules for streets in addition to rules for districts. It is recognized that the chief business streets should receive different treatment from the minor business and residence streets, and the chief traffic streets different treatment from either.

The allowed height and the amount of lot to be covered increases with the importance of the street and decreases very greatly the moment the principal street is left behind.

The regulations, while based on the utilitarian purpose of providing light, sun, and ventilation, have always shown a certain regard for appearance. A wall that can be seen from the street must be finished to some degree like a façade. The height regulations are intended to produce a uniform sky line. The effort is also made to encourage neighboring builders so to construct their buildings as to throw their courts and yards together.

The noticeable feature during the last year, says Nathan L. Ottinger, is the enlivened aspect of Broadway, especially noticeable in the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Street block occupied by the Strand Theatre. At Columbus Circle the new Hearst Building is an important and artistic addition.

"These two marked changes—there are many others of smaller moment," adds Mr. Ottinger, "are indicators of the trend of traffic and resultant trade to the Times Square-Columbus Circle sections."

New Homes at Hastings-on-Hudson.

The village of Hastings-on-Hudson, just above Yonkers, has enjoyed an enviable reputation as a choice home community. During the last five years its population has increased from 2,200 to more than 6,000. The elevated nature of the land permits the erection of homes overlooking one another and commanding extensive views of the Hudson and the Palisades.

All the most important thoroughfares from the Yonkers line to Dobbs Ferry have been paved with asphalt. A new high school costing $200,000 has been erected. In River View Manor, one of its suburban home places, about 200 houses, costing from $4,000 to $50,000, have been erected, and at Hudson Heights over thirty new houses have been completed in the last few years.

Harbor Improvement.

The Secretary of War has announced the allotment of the appropriation of $30,000,000 made by the last session of Congress for improving rivers and harbors. The allotment made for the Port of New York and its immediate vicinity includes the following: Gowanus Bay, Bay Ridge, Red Hook Channels, $125,000; Newtown Creek, $15,000; Staten Island Sound, $400,000; Bronx River, $100,000; Harlem River, $75,000; Portchester Harbor, $10,000; Mamaroneck Harbor, $14,800; East Chester Creek, $5,000; Brown's Creek, $2,000; Sheepshead Bay, $5,000; Passaic River, $100,000; Hudson River, $877,780, to which is to be added $622,220 allotted in 1914, making the total amount therefor $1,500,000.

Development of Staten Island.

One of the newer developments on Staten Island which is giving evidence of building activity is Richmond Park. It has been pleasantly laid out by Robert C. Turnbull and possesses good streets, sewerage, water, and gas. A clubhouse for the residents adds to its attractions, and several moderate priced houses are rapidly nearing completion.

PUBLIC INTEREST IN TAX PROBLEMS

By ALLAN ROBINSON,
President of the Allied Real Estate Interests.

In the early stages of urban life in this State the control of Governmental expenditures was in the hands of the taxpayers alone. Even today in our villages all expenditures, other than small and annually recurring items, are passed upon by the taxpayers alone, and in the charters of some of our cities similar arrangements were provided for; but for the most part the control over expenditures in our great cities has been committed to the people at large, a very considerable proportion of whom contribute only an insignificant amount to the support of the municipality.

Of late years the control over these expenditures has gone still further away from the taxpayers, and in the case of New York City a large part of the annual budget is definitely fixed by the members of the Legislature, a majority of whom come from outside of the City of New York.

A somewhat similar situation to that which now exists in New York City arose in the early seventies as a result of the peculations of the so-called Tweed Ring. Public attention was then directed upon the matter of municipal expenditures, and Governor Tilden, under a concurrent resolution of the Legislature, appointed a committee which had on it such influential men as James C. Carter, William M. Evarts, William Allen Butler, Samuel Hand, Simon Stern, and Henry F. Dimock.

This committee reported in 1877 and called attention to the corporate similarity between municipalities and villages, and the need of applying the same principle with regard to the former as was applied to the latter, so far as expenditures was concerned. Realizing the impracticability of requiring the taxpayers to vote upon all matters of public expenditures as a body, they suggested the election of a board of finance, which corresponded to our present Board of Estimate and Apportionment.

This board of finance was to be elected by taxpayers paying on $500 or more of assessed valuations and rentpayers paying at least $250 a year. The plan was not adopted, and there is today no control over municipal expenditures in the cities of this State, such as that exercised in villages or as that recommended by the Tilden Commission.

The condition of municipal expenditure which we now find to exist in this State prevails quite generally throughout the country. The last twenty years has been a period of great municipal expenditure. Take, for example, the matter of municipal and local indebtedness. The per capita net indebtedness of all localities — that is, municipalities and county governments—in this country in 1913 was $35.81.

This compares with $20.74 in 1902 and $14.79 in 1890. In New York State the net indebtedness of local governments was $1,046,000,000, or one-third of the entire local debt of the country. This represents an actual increase of 143.5 per cent. in ten years and a per capita increase of 90.4 per cent. during that period.

Some time ago the National Tax Association appointed a committee to look into the matter of the increase of governmental expenditures. This committee reported last Fall, and called attention to the enormous increase in such expenditures, which it referred to as a positive check to business enterprise, and called upon the business men of the country to organize a central efficiency committee to arouse the people to the menace of overtaxation, to gather statistics that will be plainly understood, and to point out ways in which economies could be effected.

There is need of such a committee to work on national lines; there is still greater need of such a committee to deal with our local problems, which are more acute than those of any other locality in this country. This question used to be considered a real estate question, but it is passed the point where anybody can call it a real estate question.

The credit of the city and the well-being of its citizens are involved in the matter of overtaxation here. Heavy taxation makes it difficult for businesses to compete with businesses of the same kinds in other localities more favorably situated. Overtaxation means, therefore, the driving out of business from this city, and unemployment and higher rents, since it acts to retard the construction of housing accommodations.

The City's budget this year is $190,000,000, which represents an increase of $6,000,000 in the budget of 1914. This increase does not mean, however, that the city administration itself has raised the cost of government $6,000,000. As a matter of fact, out of the entire budget of $199,000,000 the city administration has control of only $70,000,000, in round numbers.

The rest represents mandatory salary legislation and debt service and items of that kind over which the Board of Estimate has no control. As a matter of fact, the Board of Estimate cut its own expenditures this year for governmental purposes $2,000,000 below the appropriations in the year 1914.

This would have made the budget $191,000,000, but the following items had to be added: $4,000,000 on account of uncollectible taxes, which had to be written into the budget pursuant to the requirements of law; $2,000,000 for the cost of snow removal last year; an increase in the interest in the sinking fund charges; and the cost of financing the so-called war loan; $1,800,000 of educational expenditures due to the mandatory requirements.

In other words, these items added $8,000,000, as against the $2,000,000 cut in administration expenses, making a net increase of $6,000,000. The result of this increase in the annual budget was an increase of the tax rate to 190, and this represents a tax rate on what is practically full valuation throughout the city, or at least 90 per cent. valuation.

We know that in some cases the city's valuation is much in excess of the real value of the property. In other words, out of every $100,000 of valuation $1,900 must be paid toward the expense of the City Government during the year 1915. This is a very considerable burden, but it is likely to be increased during the next three years for three reasons. Granting that the city administration can keep down the expenses of the city in other ways, it must add to the budget this coming year 70 per cent. of any direct State tax which is imposed.

On the basis of $19,500,000 for a State tax the city will be compelled to pay $14,000,000 in round figures. Every increase of $800,000 in the budget means one point in the tax rate, so that New York City's share of a $19,500,000 State tax will represent an increase of seventeen points in the tax rate. If, therefore, we are to look forward to a direct State tax of $19,500,000 the coming year, we will have to face at least a tax rate of 207 in New York City, which, added to the present burdens, is bound to be reflected in real estate values. But this is not all.

As a result of the city's moral obligations into which it entered last year in connection with refunding its indebtedness the city will have to put in the neighborhood of $5,000,000 into the budget, representing permanent improvements which ordinarily would have been financed on long-term payments.

Another item that must be met in the next three years is the interest on the Subway bonds. As soon as the Subway comes into operation $8,000,000 of such interest will have to be placed into the annual budget.

It is the opinion of those who have made an investigation of the probable expenses to be met by the city in the next three or four years that unless something is done to relieve the burden of taxation the tax rate is likely to be as high as 240, which will mean $2,400 on every $100,000 of valuation. This is a crushing burden and one which will effect the workers of the city and the tenants, as well as the owners of property and the credit of the city itself. It is, therefore, a matter which concerns every citizen, and is one that should demand the best efforts of our best business men in the solution.

There are several ways in which relief can be had; one is through a reduction in the burden of State taxation; another is through increasing the city's revenues; another is by a general reduction in city expenditures, and another by securing a repeal of legislation in Albany, which places beyond the control of the Board of Estimate the matter of a large proportion of the city's employes' salaries.

Personally, I believe that the focusing of the public mind at this time on the financial side of the City Government is a good thing. If it had come earlier it would have been still better, but there is still time to work out measures of real relief, if everybody helps: that is, if politics are eliminated and property owners themselves refrain from asking for expenditures that are not necessary. The fault for the present conditions doesn't all lie with the social workers; taxpayers themselves have been guilty of getting the city to invest in parks and other expenditures that are not imperatively needed.

This must all stop now, and the city must go on to a strictly business basis. The quicker we do this the sooner we will get out of our present difficulties.

Unmistakable Signs That Business Generally Throughout the Country Is Improving.

NEW SOURCES OF REVENUE

Shortage in Mortgage Money Has Proved a Very Serious Setback.

By WILLIAM H. CHESEBROUGH.

There are many conflicting statements about the proposed direct tax of $10,500,000 now awaiting Governor Whitman's action, and it is difficult to form an accurate opinion as to how much of a direct tax is really required. What does appear clear, however, is that if appropriations are kept down within the bounds of propriety and necessity the amount of tax required would be very much less than the large amount authorized by the Legislature. Considerable doubt exists as to whether it is necessary or wise to include the large canal item of $5,000,000 in making up the total of the direct tax for 1916.

Important city officials believe that it is practicable and wiser to provide for this in another way, but even if it should be included and if it should be further conceded that the appropriations passed during Governor Glynn's administration did not fully take care of current needs, such analysis as it is possible to make leads to the conclusion that the amount appropriated is at least twice as large as would actually be required if proper economies in appropriations were effected, and that if the canal item were taken care of otherwise the amount of direct tax needed would be a comparatively small proportion of $10,500,000.

It is greatly to be hoped that Governor Whitman will not give his approval to this large direct tax without affording a hearing to the city officials. Such a large direct tax would be especially irksome now to the already overburdened taxpayers. The jacking up of assessments in this city to full value, while those in the rest of the State average considerably less than one-half of full value, causes New York City to contribute much more than its fair share of a direct tax, and the city is entitled to the fullest hearing and the question itself to the most careful scrutiny before official sanction be given to it. It is unfortunate that the controversy seems to have been looked at by some of the participants from a political rather than a financial standpoint.

I believe the comparatively near future will bring improvement in our local real estate conditions. With the exception of a temporary improvement in 1909, this country has gone through about nine years of industrial contraction. Now there are abundant and unmistakable signs that business generally throughout the country is improving, and the opinions of those best qualified to judge indicate that this country is entering into an era of great commercial prosperity.

If so, it must necessarily benefit New York City real estate. We have had too large a percentage of vacancies in various classes of structures as a result of the many lean years from which the country now appears to be emerging, but I confidently believe that a couple of years of much improved business conditions will absorb these vacancies.

The attitude of doubt on the part of some large lenders has been reflected in producing general hesitation and timidity among owners and prospective buyers of real estate. Those contemplating real estate investment have been deterred from purchasing because they have lacked assurance that the large lenders would favorably view mortgage loan applications. Fewer properties would have been taken in by the plaintiffs at foreclosure if prospective buyers felt certain they could procure reasonable mortgages upon them.

I believe, however, that the men at the heads of the large lending institutions are going to take a broad and discerning view of the situation. There is no doubt that in the past, values in various sections have been boosted too high, and that the system of making short-term mortgages without requiring any reduction of the principal has operated to the disadvantage of both the lender and the borrower. Those controlling the destinies of several of the most important lending institutions are in favor of a sounder plan of mortgage lending in the future—one that will provide for longer maturities and a compulsory reduction of the principal from year to year.

A disturbing feature which has contributed to reaction in real estate values since 1906, and to the less favorable attitude of large mortgage lenders, has been the changing of locations which has taken place in the last decade, especially that caused by a considerable portion of the wholesale district moving uptown, with as a result that property on and along the line of Broadway between Leonard and Twenty-eighth Streets and in the middle section of the city has suffered a large decline. Looking backward is simpler than looking forward, and there are few people who are not now prepared to concede that this has been unfortunate not only to the districts affected but also because it has resulted in invasion of the retail district by factory buildings.

While certain sections of the wholesale trade may follow and complete this uptown movement, it is manifest to the thoughtful observer that no similar condition of widespread changing of districts and values is likely to occur again in either this generation or the next. The geographical location of Central Park and the building of the new Grand Central and Pennsylvania Terminals have fixed for generations and probably for centuries the location of the best retail district.

The greatly increased investment of the last few years in costly buildings in the lower downtown section below Park Place, the great bulk of which is owned by the strongest and most influential corporations, banks, trust companies, and individuals, taken in connection with ownership of the great Exchanges and the location of the new Municipal Building and new Court House sites, and the now really tremendous aggregate of vested interests below Park Place, have fully fixed for all time the lower portion of Manhattan Island as the permanent centre of finance and commerce.

As an inevitable result of the great European war and the increased use of the Panama Canal, it is safe to predict that New York City, if it shows any regard whatever for its commercial opportunities, will be able to tremendously increase its shipping and commerce and grow in power in such a greatly increased ratio in the next decade as to become the permanent world centre of finance. Great things are not accomplished by wishing, and there is work to be done, but I believe that means will be devised to profit by the great opportunity afforded the United States to become the world leader in foreign exports and commerce, 'open to it as a result of the great conflict abroad.

The constantly mounting cost of City Government has been a disturbing feature, but I believe the men in control of our City Government now recognize the necessity of avoiding extravagant and unnecessary expenditure. Originally slender equities in real properties poorly improved or of mediocre character have been seriously impaired and in some cases obliterated by the reaction, but the increased cost of taxes has not seriously affected the value or the net income from really well located and improved properties. Equities based upon a solid foundation have not been appreciably impaired.

It appears unfortunate that the substantial real estate interests do not appear to be able to get together and co-operate under an able leadership—such, for instance, as that of Alfred E. Marling. In the last six months the really efficient work which has been done for real estate has emanated from the Advisory Council of Real Estate Interests. The recent fiasco with the Lockwood-Ellenbogen bill is a notable instance of lack of intelligent co-operation and effort.

In my judgment Mayor Mitchel's veto of the bill was eminently proper. While the necessity is universally recognized of eliminating duplication and conflict of inspections, it is lamentable that the bill was so framed as to cast doubt upon the preservation of the effectiveness of the tenement house law. Past experience indicates that efficiency and economy are not best served by splitting up inspection bureaus in the various boroughs.

We need more concentration in City Governmental departments; more centralization in purchasing; the elimination of unnecessary employes in the various city departments; home rule for the city in determining its appropriations; a fairer apportionment of money received from taxation within the State so that the city may not be deprived, as now, of a reasonably proportionate share; a cessation of the former habit of splurging in vast but financially dubious ornamental projects; and, more than all these things, the providing of new sources of revenue.

It is now generally recognized that real estate bears more than its fair share, and that policy as well as equity demands that the great bulk of the burden of taxation shall not be made to fall upon a few hundred thousand people in the State of New York, but should be so equitably and generally distributed as to fall lightly upon practically all of those who receive more than wages, and who live or work in the city and thus get the benefits and protection resulting from its Governmental expenditures.

Some of the recent suggestions of the Mayor's Commission upon new sources of revenue were good. For instance, the proposal to place a small tax upon occupation, business or otherwise. A law could be so drawn as to prevent the shifting of this tax to the landlord, and a very small amount from each tenant would injure no one and form a very large aggregate in amount. Some other suggestions of this commission were not so good, the proposal to tax unearned increment being particularly objectionable.

I think Mayor Mitchel and other members of the Board of Estimate have shown much zeal and ability, and believe that there have been few abler and fairer men in public life than our Borough President, Mr. McAneny. The Police, Dock, Tax, and Fire Departments are administered in a very capable manner.

I believe it is all-important to the city's future commerce and welfare that the South Brooklyn Marginal Railway bill should become law, and earnestly hope that Governor Whitman will sign this measure. This waterfront improvement is of vital necessity to the city, and the cost of small importance in comparison with the resulting benefit to the city's commerce and business.

The instant readiness of the banking community to co-operate to the fullest extent if necessary with the National Government and the City of New York in any measures necessary to the protection of credit deserves more universal recognition and commendation than has apparently been given to it.

The National Government should now co-operate in every way to protect the credit of the railroads and the welfare and prosperity of industrial firms and corporations. The country cannot be really prosperous if railroad earnings and credit are impaired. This is especially essential if the great opportunities now existing for the expansion of our commerce are to be fully availed of. I believe that the sentiment of the public has changed; that it will no longer be fashionable or prudent for political aspirants to endeavor to make capital by assailing business.

There has been too much of this in the past. The public appear to be tired of it, and in my opinion they now feel inclined to make those who attempt to renew such attacks feel politically the weight of their displeasure. The time appears to be not far distant when political agitators and self-seekers are likely to get the gate.

EXCESSIVE HEIGHT A TRYING PROBLEM

Ultimate Success of Modern Skyscraper a Question Still Unsolved.

REASONS FOR ITS GROWTH

Has Increased, as Well as Decreased, Land Values in Many Parts of the City.

By PROFESSOR CHARLES PECK WARREN,

Assistant Professor of Architecture, Columbia University.

The question is frequently asked, Will America ever develop a style of architecture? Probably the nearest we have come to it is in the erection of the skyscraper—the most striking and characteristic feature of American architecture—although this is but a step in the development.

The demand for the skyscraper is an outcome of conditions peculiar to New York, although Chicago claims the honor of having erected the first steel skeleton building. Manhattan Island is so narrow and its trade centre is so near one end that the rapid increase in trade since 1870 has necessarily been confined in a limited area, and in consequence the land there has advanced rapidly in value.

The first direct result of the menace in the height of buildings was the invention of passenger elevators for commercial buildings, for it was soon discovered that tenants would not mount stairs above four, or, at the most, five stories. Elevators were employed for the first time in the Fifth Avenue Hotel in 1856, and later on, in 1868, in the old Equitable Building, destroyed by fire in 1911. The gradual development and improvement in high speed made vertical travel easy and comfortable, and the erection of six, then seven, eight, and finally nine story buildings became possible. So that the problem of making downtown real estate investments profitable was thus temporarily solved.

As years went on, however, even nine-story buildings in which the cheapest offices rented for $2 per square foot of floor space ceased to yield sufficient revenue, owing to the constant rise in real estate values, so that the height of buildings had to be raised to ten and twelve stories. It was soon discovered that these tall buildings, constructed as they were of combustible materials in the floors, stairs, and elevator wells, could not be controlled in case of fire, so the Building Department in 1882 passed a law requiring buildings exceeding eighty-five feet in height to be fireproof.

This gave a great impetus to steel construction, and buildings such as the Mills, Morse, and Post were erected, in which, for the first time, the floor beams and interior columns were made of iron or of steel. The further development of steel construction made it possible to erect a safe and economical building rising to a greater height.

A new difficulty here presented itself. Under the old system of construction the outer walls became so thick at the base, when the building was carried up twelve or fifteen stories, as to cause a loss of income in the rooms on the ground floor, little more than an entrance hallway would be left. It became necessary to make the walls thinner, and this resulted in the construction of curtain walls and skeleton frames.

The masonry walls are not needed for strength; they are divided into sections and supported by the steel frame. A twelve-story building, for instance, would require 36-inch bearing walls on the first floor, but only 20-inch skeleton walls, saving nearly three feet in the width of the building, or over 10 per cent. on a 25 feet wide. The walls of the Woolworth Building are 4 feet 4 inches thick at the base. Under the old method they would have been 10 feet 4 inches.

What is the limit to the height of buildings? The answer is the height at which the building ceases to yield a sufficient income on the ground. There is no doubt of the possibility of erecting a building 1,000 feet high—say, seventy-five stories—but would it pay?

An examination of the records of the Building Bureau shows that the increase in the height of buildings is not represented by an upward line of growth, but by an irregular line in which the upward tendency is interrupted at intervals by lines of depression.

Starting with the year 1890, which marked the beginning of the development of the steel skyscraper, the height rapidly increased to eighteen stories, reached by the Mutual Life Insurance Building in 1892. Then followed a reduction lasting two or three years, and then an upward movement culminating in 1898 in the twenty-four-story Park Row Building. The following decade witnessed a slight repression until about 1900, and then a rapid turn upward to forty-two stories attained by the Singer Building in 1906. Another ebb followed, and then a rise which was topped in 1912 by the Woolworth Building with its fifty-five stories.

A congestion of skyscrapers in any community is objectionable for several reasons; it is dangerous to life, menace to health, and it impedes traffic. It is quite true that the modern building can be made fireproof, but when filled with inflammable material, it becomes, in effect, merely a stove or a furnace in case of fire. A large percentage of so-called loft buildings are used for manufacturing purposes, for which they were not designed. Under the present building code it is still possible for owners to pervert the uses of their buildings. When the new code is adopted the provision requiring a certificate of occupancy to be filed with the plans will operate to prevent this condition.

In regard to the second cause, the dark rooms in which thousands must work, cut off from light and air by the adjoining tall buildings unquestionably have a damaging effect upon the health of the occupants. This, however, might not have any effect in limiting the height of buildings, but the fact that these darkened lower floors yield a smaller revenue will have its effect.

Concerning the third cause, it does not need any elaborate explanation to show that tall buildings bring about a thoroughly undesirable congestion of population. Start to walk up Fifth Avenue from Fourteenth Street any day at the noon hour. It is almost impossible, because of the tremendous outpouring of the occupants of the adjoining loft buildings. The result is the neighborhood is shunned, shops become undesirable, rent falls and the buildings fail to return a proper percentage of profit on the land. When this happens either the building must be torn down and be replaced by a more remunerative one or land values will decrease.

The future uncertainty of land values in New York City will also have a tendency to discourage the erection of high buildings. Hitherto the tendency of values has been almost uniformly upward, but in the last few years there has been in some quarters, notably in the Broadway section above City Hall up and in lower Fifth Avenue, a tendency in the opposite direction. Who can foretell with any certainty the effect of the future subways and tunnels upon land values? Suppose the vast outlying area should be developed for manufacturing purposes, of what use would be the loft building?

A skyscraper is not necessarily a money-making investment. The majority returns rents less than many other forms of investment, and some of them actually lose money. It is a sad commentary on the life of a skyscraper that the first, the Tower Building, 52 Broadway, erected in 1888, was torn down in 1913. Why? Because it did not pay, and on its site is being erected a low arcade stone structure equivalent in height to the average four-story

SOUTH FERRY BUILDING.

WESTCHESTER COUNTY.

Every Indication That the Present Year Will Be an Active One.

"Every indication points to an unusually good year for the real estate interests in Westchester County," said Charles I. Marvin of the real estate firm of Fish & Marvin, discussing the present situation. "The renting season this year, especially in the larger and more costly properties, has been both active and early.

"Brokers report a large number of inquiries from prospective purchasers, both for improved property and plots of acreage on which to build. The type and volume of these inquiries indicate an increased interest in the country property market, which, like the city market, has been relatively inactive for the last two or three years.

"Westchester County offers more, perhaps, to the man who desires a country residence, and whose interests require accessibility to New York, than almost any other section. Frequent and fast trains on the New Haven, the New York Central, and the Westchester & Boston give unexcelled transportation facilities for sections along the Sound, along the Hudson, or in the central portion of the county.

"Westchester County is intersected with unusually good roads, which make every section accessible to New York by motor. New roads are constantly being added to those now built, while from fifty to 100 miles of new State road are either recently finished or under construction.

"For those desiring properties near the water, Westchester County offers the Sound to the south and east, and the Hudson to the west, while no near New York sections offer so many attractive and well-equipped country clubs. Ardsley, Sleepy Hollow, Wykagyl, Scarsdale, Dunwoodie, and Knollwood are all within easy motoring distance of New York, and among the newer clubs may be mentioned the Quaker Ridge Club, which has been recently formed and is expecting to have an eighteen-hole links in good condition for this Summer's play.

"A marked increase in the building operations has been noted during the last few months. The large hotels in the different sections of the county report an unprecedented outlook. The Briarcliff Lodge at Briarcliff Manor, Gedney Farm Hotel at White Plains, and the Gramatan at Bronxville are rapidly filling up, and the cottages in these sections as well as the larger estates are rapidly renting.

"The better type of developments are showing a great deal of activity. At Scarsdale one of the latest and most popular developments is that of the Morris Estate. This was originally the old Morris farm, and comprises nearly two hundred acres. It is being conservatively developed for country estates, the plots ranging in size from five to ten acres.

"A number of handsome dwellings have just been completed or are in process of construction in this section. At Bronxville the Lawrence Park West section is also proving popular. A number of dwellings have just been completed, while the demand for houses in the Bronxville section, in which Lawrence Park West lies, is exceeding the supply.

"The rapid growth of the Lawrence Park Country Club has made the present facilities quite inadequate, and plans are under way to enlarge the clubhouse with an addition containing dining room, ballroom, squash and racquet courts, &c. A large Winter sports building is also contemplated, as is an artificial lake covering several acres."

Pelham Heights Well Laid Out.

Pelham Heights, one of the earlier Westchester County developments, midway between Mount Vernon and New Rochelle, is showing the effects of the general revival of realty activity in several prospective building operations.

It was laid out eighteen years ago by Congressman Benjamin L. Fairchild. The typography of the land is undulating and lends itself admirably to the construction of homes where the automobile is housed in a garage connected with the house. The restrictions prohibit building on a lot less than 75 by 125 feet. Among the new houses is one built by the Milligans, containing eight rooms, with a connecting garage.

Apartment Rentals.

Douglas L. Elliman & Co. have rented an apartment in the new building at 903 Park Avenue, corner Eighty-fourth Street, for Bing & Bing to H. K. Brent, who recently sold his house at 35 West Forty-ninth Street to August Heckscher; also an apartment at 43 East Sixty-second Street to Mrs. Thomas Hall, and an apartment at 246 West End Avenue to Mrs. Charles Schafer.

Pease & Elliman have rented for Bing & Bing apartments at 905 Park Avenue, at Eighty-third Street, to Mrs. Edward Roberts and Dudley Davis.

MODEL STREET SIGNS.

New Type a Great Help to the General Public.

The problem of providing street signs of the best possible type for Manhattan is one to which Borough President Marks addressed himself early in his administration.

He insisted upon finding, if possible, a type of sign that would enable people to determine definitely and at a glance the name of the street on which they might be, and also the name of the cross street toward which they might be looking; that these signs should be legible at a considerable distance; and, furthermore, that they should be so placed in relation to street lights as to be readily visible at night as well as in the daytime.

As a result, a type has been evolved which has met the exacting requirements laid down by President Marks. The new signs, like the old, are placed on lampposts at street intersections on diagonally opposite corners. They consist of a steel plate, 22 inches long and 7½ inches high, having at the centre of the top a semi-circular projection 11½ inches wide at the base, with a radius of 5½ inches. On the main body of the sign plate is indicated the name of the avenue or street, on the semi-circular projection at the top is indicated the name of the cross street. The lettering is white and 4 inches high on a dark blue background enameled on the plate.

The sign plate is held in a bronze-colored skeleton steel holder, into which it is inserted from the top. The plates are reversible and can be seen from either side, while the holder is so designed as to afford a rectangular framing for the name of the avenue or street and an oval framing for the name of the cross street. The holder or frame is made as flat as possible, all unnecessary ornamentation being omitted, not only in order to enhance the dignity and good appearance of the sign, but also in order to prevent as far as possible the face of the sign from being darkened by shadows such as are cast by the projecting ornamentation on signs of other types now used in the city.

The new signs have been placed on all street corners along Madison Avenue northward to 136th Street; on Second Avenue, from 24th to 129th Street; on Sixth Avenue, from Carmine to 30th Street; on Ninth Avenue from Little West 12th to 59th Street; on Tenth Avenue, from Little West 12th to 59th Street; on the west side of Central Park West; on Avenues A, B, and C, from Houston to 23d Street; on Broad Street, on West Street, on State Street, on Whitehall Street, on South Street, on Delancey Street, on Kenmare Street, on West Broadway, on Herald and Greeley Squares, and on Columbus Circle.

About 1,500 have already been installed and the work of installing them on other streets and avenues will be carried forward as fast as possible.

Those for Fifth, St. Nicholas, Eleventh, and Thirteenth Avenues are almost ready and contracts are shortly to be let for 2,500 more.

Now, for the first time in the history of the city, through the use of this new type of street sign, which gives double information on a single sign, it is possible, either by day or by night, for people traveling along a New York street, particularly those people riding in trolley cars or other fast-moving vehicles, quickly and positively to determine from a considerable distance exactly what street they are on and what cross street they are approaching.

The best of the old types was the "wing sign." Indeed, the new type is a direct development from this. It answered all the requirements met by the new type, save that it did not indicate the cross street.

There are altogether in use throughout the city seven other distinct types of street signs, which will be supplanted as fast as possible by those of the new type, which have met with unanimous approval.

House Chimneys.

Chimneys were scarcely known in England in the year 1200. One only was allowed in a religious house, one in a manor house and one in a great hall of a castle or a lord's house, but in other houses the smoke found its way out as it could, says the London Strand Magazine. The writers of the fourteenth century seemed to have considered them as the newest invention of luxury.

In Henry VII.'s reign the University of Oxford had no fire allowed, for it is mentioned after the students had supped, having no fire in Winter, they were obliged to take a good run to get heat in their feet before they retired for the night. Holinshed in the reign of Elizabeth describes the rudeness of the preceding generation in the arts of life.

"There were," says he, "very few chimneys. Even in the capital towns the fire was laid to the wall, and the smoke issued out of the door, roof or window."

In the year of 1639 a tax of 2 shillings was laid on chimneys.

TENEMENT LAW SUIT AFFECTS WEALTHY

Court of Appeals Is to Decide Test Case Regarding Disorderly Houses.

LESSEE FIGHTS HEAVY FINE

List of 800 Men and Women Who May Be Penalized Includes Prominent Persons.

Sensational developments may follow the decision of the Court of Appeals, expected early this week, in the matter of the Tenement House Commission against Lucy A. McDevitt. The proceeding was begun in September, 1913, to test the amendment to the tenement house law, known as Section 100, fixing penalties for the maintenance of any nuisance by the owner or lessee of any property which includes the keeping of any part of the property for disorderly purposes.

The defendant was accused of permitting two apartments in the tenement house at 326 West Forty-third Street to be used in violation of the law. The case came first before a Magistrate and resulted in a victory for the defendant, who also won in an appeal to the Appellate Term and in the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court. In the latter court the opinion was written by Presiding Justice Ingraham. A dissenting opinion was written by Justice McLaughlin and concurred in by Justice Dowling.

Pending a decision by the Court of Appeals Assistant Corporation Counsel John P. O'Brien proceeded with the work of rounding up other persons who had been guilty of violating the law. At present he has a list of 800 men and women, 100 of whom are liable to the maximum penalty of a fine of $1,000, and the others to the minimum penalty of $50. Mr. O'Brien declined yesterday to show this list, although he admitted that it contained the names of prominent citizens. The owners of the property used in violation of the law are liable as well as the lessees. This will bring the names of many wealthy and prominent persons into view.

The defendant testified that she had no knowledge that her property was being used for any disorderly purpose, and that when she did learn of it she ejected the persons complained against. The Corporation Counsel produced evidence showing that Mamie Brown and Rose Howard had been convicted before they were ejected from the premises. The brief of the Corporation Counsel prepared for submission to the court contains part of a report made by the Tenement House Commission prepared after an exhaustive investigation. One section of the report reads:

"The steady growth of vice in the tenement houses has come under the personal observation of members of the commission. Its special investigations, reinforced by the unanimous testimony of many witnesses, including the tenement-house dwellers, labor representatives, and philanthropic workers, lead it to most earnestly protest against the conditions.

After saying that the evil had been steadily growing, the report reads:

"Evidence has been submitted that the protests of the dwellers in the tenement houses immediately affected, as well as those of their neighborhood, have been alike unheeded, and, in spite of the best efforts of careful parents, the very house in which a family has dwelt, selected because it was thought to be free of this curse, has furnished the temptation against which parental care and anxiety have been in vain. The dangers of the situation to those of tender age in the tenement houses is alarming."

The brief says that "as civilization advances and conditions in life change courts are influenced in holding as constitutional laws which theretofore on this subject would have been held unconstitutional." Further it says:

"The renting of apartments indiscriminately, as is shown in this case, cannot be said to be an exercise of that care and attention to one's property which an owner is required to give. It is his duty to investigate the character of prospective tenants and to what uses the premises are to be put. This duty he not only owes to himself, but also to the other families occupying apartments and to the public."

An attaché of the Corporation Counsel's office said:

"While the amendment to the law may appear to be harsh because it makes the owner of property used for disorderly purposes responsible for the character of his tenants, it is the only method devised for keeping disreputable persons from mixing with the reputable. If we win in the Court of Appeals we will proceed at once to collect the penalties fixed by law against the 800 persons we have on our list. We don't pretend to say that this list covers all of the places in Manhattan. The number may be twice as large. But the cases we have are fortified by sufficient proof to enable us to collect the penalties without any further litigation."

A case pending in the Supreme Court for the collection of the maximum penalty has been postponed until after the Court of Appeals disposes of the McDevitt case. If the commission wins, the law will be strictly enforced.

LONG VIEW CHANGES.

A. J. Drexel, Jr., President of New Jersey Suburban Development Co.

Several important changes have recently been made in the management of the suburban development at Long View, a tract of 300 acres on the Passaic River, running back to High Ridge, near Summit, N. J. The property overlooks fifty square miles of beautiful country. The general altitude is 500 feet. There is over a mile of river frontage, a fifty-thousand-dollar clubhouse, golf course, tennis courts, macadam streets, electricity, and other improvements.

Plans for the proposed bridge over the Passaic River are now in the hands of the borough authorities. The bridge will bring Long View within 300 feet of the Berkeley Heights station of the Lackawanna Railroad.

At the recent meeting of the Board of Directors A. J. Drexel, Jr., was elected President and A. Walpole Craigie re-elected Secretary and Treasurer. New members to the board were William Rhinelander Stewart, Jr., Chester G. Burden, Joseph W. Burden, Philip Carpenter, A. J. Drexel, Jr., Frederick T. Frelinghuysen, Charles Lanier, Jr., and Charles A. Wulff. John A. Thompson was appointed managing director of the company.

MINETTA OF DUTCH ORIGIN.

Nothing Indian About Name of Quaint Greenwich Village Lane.

In a recent issue of Guido Bruno's little paper, "Greenwich Village," which is expressive of the artistic and more or less traditional elements of interest in that quaint section of New York, are a few paragraphs on the historical origin of some of the old streets. The explanation of the odd name of Minetta is worth quoting:

"Minetta has been a pleasing sound; so had the brooklet thus named which flowed by the Zantberg hills to the Hudson. It came from the springy marshes round the present Washington Square and emptied itself in the river near what is now Charlton Street. The Dutch root 'min' (compare with minute, diminish, &c.) implies littleness. By the addition of the favorite pet suffix 'tje' the name 'Mintje' was coined, just as we would say 'the little one,' and was applied to this rivulet to distinguish it from the 'Groote Kill,' or large creek, a mile further. Mintje or Minitie was corrupted by the English to Minetta, Mineto, Manetta; &c., and then somebody suggested that it must have been an Indian word."

FAVORS LONG-TERM LOANS.

Benefits of Such Mortgages Explained by A. B. Ashforth.

Discussing the subject of long-term mortgages, Albert B. Ashforth said yesterday: "When will lenders appreciate the benefits of the long term, amortized loan. The better class of borrowers would welcome the practice. It is the lender who has to be converted. Foreclosures are the result of a borrower being unable to reborrow, either because of a stringent money market or a depreciation in the value of the mortgaged property.

"Tight money does not last forever, so that with patience a lender may eliminate that trouble, but a dropping in values requires more than patience for a cure. An owner who is making semi-annual payments on account of the principal of his mortgage is without question a better person to lend to than one whose only hope of paying is to reborrow. He is steadily improving his own position and consequently that of the lender.

"Some lenders say they take no mortgages which are not safe and do not want to be bothered with payments. To be as safe as that they must be prophets, but this suggestion is made to those not so gifted."

Increased Cost of Lumber.

According to the New York State College of Forestry lumber has increased in price 30 per cent. every decade for the last fifty years, and forest products generally are bringing much higher prices that more and more attention is being paid to the closer utilization of forest products.

There are opportunities for favorable investment, caused by the necessity of the seller and timidity of the buyer, in the Manhattan Real Estate Market.
Hard times and relocation of transit facilities caused a displacement of values—some sections have been adversely affected, others benefited.
This readjustment took place in the years 1907 to 1914. Weak holders have been eliminated, values have struck rock bottom and are rising. The radial traffic and trade centre of Manhattan is the district extending from 34th to 50th St.
The massing of permanently anchored institutions, such as the New York and Pennsylvania R. R. Stations, Steinway Tunnel, Queensboro Bridge, and Central Subway Stations, assures increasing value to property in their vicinity. For further information on this section apply to

COMMERCIAL RISE OF QUEENS BOROUGH

Land Purchased and Factories Built Adjacent to the Bridge Plaza.

PLAN MANY IMPROVEMENTS

New Subway Lines and Barge Canal Terminals Give Promise of a Boom in Realty.

The remarkable growth of the Borough of Queens during the last few years has been the result of the efforts of the business men of the borough to secure important improvements to make Queens an integral part of New York City.

One of the most efficient organizations in the city today is the Chamber of Commerce of the Borough of Queens, which comprises in its membership a majority of the big realty, financial, and industrial interests of that borough. Through the work of this organization more important improvements have been secured for Queens Borough during the last four years than perhaps for any other section of the city.

With the opening of the Queensboro Bridge in 1909, the operation of Long Island electric train service through the East River tunnels to the Pennsylvania Station in 1910, and the connection of the Subway at the Atlantic Avenue station of the Long Island Railroad in Brooklyn in 1908, Queens Borough began to take an important part in the affairs of the city, for the East River no longer acted as a barrier to its growth, and in point of time a great portion of it has now become as easy to reach as most of Brooklyn and the Bronx.

RAPID TRANSIT EXTENSIONS.

Queens, however, has lacked adequate rapid transit facilities at a 5-cent fare, similar to those enjoyed by other parts of the city, and, through the Queens Chamber of Commerce, began a campaign four years ago to make its needs recognized by the city officials. The reward of its efforts can be demonstrated best by a glance at the rapid transit map shown in this section. Elevated extensions are under construction in every section of the borough, comprising almost fifty miles of single track, some of which is two, and other three tracks.

Two elevated extensions of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit, from Brooklyn to Jamaica and Richmond Hill and the extension to Ridgewood, will give a 5-cent fare from the southern and central portions of the borough to all parts of Brooklyn, and as far north in Manhattan as Fifty-ninth Street.

The operation of the Steinway Tunnel from Forty-second Street to Long Island City, the extension of the Second Avenue elevated line across the Queensboro Bridge, and the operation of the Broadway-Fifty-ninth Street line of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit through the new tunnels to be constructed under the East River at Sixtieth Street, will give unequaled service to the important transfer station on the Bridge Plaza, in Long Island City, and from there over the extensions northward to Astoria, and eastward to Woodside, Elmhurst, and Corona. Later the Corona extension will be extended to Flushing, and if a contract is made with the city by the Long Island Railroad for the lease of its tracks, a 5-cent fare will be given to College Point, Whitestone, Bayside, and Douglaston, as well as Flushing.

It is almost impossible to exaggerate the influence of these improvements on Queens Borough. Right across the East River, only a mile or two from the heart of the business section of Manhattan, Queens has been without adequate transit facilities. The progress of the borough despite the lack of cheap transit has been remarkable; but what it will be in the next ten years, with transit facilities equal, and in many cases superior, to every other section of New York City, will surprise even the most confident.

Today Queens is on the threshold of the most wonderful development that has ever occurred in any part of New York City, or for that matter in any city of the world. These rapid transit extensions will serve as an outlet for the expansion of the congested population of Manhattan into the thousands of acres of undeveloped land in all parts of the borough, and will make cheaper homes, with plenty of light and air, more accessible for the workers of Manhattan and Brooklyn.

WATERFRONT DEVELOPMENTS.—BARGE CANAL TERMINALS.

While the adoption of the dual subway system solved for many years to come the rapid transit problem of New York, the most important problem before the city today is the preparation of a comprehensive plan for the development of its entire waterfront of 738 miles. The national and State officials are co-operating in the preparation of plans for this development.

The present facilities for handling commerce of the Port of New York are limited. The 290 miles of waterfront of Queens Borough, however, offer a solution for the future development of New York City. The many miles of valuable water frontage in Queens still remaining undeveloped along Newtown Creek, East River, Flushing Bay, Flushing Creek, and Jamaica Bay have every advantage for immediate development.

The Borough of Queens has 196.8 miles of natural waterfront and 37.6 miles of improvements, or developed waterfront, as measured around piers and along the heads of slips, or a total of 217.1 miles of waterfront, measured around the natural shore line and piers. This represents 34 per cent. of the natural waterfront, 14.3 per cent. of the developed frontage, and 29.2 per cent. of the entire water frontage, as measured around piers and shore line, of the City of New York.

Appropriations for the improvement of Newtown Creek and Flushing Bay and Flushing Creek have been secured by the Chamber from the national Government, and many important improvements are being urged. The importance of Newtown Creek as a commercial waterway is indicated by the increase in its tonnage from 2,675,000 tons, valued at $90,535,000, in 1903, to 5,141,000 tons, valued at $226,962,000, in 1913.

Barge Canal Terminals.

The most important waterway improvement secured by the Chamber for the Borough of Queens during 1914 was the location of three Barge Canal terminals for the State of New York, which has acquired title to property at the following locations, which comprise a total waterfrontage of over a quarter of a mile and include approximately ten acres of land:

"1. EAST RIVER, NORTH OF QUEENSBORO BRIDGE.—A strip 681 feet in length on the East River, near the foot of Rogers Avenue, and extending 150 feet inshore from the established bulkhead and pierhead lines, or approximately 104,700 square feet. This location for a Barge Canal terminal is well adapted to the present and future industrial and commercial needs of Long Island City.

It has direct and easy access to the marginal waterfront street, namely, Vernon Avenue; is only about 2,000 feet from the entrance of Queensboro Bridge itself, and geographically is admirably situated for any development along the waterfront. It is, moreover, centrally situated for the vast number of factories now located in Long Island City.

"2. HALLET'S COVE, ASTORIA.—The property acquired at this point on Hallet's Cove, a small indentation of the East River, extends 400 feet northerly from the foot of Broadway to a point between Camelia Street and Jamaica Avenue, comprises approximately 180,270 square feet in area, and extends from the Boulevard outshore to the bulkhead and pierhead line. The bulkhead and pierhead lines are coincident at this place, and it is possible for the State to excavate a basin in this large area, whereby an extensive terminal can be laid out. The location is well adapted geographically for a terminal, as it has direct connection with several main arteries of travel connecting Long Island City, Astoria, and Flushing.

"3. HEAD OF FLUSHING BAY.—The site selected has an approximate frontage of 400 feet on Flushing Bay, just west of the mouth of Flushing Creek and north of Jackson Avenue, and is about 400 feet in depth. It is admirably located and will serve not only the growing communities of Flushing, College Point, and Corona, but many other inland sections, such as Forest Hills, Richmond Hill, Bayside, Whitestone, &c. Notwithstanding the fact that navigation in Flushing Creek extends considerably further inland, the terminal as located will not be subject to the inconveniences of drawbridge navigation."

BUILDING A HOME.

What a Modern Hollow-Tile Ten-room Structure Costs.

By FRANK CROWELL.

In the seeking of suburban locations for homes the most essential things to keep in one's mind are distance from business centres, recreation, closeness to station, sociability, shopping centre, and the durability of the structure, either purchased ready built or erected from plans to suit one's conditions.

Suburban homes of right design and construction and in right environment provide ideal living.

Along the north shore of Long Island, within a half-hour's commuting distance of the heart of Manhattan, there are many choice locations where one can purchase a plot of 100 by 100 feet or more in a desirable restricted neighborhood and build a house in keeping with the ideals one has in his mind, we will say at a total cost for house and ground of $15,000. Many styles of house can be bought for this amount and the question is, How large can it be and what construction should be used?

The answer is a house of distinctive architecture and individuality, in keeping with the surroundings and with neighboring houses, ten rooms and three baths, of hollow tile and stucco, which construction is the building material of today. Hollow tile is the scientific adaptation of concrete to house building, and the great advances that have been made in hollow tile construction are perhaps not generally known. Wood is expensive—its scarcity makes its cost almost prohibitive. Brick may be used to advantage for a house where the architect is given a free hand, but the material which is commanding serious attention today, giving a substantial and permanently satisfactory structure for a building cost which leaves money enough for many interior refinements, is hollow tile. With reasonable forethought by the architect and care by the artisan, the result will be a comfortable and economical home.

It is demonstrated that a permanent, semi-fireproof house can be constructed of hollow tile, with stucco finish, just as cheaply as the ordinary frame house, and a structure is produced that is at once economical, strong, damp-proof, and architecturally most attractive. The former crude attempts in houses are entirely superceded. The artistic side of concrete has been studied, and the most pleasing lines of architecture and many textures and colors are now produced.

In building a home one seeks to realize a cherished ideal, made up perhaps of the impression of other houses that one has seen during the "wander years" of life. Husband and wife plan their home to be. "When we build our house," they say, "let us have" this, that or the other. "The abode of affection, peace, and rest" grows in fancy long before it takes material shape. Tastes differ, the architecture finally chosen will be influenced by environment, lay of land, &c., but on the essentials of the home, all will agree.

The house must be comfortable, warm in Winter, cool in Summer, durable so that it will not settle nor require excessive repairs for many years; and it must have individuality, the expression of its owners' taste, it must have the largest possible number of modern improvements that save steps and make life easy.

Hollow tile construction gives these desiderata. It enables one to build a good, modern, ten-room house for $15,000. The house will have two stories and finished attic, a full-sized cellar, the walls built of hollow tile, and especially to realize the full strength of the material and at the same time provide the continuous dead air space which makes the hollow tile house more economical to heat than any known construction, and the roof and floors will be of concrete beams, or alternate tile and concrete beams, and concrete slabs.

The basement, with laundry, space for heater, coal bins, ample storage cellar, will be a full concreted excavation, with 12-inch walls and solid floor, and with plenty of windows for light. The side walls of the house will be stucco outside and plastered inside. The floor beams and slabs will be made with open wood nailing strips on which to lay the wood floors. The whole roof will be of Spanish or flat tiles on top of the rough hollow tile work.

This forms the solid, absolutely fireproof frame of the house, so infinitely superior to wood construction. Its cost has left a comfortable amount to apply to reasonable refinements of interior construction and all desirable "modern improvements."

Insurance statistics show that very many fires originate in the basement and travel up between studding and walls, but by the hollow tile construction this hazard is absolutely eliminated at a cost that is negligible when compared to the fire menace and the constant deterioration of wooden construction.

Into the substantial fireproof structural shell which the hollow tile has given us we may put interior work which will fitly carry out the general architemtural scheme of the house. On the ground floor will be the hall, the living room and the dining room, all thrown together in effect, bungalow fashion, by post and panel work, executed in chestnut, with natural finish. The result is an air of roominess and easy access; the kitchen on this floor being isolated by the main or bearing partition of the house.

On the second floor the arrangement comprises three bedrooms, a den, or reading room, and bathroom, with a sleeping porch, and the finish is white wood.

On the third floor are two maids' rooms and bath, with an ample lumber room.

The special conveniences that can be put into this home within the original estimate of $15,000 may comprise: Proper hot water or steam heating equipment of approved modern construction to give adequate, evenly diffused warmth in the home, hot and cold water piping, connected to kitchen range; laundry heating equipment, proper gas piping and electric wiring, including outlets for portable lamps and electric heating and cooking appliances, and even piping for a vacuum cleaning system. The architect skilled in hollow tile work can simplify the work of the building contractors and save much labor by taking the rough piping and wiring layouts into account in making his plans.

New Homes at Shore Acres.

At Shore Acres, which is being developed by Clifford B. Harmon & Co., and at Mamaroneck on the Sound, several attractive houses are nearing completion for Summer occupancy, and plans are being prepared for several others.

A Dutch Colonial house is being erected on Parkway Drive for Thomas Robb. John H. Safford is also erecting a house, and plans are completed for the home of Gilbert H. Gilbert. N. M. Woods is planning a house for a half-acre plot.

The clubhouse at the extreme end of the property, overlooking the harbor and Long Island Sound, will be opened on May 1. A private bathing beach adjoins the club. Shore Acres was formerly the estate of Robert P. Bonner.

SHIFTING OF VALUES.

Remarkable Figures Shown by Tax Department Reports.

The Tax Department reports a remarkable shifting of values in many sections of Manhattan. In that section which includes all of that district south of Grand and Watts Streets there was a decrease in assessed land value of $6,576,000 and an increase in the assessed value of buildings, on account of new buildings erected, aggregating $4,526,000.

There was a net decrease of more than $2,000,000. In the section which lies between Grand and Fourteenth Streets there was a decrease, being in round figures $4,000,000 for land and $5,250,000 for buildings, the net decrease for the section being $9,275,000. Of this decrease much more than half was in that section lying between Bleecker and Fourteenth Streets and Third Avenue to Sixth Avenue; the decrease in this section was $5,442,000.

In the section between Fourteenth and Fortieth Streets the net decrease was nearly $10,000,000, though in a small part of this section between Second and Fourth Avenues there was an increase amounting in the aggregate to $4,000,000. The decrease from Fourteenth Street to Twenty-sixth Street, between Fifth and Seventh Avenues, amounted to $9,500,000.

The section between Fortieth Street and Ninety-sixth Street west of Sixth Avenue and Central Park showed a net increase of slightly over $15,000,000.

The largest part of the increase came in the general section known as Times Square. The section lying east of Sixth Avenue, between Fortieth and Ninety-sixth Streets, showed a net increase of $23,004,000, divided almost equally between land and improvements.

BIG INDUSTRIAL TRACT.

Seventeen Blocks for Development Adjoining Queensboro Bridge.

A large tract of land, consisting of about seventeen blocks, lying on the north and south sides of the Queensboro Bridge in Long Island City, has recently been placed on the market for long term leasing by the Ravenswood Holding Company. The object of the owners is to lease plots on favorable terms for industrial development. Twenty-one-year leases will be given with renewal privileges.

The property is located at the intersection of the Queensboro Bridge, the East River, the Interborough, and Brooklyn Rapid Transit routes, and a part adjoining the Barge Canal terminal.

With the opening of the Steinway tunnel, Long City City can be reached in five minutes from the Grand Central Station. The new marginal railroad will adjoin Vernon Avenue, connecting the entire water front of Long Island City and Brooklyn, thus affording transportation of freight to the trunk lines and all steamers or sailing vessels.

It was at first intended to make only land leases, but inquiries have been made by so many prospective clients that it has been decided to make the erection of buildings a part of the plan.

Among the big industrial concerns in the neighborhood are the American Ever Ready Works, Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company, Ford Motor Company, Brewster & Co., Simplex Auto Company, New York Consolidated Card Company, Pierce-Arrow Auto Company, Aeolian Company, Packard Motor Car Company, Empire City Button Works, and the American Bar Lock Company.

ACTIVE BUILDING ON THE HEIGHTS

APARTMENTS WELL RENTED

The Seventy-five Foot Front Walk-Up Apartment the Successful Operation.

By T. WARD WASSON.

The stability of Washington Heights realty during the recent depressing conditions has been a source of great satisfaction to the owners of property in this section of the city. Records show that there have been more sales and the market has held firmer in this section than in any other of a like size in the greater city. In fact, conditions on the hill have acted as a safety valve, often helping an otherwise stagnant market.

Some months ago it was predicted that a curb on building activity was an absolute necessity. The unfavorable monetary conditions have probably caused some worry, but on the other hand have worked wonders, and the result is that our supply of first-class desirable apartments is hardly equal to the demand.

Generally speaking the heights is from 97 to 98 per cent. rented, and the vacancies which now exist in a good many cases are due to that type of a speculative builder who never puts up a good house and whose main idea is to put as many rooms as possible on a floor, devoting little, if any, attention to layout or finish.

Investors have it within their power to eliminate this type, and while natural conditions during the past five years have tended toward that end, still there are investors who will pay a low price, which is in reality a high price, for a cheaply constructed building, attractive both as to appearance and rental for the first year only.

Usually the builder makes his initial mistake by not first submitting his plans to a reputable agent, who is conversant with the demands of tenants and the cost of the up-keep and service of a house. Builders who take advantage of the knowledge of their agents invariably have been most successful, and in every case that has come to my attention, the houses have been filled before completion. Small rooms and poor lay-outs will not stand up under subsequent competition, and one or two rooms less on a floor is often the reason for a waiting list and a successful operation.

The seventy-five-foot front walk-up is assuredly the most desirable type of non-elevator house. Its cost of up-keep and service is less in proportion to its size, and its appearance is more attractive to the tenant. A number of this type have recently been erected and in every instance have been successful. The desirability of this section of the city from a residential point of view calls for the fire-proof construction of most elevator houses, especially if it is possible to erect a building with large rooms and improvements superior to the six-story type, and to rent the apartments at from $12 to $15 per room.

It is ridiculous, however, to think of obtaining more as such a house would then come into competition with those further downtown. The six-story elevator will always bring from $8 to $12 per room, but its days are numbered here, as in most other desirable parts of the city.

On Washington Heights building activity now centres at three points—Fort Washington Avenue and 161st Street, 180th Street, both at Haven and Audubon Avenues, and in the vicinity of the 191st Street Station at St. Nicholas Avenue.

In all, about twenty-seven buildings are being erected, mostly of the non-elevator type, and when completed the supply of apartments will still be far below the ordinary demand of Fall tenants. More operations would have been started if it were not for the fact that there is an absolute scarcity of desirable plots which can be bought for a price attractive to the conservative builder.

At a recent dinner of the Upper Manhattan Property Owners' Association over 500 members and guests listened to Mayor Mitchel give ridiculous reasons for his intended veto of the Lockwood-Ellenbogen bill and criticise the Legislature for petty politics.

It seems that the prime cause for his veto of the above mentioned bill was due to the fact that he did not frame same, nor was he properly consulted, according to his own idea, before the bill was sent to Albany. Surely he is not holding up the motor bus franchises, affecting transit on Washington Heights, for the same reason.

So far the present administration has done nothing of note for this section. Our parks are neglected. We must beg to have our ashes collected and streets cleaned, due in no way to the insufficient number of men or wagons allotted us. We are badly in need of greater pumping facilities for water and now, instead of offering us relief, which will cost the city nothing, the franchise is being held up by the Mayor's Committee. It is regrettable that his Honor could not have seen over 200 people waiting for buses last Sunday at St. Nicholas Avenue and 155th Street, for most likely he might have partially relieved the need which would not have thrown political constituents out of office.

A Forward Movement in Suburban Development

Successfully meeting a growing demand for a community in which design, engineering and stability of construction are the cardinal principles.

Ample capital to adequately work out its problems; protective restrictions, completed improvements, and property marketed on a fair basis, is the security offered to an investor at Forest Hills Gardens.

Obviously it is unwise to invest in a site or a home before having seen this property, and investigated the qualifications that determine Forest Hills Gardens' pre-eminence in suburban development. Houses nearing completion and plots of varying dimensions are offered for sale.

If desired, upon a small initial investment, convenient terms for the unpaid balance can be arranged, whereby the payments are extended over a period of years, approximating what would otherwise be rent.

VARIED ATTRACTIONS OF LONG ISLAND MAKE STRONG APPEAL TO SEEKERS FOR PLEASANT HOMES, REST, AND RECREATION

Improved transit facilities, affording quicker and more convenient means of travel to scores of popular suburban communities from the business centres of Manhattan, have been one of the noteworthy features of Long Island during the last few years. With the completion of the East River tubes, connecting the great Pennsylvania Station at Thirty-third Street with the Long Island Railroad system, followed soon after by the opening of the new Jamaica Terminal Station, with important track changes, a great impetus was given to the upbuilding of many old and new residential communities.

This condition has been very apparent all through the Jamaica section. At Jamaica several new tracts have been opened for development, among them being that of the Everett Realty and Construction Company, where several blocks of homes which have acquired a wide reputation for their artistic treatment have been erected from plans by Architect Electus D. Litchfield within two or three blocks of the new station. They are constructed of brick, with slate roofs and concrete cellar floors, provided with gas and electric lights, independent hot-water gas heater, and wall safes, while every bedroom has its own clothes closet and the living rooms have open fireplaces.

The population of the Jamaica section is nearly 50,000, and, besides the grammar and high schools, it has a State normal school, churches of all denominations, and good stores, banks, libraries, and clubs.

Just this side of Jamaica two of the newer developments which have attained considerable success are those at Kew Gardens and Forest Hills Gardens. The development of Kew Gardens east of the railroad station has been very rapid. About a year and half ago the work of opening up the streets was begun. Now there are forty-eight new houses, and plans completed for at least a dozen more.

Kew Gardens takes its name from the similar relation of Richmond Hill and the Royal Botanical Gardens at Kew in England. About fifty years ago Edward Richmond, a landscape artist of note, and Albon P. Man, a New York lawyer, purchased the tract of land which is now known as Richmond Hill and includes Kew Gardens. After the death of Mr. Richmond, Mr. Man continued the development work until his death in 1891, and in order to carry on this work the Kew Gardens Corporation was formed, with the sons of Albon P. Man as officers and Directors.

Forest Hills Gardens, developed by the Russell Sage Foundation, with its fine hotel, new station, and the old English architectural effect in its detached and group system of houses, may justly be called unique as well as interesting.

Over $4,000,000 has been invested in the purchase and improvement of the property; and over $3,000,000 has been invested by the public to date. Over 200 houses have been built, of which seventy-seven were completed this year, ranging in price from $7,900 to $75,000, at an average cost of $15,000.

Owing to the proximity of Forest Park it was not thought necessary to have any large park on the property, but there is a public green at the point where the two main avenues divide within view of the station and central to that part of the property furthest from Forest Park. This forms the residential focus of the community just as the neighboring station square is the business focus. The station square, the railroad station and its approaches are developed as a single composition.

In addition to the green, two spaces in other parts of the tract, one containing about an acre and a half, the other less than an acre, have been set apart to form small parks for the use of the residents.

The electrification of the North Shore Division of the Long Island Railroad has been a great boon to that community, and additional benefits are in store in the plan whereby the B. R. T. elevated tracks from the Queensboro Plaza to Corona will be connected with the main Long Island tracks, giving quick transit service to Little Neck via Whitestone and Flushing.

In this territory, especially in the Flushing, Bayside, and Great Neck centres, there has been a very substantial growth. At Kensington, one of the prominent Great Neck developments, every house has been sold and contracts have just been awarded for an exceptionally fine home, which with the land will represent a value of about $45,000. The house will be of low rambling Colonial type of construction on a plot fronting 160 feet with a depth of 115 feet. It will contain seventeen rooms and five baths.

One of the latest improvements at Kensington is the home of R. M. Ellis, constructed of tapestry brick with white trimmings, having sixteen rooms and four baths and costing about $30,000.

Another attractive development is Marathon Park at Little Neck, owned by the Long Island Sound Realty Company. The rolling character of the country and its location, overlooking Little Neck Bay and Long Island Sound, with an electric railroad on one side and a trolley line on the other, make it a pleasant residential site. Tennis courts have been provided for the residents, and several new houses are under construction.

Beyond Great Neck, all along the north shore beyond Huntington, there are many evidences of renewed activity. An unusually large number of fine estates have been leased in the Piping Rock locality, and several purchases of expensive estates have been made. Nearly a dozen new houses are nearing completion or about to be started in the Plandome and Manhasset communities. At Huntington the organization of the new country club on the old hotel property connected with the Casino overlooking the bay has enlisted the interest of nearly all the Huntington residents, and the entire eighteen-hole course will be ready for use by the end of May. It will be known as the Huntington Golf and Marine Club.

Further inland, in the Lake Ronkonkoma region, is the growing development known as Brentwood. Among the latest improvements is a central pressure water system just installed by the Brentwood Realty Company which supplies the entire park district. Several new houses of the bungalow type are being completed.

One of the noteworthy developments on the south shore is Brightwaters, near Bay Shore, which has had a very substantial growth in the past three years. The property includes a strip of wooded land about a third of a mile wide extending about six miles inland and northerly from the shores of the Great South Bay, with two separate branches of the Long Island Railroad, each intersecting the northerly and southerly portions, with good service from New York.

As a cool Summer resort Fire Island, just off Bay Shore, maintains its old-time popularity. One of the successful developments there is Saltaire, containing several hundred acres on Fire Island beach. It has excellent ferry service from the railroad connections at Bay Shore. A dock into the Great South Bay and boardwalks have been built, and among its other benefits are an artesian well, a gas plant, and stores. The cottage community now numbers 126 buildings.

Cedarhurst, in the Rockaways, has shown a growth along high-class suburban lines that has brought many new residents to the town. The houses in Cedarhurst Park are all of attractive design and stucco construction. Cedarhurst Park is about thirty-two minutes from the Pennsylvania Station and has excellent train service.

A GREAT SAVING

To be Made in Subway by Using Long Island Tracks.

The passing by the Legislature, of the Enabling act permitting the Public Service Commission to contract with the Long Island Railroad for the operation of the trains of the dual subway system over the tracks of the railroad from Corona to the city line at Little Neck, and to College Point and Whitestone, practically assures a five-cent fare to all parts of the Third Ward of the Borough of Queens.

The stimulating effect of this proposed reduction in fare from an average of 39 cents a day to 10 cents a day has been very marked, and has already resulted in many sales in the district to be benefited. The reason for this can be readily understood when the saving is figured out in dollars and cents, as shown by a very interesting statement relative to the matter issued by one of the leading realty companies.

In this statement it is shown that the present average commutation from stations in that section is $8 a month and that after the commuter reaches the Pennsylvania Station he now has to pay an additional surface carfare of 10 cents a day, or $2.60 a month, making a total of $10.60 a month, or $127.20 a year, as compared to $2.60 a month, or 31.20 a year, which amount will cover his entire transportation when the dual subway trains are in operation to Flushing, Whitestone, and Little Neck.

There is, therefore, a clear saving of $96 per annum, figuring on only one person from each family going regularly to business. As a matter of fact, however, it is found that an average of approximately two persons from each family regularly commute over the Long Island Railroad, so that on that basis there would be a saving of $192 per annum for each family.

It is, however, not only the saving in commutation that will be made, but also a large saving in single trip fares which, at present, average 62 cents a day. Assuming that two members of the family go shopping once a week and to the theatre once a month, there would be, with a five cent fare, a still further saving of $6.20 a month, or $74.40 per annum, making the total saving to each family approximately $266.40 per annum.

It is estimated that the average rental paid in the Third Ward is approximately $40 a month, or $480 a year, from which it will be seen that the saving to each family by the operation of the dual subway trains at a five cent fare, as compared to the present fares on the Long Island Railroad, will be approximately one-half as much as the average rental now paid in that section.

One of the largest property owners in Flushing, in speaking of the matter, made the following statement:

"This whole section has for years been handicapped by high fares, which prevent it from having its natural growth, and just as soon as this handicap is removed the entire Third Ward will grow the same as the Bronx has grown since the subway began operation eight years ago.

"The Third Ward is five-sixths as large as the Bronx, and it is located in the same relative position with respect to the heart of Manhattan, and there is no reason why, when it has equal rapid transit facilities, that the growth of the Bronx should not be repeated here, and no reason why the same level of real estate values should not eventually be reached here. Every family living in this section has had to pay a penalty in excess of railroad fares, amounting to about $22 a month, and just as soon as the Third Ward is put on the same basis as other parts of Greater New York it is sure to enter upon a period of growth and prosperity such as has never been equaled before in Greater New York."

BRIGHT SUBURBAN SEASON OPENING FOR NEW JERSEY STEADY DEMAND FOR HOMES IN POPULAR COMMUNITIES

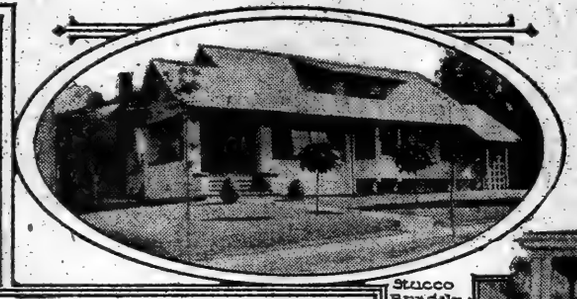
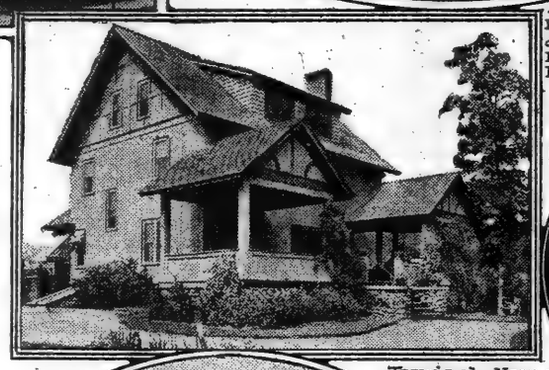
Woodcliff-on-Hudson, N.J.



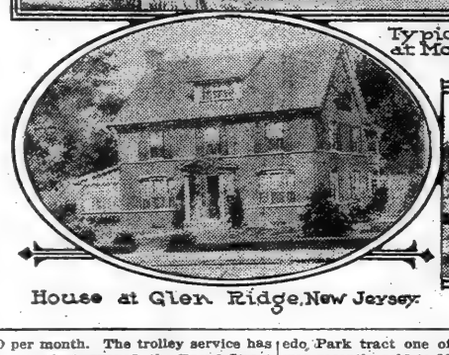
Stucco Bungalow at Nutley N.J.

Leonia Heights

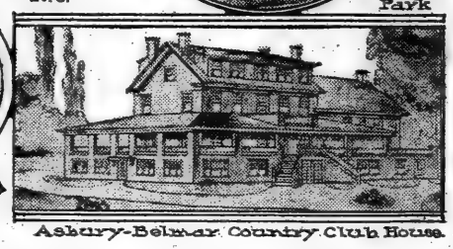


Typical Home at Mountain Lakes, N.J.

Tuxedo Park



House at Glen Ridge, New Jersey.



Asbury-Belmar Country Club House.

It is characteristic of the revival of good-feeling in the business world that this expectancy of better times is being very generally felt in the realty and building market by all the suburban centres around New York. In the well-developed communities of New Jersey this cheerful view is already showing itself in increased sales in many localities, an excellent leasing market which began very early this year, and a marked activity in new building operations.

One of the well-established towns which is witnessing a substantial growth is Nutley, where, during the past year a new county park costing $200,000 has been completed. In addition, property has been acquired for the extension of the main county park in both directions for a parkway along the Yantacaw River the entire length of the town, two and a half miles. The building of a trunk sewer system from Nutley to tidewater in New York Bay is almost completed, several sections of the local sewerage system have been finished, a Carnegie Library built, and the parking space around the new West Nutley Station attractively laid out.

The building operations have given the town about one hundred new houses, making an increase in population, of about 500 and bringing the total population up to about 7,500. A new fireproof school, to cost $50,000, has just been started, which will give a total of four graded schools, one high school and one private school.

The Nutley Realty Company has been steadily developing various sections of the town along high-class lines for the past twenty years. Houses sell for from $4,500 to $15,000 and rent from $25 to $100 per month. The trolley service has been greatly improved, the Broad Street cars from Newark being continued through to Nutley during the rush hours with cars every five minutes in each direction.

All of the suburban sections of Newark are showing steady growth. In the Tuxedo Park tract one of the new houses was recently sold to Mrs. K. L. Gutman of Newark. The dwelling covers a plot 60 by 150 and contains eight rooms. The house is of frame construction, and the sale was made by the Crowley-O'Brien Company.

One of the growing suburbs on the slope of the Palisades within a short distance from New York by the 130th Street ferry service to Edgewater is Leonia. The Leonia Heights Land Company has several houses under construction, the majority being in a new section recently opened. The style of architecture is varied from the Colonial to the modest cottage. This property is fully developed, with water, gas, electricity, and paved streets. There are two schools and five churches, and for recreative pleasures there are tennis courts, a golf link, and a bowling green.

Overlooking the Hudson, just above Weehawken, is Woodcliff, which from the elevation of its site has developed very rapidly in the last few years.

The popular Jersey shore section, always popular in Summer, is preparing for one of its liveliest seasons. In the vicinity of Asbury Park, where building has been very active during the Winter, is the new development known as Asbury-Belmar Estates, with 3½ miles of shore front on Shark River.

The outlet to the ocean from Shark River at Belmar is nearing completion, and when finished will make the Shark River basin a picturesque harbor for yachts and motor boats. The golf links of the Country Club, a short distance from Asbury Park, are now in excellent condition. Its course is 6,190 yards long. The clubhouse is a Colonial structure costing $35,000.

Further north at the head of the Navesink or upper Shrewsbury River, Red Bank, because of the excellence of its railroad and trolley car connections, is the business hub of a dozen or more settlements. At Atlantic Highlands in the residential section known as Atlantic Highlands Park, residences are being erected costing from $8,000 to $15,000. There is an eighteen-hole golf course on the property.

Keansburg has made exceptionally rapid growth. A new pier to accommodate the new boat lines between Newark, Hoboken, and New York is being built at the foot of Laurel Avenue. Within the past year sixty houses have been built and 400 lots sold.

The Banking Department, State of New York

Offers at private sale over 1000 parcels of real estate located at GRANTWOOD, MORSEMERE, LEONIA, HUDSON HEIGHTS, PALISADE, and EDGEWATER, New Jersey, (about opposite Grant's Tomb,) consisting of modern houses and bungalows and high-class building lots.

During 1914 a large number of sales resulted from the bargain prices which prevailed. Since that time many modern houses and building lots have been obtained, and during the season of 1915 these properties will be offered at the same range of bargain prices, which average about 50% of the prices asked by former owners.

The above properties are owned by two corporations in process of liquidation, and the extremely low prices are calculated to bring quick sales and hasten the closing of the companies' business.

APPRAISING REAL ESTATE.

Methods Used by Experts i.. Scientific Valuing.

By WILLIAM P. RAE.

The expert real estate appraiser is to the prospective investor what the medical expert is to the sick. Anybody can administer nostrums to those who need medical treatment, but it needs the experienced and practiced student to prescribe remedies that will be sure to cure. Anybody who can see, think, and talk can make a guess at the value of a property, but such a guess if followed by the investment of money may mean regrettable losses.

Real estate appraising is not guessing. It is scientific valuing. In fixing valuations prices paid at private sale and at auction for nearby properties are of great consequence, but they provide the appraiser with only one angle from which to view the problem. The maximum improvement possible for a plot has to be considered, and the amount of income that can be derived from that improvement is a decided factor in the final valuation.

But in these times of changing trade centres, appraisers must go even beyond this to consider what relation a property bears to traffic, what influences exist for increasing or decreasing values, what influence nearby properties would have if their characters should change, and finally what part of these prospects has already been discounted and what part is still to be accounted for.

To do all this is not the work of a novice. In the first place, the most complete records are necessary, but more important still is the experience that comes from many years of association with real property in all parts of the city and suburbs through buying and selling as auctioneer and broker. In this latter dual capacity one is not only a salesman for a customer but an adviser as well.

The auctioneer, if he is advising the purchase of property for subsequent sale at auction, must be able to figure values so closely that no error possibly can be made; he must know within a few dollars the price that can be realized on every lot of a vacant tract. The actual selling at auction is, perhaps, the most easily accomplished, all the real work of such a sale, consisting of properly advertising a property to get a following and of putting it before prospective bidders in the most favorable light.

This is the day of specialists. Every business and every profession has its leaders who have devoted their time and mentality to perfecting themselves in one special branch. Whatever it is these men aim to do requires many years of application and study. So with the auctioneer and appraiser. That he is able to guide his customers in the paths of good fortune is a result of experience gained through having solved many knotty real estate problems.

MARINER'S HARBOR BUILDING

Important Industrial Development Planned by Bradley Co.

One of the most important industrial operations planned for Staten Island in some time is about to be started by the Bradley Improvement Company on its thirty-acre property at Mariner's Harbor, with a 300-foot frontage on Richmond Terrace. Plans have been prepared to erect on this entire frontage a fine building, with seventeen stores and apartments on the upper floors. In the rear, the land will be filled in and graded, affording an excellent site for industrial plants.

On the water front a dock, three hundred feet in length, will be built, leaving an ample entrance to the basin, which will extend from the dock to the land and be utilized for storage of shipping.

This deep water frontage is reached by a broad channel, twenty-five feet in depth, running from the outer bay, so that ocean steamers can be easily accommodated.

John F. Scott has rented for the Cedarhurst Estates a house on Sealy Lane, Cedarhurst, L. I., to Harold F. Hadden, Jr.

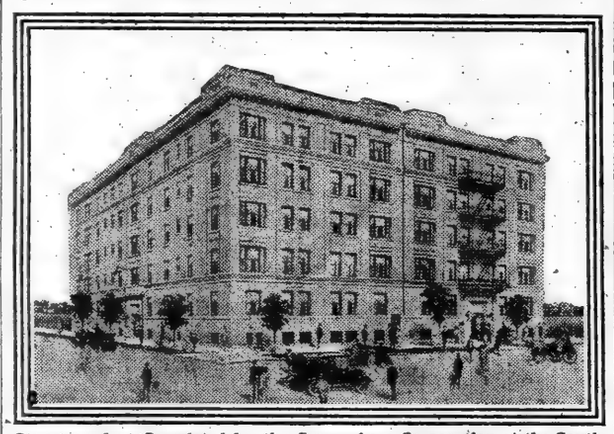
QUEENS BOROUGH APARTMENT HOUSE



Structure Just Completed by the Queensboro Corporation at the Southwest Corner of Hayes Avenue and Twenty-fifth Street.

MORRIS ESTATE SALE.

Many Properties to be Disposed Of in Four Boroughs.

Manhattan, the Bronx, Brooklyn, and Queens, four of the boroughs of the city, are represented in the announcement of an absolute sale at auction (to the highest bidder without reserve or protection) to be conducted by J. Clarence Davies and Joseph P. Day, for the estate of Arthur R. Morris and others, at the Exchange Salesroom on Tuesday, May 11, at 12 o'clock noon.

Both because of the wide area over which the holdings of the Morris estate spread and because of the variety of their description, this sale is unusual. The offering includes business buildings and apartment houses in Manhattan, a unique Subway station corner at a transit centre in the Bronx, and also an entire square block of sixty-three lots opposite Franz Siegel Park and in a new rapid transit zone in the same borough.

A block of corner business buildings located near the heart of the Myrtle Avenue retail shopping district in Brooklyn, a group of eighteen attractive private dwellings located in the same borough, and only fourteen minutes from the City Hall, Manhattan, to be sold separately. Also two frame houses in Long Island City, in an improving neighborhood only six blocks' distant from Queensboro Plaza and within one block of a new dual system rapid transit station.

Had Mr. Morris been granted the privilege of studying the city's rapid transit maps for the future, long before the new lines had even been projected, he could hardly have scented his investments with a better eye to future betterments.

Commercial Leases.

J. Arthur Fischer has leased for Charles J. Follmer the five-story building at 122 West Forty-third Street to William P. Wilson.

Pease & Elliman have leased for Mrs. Mary S. Little to a client the five-story apartment house at 525 and 527 West 133d Street.

Thomas Ford has leased for J. B. Dahigren to the S. W. E. Electric Company the store at 144 East Thirty-fourth Street, and for Kempner Brothers to Elsie Catzin the store at 189 Third Avenue.

The Berlin Renting Agency has leased for Charles M. Rosenthal and the estate of I. M. Bernstein the building at 622 to 630 West 158th Street, adjoining the New York Central tracks, for a term of years.

Arthur E. Wood has leased the store at 304 and 306 West 133d Street, for the Empire City Savings Bank, to the Independent Mortor Cycle Club.

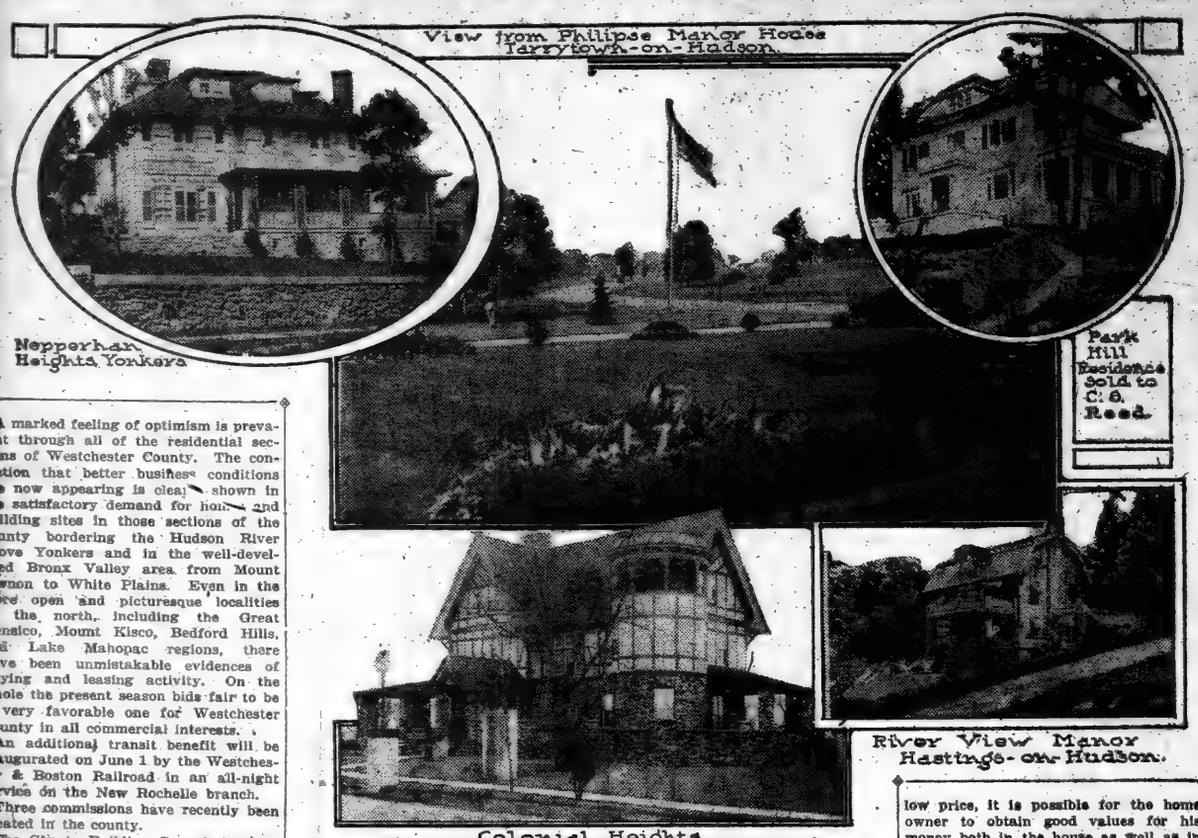
CHEERFUL CONDITIONS IN WESTCHESTER
NEW RESIDENTS SEEKING CHOICE SITES



A marked feeling of optimism is prevalent through all of the residential sections of Westchester County. The conviction that better business conditions are now appearing is clearly shown in the satisfactory demand for homes and building sites in those sections of the county bordering the Hudson River above Yonkers and in the well-developed Bronx Valley area from Mount Vernon to White Plains. Even in the more open and picturesque localities to the north, including the Great Kensico, Mount Kisco, Bedford Hills, and Lake Mahopac regions, there have been unmistakable evidences of buying and leasing activity. On the whole the present season bids fair to be a very favorable one for Westchester County in all commercial interests.

An additional transit benefit will be inaugurated on June 1 by the Westchester & Boston Railroad in an all-night service on the New Rochelle branch.

Three commissions have recently been created in the county.

The County Building Commission will superintend the construction of new county buildings. It consists of Robert S. Brewster of Mount Kisco, Arthur W. Lawrence of Bronxville, and George E. Mertz of Port Chester.

The County Planning Commission, recently authorized by legislation but not as yet appointed by the Supervisors, will prepare a plan to guide the future development of the county in such matters as trunk line highways, water supply, drainage systems, and parkways.

The County Survey, or County Government Commission, consists of Henry R. Barrett of White Plains, Harry E. Colwell of New Rochelle, Clifford E. Couch of Peekskill, Edwin W. Fiske of Mount Vernon, Daniel P. Hays of Pleasantville, J. Mayhew Wainwright of Rye, and William J. Wallin of Yonkers. This commission will investigate the method of administering the affairs of the county with the idea of recommending a new form of government and to consider the amendments necessary through the Constitutional Convention.

A favorable view of the mortgage market is presented by Eugene Van Fossen of Yonkers and Hastings, who states that in that section there is more mortgage money available for building operations than has been the case in the past three years, and, with building materials at a low price, it is possible for the home owner to obtain good values for his money both in the house as well as in the land.

The leasing market in and around White Plains has been exceptionally brisk this season. In the well-built-up Scarsdale, Greenacres, Gedney Farm, Bronxville, and Colonial Heights localities the demand for choice plots for early improvement has been above the average of the past year for the same period and similar conditions exist in the Park Hill, Nepperhan Heights, and other residential localities of Yonkers, as well as further north through Dobbs Ferry, Hastings, Tarrytown, and Philipse Manor.

THE COST OF LIVING IN WESTCHESTER COUNTY

By L. WARD PRINCE,
Secretary of the Robert E. Farley Organization.

Every man owes it to himself and his family to save at least 20 per cent. of his annual income. A man who makes $2,000 a year ought to save $400, a man who makes $4,000 a year should save $800, and the man who makes $8,000 a year should save $1,400.

In order to get at facts as to the cost of living in the Westchester County suburbs, I talked to a number of my friends, and I take one case as being typical of all others. This man has worked out his living problem, with the help of his wife, systematically. There are two adults in the family, besides a child and two servants.

He recently purchased from one of our companies a house costing $15,000. He paid $3,000 in cash, leaving a first mortgage of $10,000 and a second mortgage of $2,000.

Each week this man sets aside in a special fund enough to cover interest, taxes, and insurance on his house. This amounts to $18, which is made up as follows: 5½ per cent. interest on $10,000 and 6 per cent. interest on $2,000, about $150 per year taxes, and $15 insurance. Then he turns over to his wife each week the sum of $70, which is applied as follows:

Table expenses, including meats, vegetables, groceries, &c.	$26.00
Coal, including about ten tons for the furnace and six tons for the range, at $6.50 a ton	2.00
Two servants at $24 each per month	11.00
Ice	1.00
Electric current	1.00
Gas	1.00
Drugs, &c.	1.00
Hardware and incidental supplies	2.00
	$45.00
Allowance for child's clothes	$2.00
Wife's allowance	15.00
Water	.50
Club dues, (tennis, golf)	1.00
Planting, flowers, &c.	2.00
Incidentals	2.00
Commutation ticket at $8.10 per month, including two family fifty-ride tickets which cost $18.40 each	2.50
	$70.00

Then he estimates his incidental daily expenses, including his own clothes, at $10 per week; he further estimates that his expenses for amusements, entertaining, &c., will average another $10 per week, making a total of $108 per week, or a grand total for the year of approximately $6,000. This man's annual income is $8,000 per year, so that he is able to set aside a fund of approximately 18 per cent., or $1,400 a year.

Before this man moved to the country, he was living in an apartment of seven rooms in New York City that cost him $2,000 a year. For a period of five years, prior to his moving to the country, he had not been able to save a penny. He has now been living in the country a little over three years, and has set aside over $4,000.

I have talked with other men whose incomes are half of this amount, namely, $4,000, and I find that they are able to save proportionately the same amount. Another thing to be considered is, that this man's $15,000 home gives him a great deal more for his money than he got from his $2,000-a-year flat. He has a house of ten rooms, with three baths, against seven rooms and two baths in the city, not to speak of the charming lawn, pure air, and country club facilities.

Many people hesitate about going to the country, on the ground that they are afraid of the expense of maintaining a suburban establishment, but any man can sit down with a pad and pencil and tell almost to a certainty how much he will expend during the year. It is the incidental items that amount up to such big figures. The amusements that must be carried on in the city to enjoy life to its fullest cease to be a necessity when one lives in the country. Green grass, flowers, outdoor living, and athletics at the Country Clubs take the place of the theatre and the shopping crey.

One man told me that he was able to cut off an annual doctor's bill of nearly $500 by moving to the country! We notice also that a man who lives in the city is compelled to figure on 10 per cent. of his annual income being spent for a Summer vacation for himself and his family. This item is in most cases eliminated with suburbanites, as most of them are willing to live in their country homes the year around.

In going into details of this kind it must, of course, always be borne in mind that people's tastes differ, and that a set of figures like those mentioned must necessarily vary with varying inclinations, but I know from experience, as well as a decade's study, that a man may live well at Greenacres, Gedney Farm, Philipse Manor, or in fact in all of the other high-class residential sections of Westchester County on the figures I have given here.

In fact, these allowances are, in some cases, over-estimated, and I believe the total for high-class living could be cut down to $4,500 without much difficulty. In some parts of Scarsdale Estates and Philipse Manor, the cost of buying the home may be cut down as low as $7,500; and at Nepperhan Heights, down to $4,500. Also the cost of living could be reduced to a matter of $40 or $50 per week, and still the family could live in cultured, refined surroundings, with practically all of the advantages that the country affords.

It cannot be too strongly urged, in behalf of prudence and foresight, it is a person's duty to spend less than he makes, by at least 20 per cent., and it is a duty, especially if one have a family of growing children, to see that the child has not only all the present advantages that his income can buy, but also, an assured future.

It is an uncontroverted fact that your money will buy more for you, in health and happiness, in the country, than it will in the city, and if, in addition to this tremendous asset, the actual living expenses are less, surely it is wise to live in the open air and rustic surroundings of a suburb.

ADVISORY COUNCIL OF REALTY INTERESTS

Work Accomplished During the Last Six Months at State and National Capitals.

LEGISLATION IS WATCHED

A Campaign of Education Being Conducted Among Both the Landlord and Tenant.

By CYRUS C. MILLER.

Chairman Executive Committee of the Advisory Council of Real Estate Interests.

The lack of co-ordination and harmony among real estate interests has always elicited criticism from property owners, as well as from those civic and industrial organizations in the city which are interested in the proper development of real estate. There are approximately 150 taxpayers' organizations, which are more or less local, and in the nature of neighborhood associations; but the vast number of property owners, close to 150,000, are not represented in either these small associations or in the larger organizations.

It was with the view in mind of encouraging and effecting co-operation among these various associations, and simultaneously to represent the property interests of the city as a whole, that the Advisory Council of Real Estate Interests was conceived and brought into existence. Its purpose is thus to primarily bring about harmony among the various conflicting endeavors of these associations, and by conservative, rational and sound advice, direct their efforts along lines of enterprise which will be conducive to the best interests of real estate, as well as of the city itself.

In order that the council might be as fully representative as possible, a series of meetings were held, which were attended by prominent real estate owners and brokers and by officers of the various financial institutions that have their funds invested in real estate. The outcome of these meetings was the selection of the following gentlemen to act upon this Advisory Council:

Thomas M. Mulry, President of the Emigrants' Industrial Savings Bank, and representing the savings institutions of the city on the Council, was elected Chairman. Charles A. Peabody, President of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, was selected to represent the insurance companies upon the Council, and Clarence H. Kelsey, President of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company, the title companies, with Willard V. King, President of the Columbia Trust Company, representing the trust companies. All financial institutions of this character are heavily interested in real estate, either as direct lenders on mortgages or as Trustees for large estates. Cyrus C. Miller, former President of the Bronx, is Chairman of the Executive Committee, which consists of Adolph Bloch, who represents the United Real Estate Owners' Associations; Laurence M. D. McGuire, who represents the Real Estate Board; Clarence H. Kelsey, and Alfred E. Marling, President of Horace S. Ely & Co., who represents the Allied Real Estate Interests. Other members of the council are William J. Amend, of the firm of Amend & Amend; Albert G. Milbank, of the firm of Masten & Nichols, representing large holdings of German and British capital invested in New York City real estate: each of the boroughs is represented, Brooklyn having two members in Edward C. Blum, President of Abraham & Straus, and Frederic B. Pratt, Secretary of Pratt Institute; Hon. Ernest Hall, ex-Supreme Court Judge, represents the Bronx; Hon. G. Howland Leavitt, Superintendent of the Bureau of Highways, represents Queens, and J. G. Timolat, President of the Oakland Chemical Works, represents Richmond.

The council meets every fourth Wednesday of each month, and the Executive Committee meets every Friday afternoon. In addition to the members of the council there are various sub-committees which have been formed, the principal ones being the Board of Counsel, consisting of Hon. Morgan J. O'Brien, Chairman, and Messrs. Edmund L. Baylies, William P. Burr, Frederic R. Coudert, Albert de Roode, Abram I. Elkus, William B. Allison, William M. Ivins, Newell Martin, William J. Moran, Joseph M. Proskauer, Lawson Purdy, Alfred C. Reeves, Noah C. Rogers, Adolph T. Sieker, and William R. Willcox; the Law Committee, consisting of Messrs. Walter Lindner, Chairman; Everett V. Abbot, Cyril H. Burdett, Henry R. Chittick, Julius Henry Cohen, John J. Kuhn, Louis Franklin Levy, Harold M. Phillips, John M. Stoddard, and Seth Sprague Terry, and the Advisory Staff of experts, consisting of Messrs. Henry W. Hodge, Chairman; Otto M. Eidlitz, Julius Franke, Burt L. Fenner, James A. Henderson, Louis J. Horowitz, John P. Leo, Charles E. Knox, Daniel E. Moran, Frank A. Pattison, William Barclay Parsons, Amos L. Schaeffer, and Evarts Tracy.

Since its existence the council has been represented through its various committees at Washington and at Albany, and has carefully followed legislation at both State and national capitals. In this way it has been possible for the council to be in a position to relieve real estate of the war tax proposed at Washington, which was levied on practically every form of bonded indebtedness except mortgages and equities of redemption, while the Treasury Department has modified its decision under the provisions of the Income Tax law so as to permit deductions of interest on mortgage indebtedness from the returns required by this department under this law.

The Law Committee of the council has met each Wednesday during the legislative session at Albany and has taken up various bills that have been introduced into the Legislature, opposing those bills which would be detrimental to property owners, and working for the passage of those bills which would be beneficial.

The deliberations of this committee are published each week, and mailed regularly to the 150 taxpayers' associations, so that they are all apprised of what action is being taken at Albany in their interests. Ordinances of the new Building Code and the Rules and Regulations of the Industrial Board are carefully observed by the Building Code Committee and Industrial Code Committee of the council, both of which committees consist of experts from its advisory staff, and which are headed by Henry W. Hodge and Julius Franke, respectively. Other subjects which are occupying the attention of the council are the three-family house question, the question of negro occupancy of property, port and harbor developments as they affect appreciation of real estate values, restrictive covenants, consolidation of building inspection departments, mandatory legislation, and a large variety of other subjects which are of vital concern to real estate.

The work of the council has been accorded very favorable recognition by both city and State authorities, in that the members of the council of its various sub-committees, have been appointed to commissions and committees having to do with such subjects as the Labor law, the heights of buildings, zoning of the city, new sources of revenue, &c.

If the comprehensive energies now displayed by the various real estate associations and taxpayers' organizations in a praiseworthy effort to mitigate oppressive conditions that have been prevalent for the last few years can be directed and utilized by the council to procure needed reforms, the existence of the council will be amply justified. With a dominant central force earnestly striving to eliminate the duplication of effort on the part of these taxpayers' associations, and thus quietly confining their efforts to fields that in no wise conflict, there should be produced within a short period of time that harmonious and effective action which is now of paramount importance. It will also tend to strengthen all of these associations in their respective fields. The Advisory Council has thus made an earnest effort to co-operate with various city and State departments and to secure fair consideration of the interests of property owners and just treatment, and this policy of co-operation and co-ordination would appear to be working out satisfactorily and approaching the long-desired goal.

The question has often arisen as to whether the best results cannot be obtained by the amalgamation or unification of all the various real estate associations, so that there shall be one central efficient organization for real estate, like the Merchants' Association of the Chamber of Commerce. After serious reflection, it seems almost impossible to merge all of the various local associations, because of their purely local interests. The great majority of these taxpayers' associations are so constituted, therefore, that it is doubtful whether they would be willing to unite with a central organization.

As independent units they prefer to remain, while many of them could not afford to be handicapped by the additional expense of contributing to a central association. However, it would be very practicable for them all to co-operate upon general policies affecting the welfare of real estate and of the city, simultaneously retaining their identity as local bodies.

What they all want and need is to have the best legal and technical advice to be obtained in the city, given to them regularly and upon all matters that they may be considering. As executive bodies they are willing to do active work, provided that whatever action they may take is sound and reinforced by substantial facts. A most valuable campaign of education upon all real estate questions, accompanied with the advice of well-known authorities, would thus accomplish much good in gradually federating these various associations, and within a short time would produce a thorough spirit of co-operation among them, along constructive lines.

The Advisory Council is in a position to assist these associations, both large and small, and simultaneously to co-ordinate their activities. A sane, healthy, gradual growth along these lines, with reports and investigations by the council based on careful study, should be of lasting value to real estate.

The best results are those obtained with care and moderation in all things, for it is better to be slow but sure than to become winded by endeavoring to do too much in a hasty and an inexperienced manner. Real estate needs more policies that are evolved because they will be of permanent and lasting value, and fewer temporary remedies devised purely to meet the obligations and necessities of the moment. No more salutary program could be undertaken by the Advisory Council than that upon which it has been launched, to conduct an intelligent and comprehensive campaign of education among both property owners and tenants.

The tenants must be enlisted in the same cause as their landlords. The interests of the landlord must likewise affect his tenant. The feeling harbored by the tenant to annihilate the landlord must be displaced by a more sincere spirit of co-operation and mutual interest. United, they can withstand many of the stringent obligations that may be imposed upon them, while divided both will suffer, as they have in the past. In this respect the value and potency of these various associations of taxpayers is apparent.

They are today playing, and in the future will play, a principal part in creating public sentiment which ultimately determines the administrative policies of both city and State. Consequently, any movement which tends toward efficiency could not afford to destroy the intrinsic strength of these local associations, which must be encouraged to grow and retain their independence as individual entities.

NEW QUEENS TRANSIT LINES

Present Status of the Work on Various Contracts.

A statement has been prepared by Walter I. Willis, Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of the Borough of Queens, showing the status on April 1 of the various contracts which have been let by the Public Service Commission for the construction of rapid transit work in Queens Borough. GRADE CROSSINGS.

Protest Against the Closing of Long Island City Streets.

Engineers of the Public Service Commission and nearly 100 property owners conferred at the offices of William Richensteen, Jackson Avenue, Long Island City, last week, on the plan to eliminate the grade crossings of the Long Island Railroad at Vernon, East, and Borden Avenues and Third Street.

Vigorous opposition to the plan to close Vernon and East Avenues was expressed by the property owners. The plan suggested by the engineers of the Public Service Commission provides for the closing of these streets, with an inclined roadway on First Street, from East Avenue to the Vernon Avenue bridge. The North Shore tracks over Borden Avenue and Third Street would be elevated.

The general feeling of the property owners was that the railroad tracks should be elevated also over Vernon and East Avenues. Several speakers also suggested that plans be considered for the depression of the tracks, although the proximity to Newtown Creek would make this a costly matter.

In order further to represent the interests of the property owners, it was finally decided to appoint a special commit-[illegible]

NEW YORK STATE REALTY CAMPAIGN

Being Waged by Members of Reorganized State Association.

NEW COMMITTEES AT WORK

Plan of Action Includes Legislative Bureau at Albany to Watch Real Estate Legislation.

By M. MORGENTHAU, Jr.,

President of the Real Estate Association of the State of New York.

It is now over six months since the New York City convention of the Real Estate Association of the State of New York made this organization a by-word in New York City. This convention brought together for the first time the best real estate men from all sections of the State and the best New York City developers, operators, and brokers.

They met in friendly intercourse, listened to messages from the Mayor and other city officials, discussed important matters regarding their business, and ended up with a banquet which bubbled over with good-will and at which they pledged one another to wipe out the boundary between the city and the rest of the State as far as the real estate interests are concerned.

The Real Estate Association of the State of New York was started some ten years ago in Syracuse and has been growing slowly but steadily ever since. Local real estate organizations are a matter of rather recent development, and the State Real Estate Association has been instrumental in assisting the formation of such local associations all over the State. In order to bring these local associations into the closest possible touch with the State organization, the Executive Committee elected at the last convention recently proposed amendments to the constitution of the State Association which have recently been adopted.

The Rochester Real Estate Association is the first local board to apply for affiliation, and it is hoped that every local real estate organization in the State will now join. The State Association will thus become a clearing house for the legislative activities of the real estate men of all parts of the State, and will harmonize views throughout the State on important matters. It is hoped in the near future to establish a permanent Legislative Bureau in Albany.

At the beginning of the term of office of the present officers and Executive Committee of the association last Fall a platform for the year's work was discussed and laid down. It was recognized that there were three prime matters affecting real estate which required a good deal of attention.

1. Undue and unnecessary Governmental interference. This has manifested itself in conflicting orders issued by different departments of the State and localities, needless interference by certain of these departments and duplication in the matter of building inspections in most of the large cities of the State.

2. Unequal and unfair taxation. This has come about, first, through antiquated tax laws distributing the burdens most unequally and placing an entirely unfair proportion on real property and practically no burden at all on personal property. With reference to the taxation of real property considerable unfairness was found to prevail, owing to lack of centralization in the administration of our tax laws and, therefore, entire lack of supervision of local assessors who in many cases were found to be absolutely unqualified for their work.

3. Inefficient methods of financing real estate and building operations. This was found to be due in part to lack of intelligent co-operation, in part to ignorance and a tendency on the part of those concerned with financing real estate operations not to try anything new and novel here in New York. Finally, it was found that certain legal difficulties would have to be taken care of by legislation.

All of these matters have received most careful and thorough consideration by the Executive Committee of the Real Estate Association of the State of New York. Progress in matters such as these is always extremely slow, and it is no doubt wise that it should be. Quick action might result in more harm than good.

We can, however, point to one or two achievements which are directly and indirectly due to our efforts. Thus the problem of duplication and conflict of State and local departments concerned with real estate has been given considerable study and in some parts of the State is well on the way to reform in the right direction.

In the matter of taxation we have made most substantial progress, due very largely to the efforts of officers and members of our association. A new tax commission bill has been enacted and new Tax Commissioners have been appointed with tremendously increased powers, giving them an opportunity to equalize the taxation of real property throughout the State.

The real estate men in all sections of the State have pledged their support to this new commission, and it will not be the fault of the real estate men if steady progress is not made in this matter of equalization.

The problem of equalizing taxation between real and personal property has been taken up with splendid enthusiasm, and two bills, one for taxing tangible personal property at a rate of ½ per cent. without exemption for debts, and another for taxing securities or intangible personal property at a rate of 1-5 per cent. per annum without deduction for debts, were introduced in both houses of the Legislature.

These bills were not prepared or fathered by the real estate association, but several of the members gave untiringly of their time and resources to the work of the citizens' committees which had these matters in hand. It was not to be expected that legislation of such an important character could be put through in a few weeks, but the tremendous support which these measures received from bankers, merchants, economists, tax experts, and others shows that the day is not far distant when these reforms will be adopted. As a matter of fact the work is now under way for organizing the citizens' committee on a permanent basis in order that this taxation work may go forward.

With reference to improving the methods of financing real estate and building operations it was soon discovered that this matter would have to be one of slow development. An educational campaign is being conducted and the views of authorities in all sections of the country are being obtained. It is probable that something tangible will develop as a result of this in the near future. In all probability this will take the form of the introduction of long-term mortgages with annual payments, and the issuance of first mortgage bonds based on these long-time mortgages.

The committee on regulation of brokerage has approved the form of a bill for registering real estate brokers and this was introduced at the last session of the Legislature. The matter will come up for discussion in the local boards through the State and an effort will be made to harmonize the views of all. A committee on Erie Canal has been obtaining valuable data with reference to the old canal bed in order that intelligent action regarding the disposal of the State property may be had at the proper time. A committee on ethics has drawn a precise code of ethics in the form of ten commandments, and with the golden rule as a guiding basis, and so the list could be continued if time permitted.

The result of all this activity has been a tremendous growth in the membership and influence of the association. Its membership has very nearly doubled since the recent convention, and is growing at the rate of fifty or sixty new members per month. This shows that the association is meeting a need and meeting it in the right way. Properly guided, the association is in a position to be of tremendous service not only to the real estate community, but [illegible] and of the State officials in a way no local organization can ever expect to do.

The organization is young, and no doubt has many faults of youth. It may be trying to do too much and it certainly is suffering from growing pains and an appetite incommensurate with its pocket, but with the support which has come to it during the last few months, there can be no question but that its future is assured.

A SUBWAY PROBLEM.

Entrances on William and Nassau Streets Will Cause Congestion.

A problem that is giving much concern to the Public Service Commission, Borough President Marks, and other city authorities, and which must be solved at a very early date, is the placing and arrangement of the entrances for the William and Nassau Street subway lines. That it must be solved at once, particularly as far as William Street is concerned, is admitted on all sides.

The construction of the William Street subway is progressing rapidly and tentative locations for the stations have been made. It is for this reason that Maurice Deutsch, a consulting engineer retained by over 50 per cent. of property owners along William Street, south of Beekman, has called attention to the difficult problem which confronts the Public Service Commission and Borough President Marks in regard to the station entrances and exits.

That the matter is an important one to property owners and the public, as well as to the city and the Interborough Rapid Transit Company, operators of the William Street subway, is indicated by the fact that the Merchants' Association and the Real Estate Board of New York are both investigating the subject.

A recent report made by Mr. Deutsch and submitted to the Real Estate Board was immediately referred to the Railroad and Transportation Committee, consisting of E. C. Cammann, Chairman, A. L. Dean, Sarsfield Doyle, William E. Harmon, Frank R. Houghton, Cyrus C. Miller, and Carlisle Norwood.

Mr. Deutsch calls attention to the fact that William and Nassau Streets are among the narrowest streets downtown, with great traffic. William Street is only forty feet in width from building to building, the roadbed being about twenty feet wide, and the sidewalks only nine to ten feet wide. The subway plans call for stations on William Street at Fulton and Wall.

There are to be subway entrances on William Street just north and south of Fulton, the latter entrance about in the center of the block between Fulton and John Streets. Entrances on the north and south side of Fulton Street, just east of William, are also indicated.

At the Wall Street station there will be entrances on Pine and Wall Streets just east or west of William. All these entrances are to be between 6 feet and 6 feet 6 inches in width, which will reduce the sidewalk space available at these points to three or four feet and cause frightful congestion.

Mr. Deutsch also points out that the stairways leading to these stations will be only five feet in width and the railings will still further reduce the clearance space available to reach the platforms to about four feet. Such an arrangement of entrances is certain to not only cause a tremendous congestion on the sidewalk and interfere with street traffic, but will also prove inadequate to reach the station platforms.

The William Street subway is one of the most important subways, reaching not only the outlying districts in Brooklyn, but also serving upper Manhattan. In addition to this it is the most easterly of the four downtown subways, present and proposed, and for this reason will directly serve the large district lying east of William Street. It is certain to carry enormous crowds morning and night, and Mr. Deutsch points out that in case of panic or other trouble these narrow stairways would be so blocked and crowded that serious results would be certain to ensue.

It is a well known fact that the present entrances to the Broadway subway at Wall, John, and Fulton Streets are inadequate, and because of the narrow stairs leading to the platforms crowds are jostled together morning and evening, and not infrequently women have dresses torn or are banged and knocked about by others going in the opposite direction with suit cases, bags, &c.

Mr. Deutsch states that if the present plans carry the conditions on William Street will be infinitely worse, particularly at the Fulton Street station, because the narrowness of the street and sub-surface conditions will not permit at this point any station entrances on the westerly side of the street, and all the traffic at this busy point must be carried through one set of entrances on the easterly side of the street. Both uptown and downtown traffic on the William Street subway will be handled at Fulton Street from stations on one side of the street only.

With approximately a total of 7,000 people passing on both sides of William Street in a given hour morning and night, the confusion and congestion that will result is self-apparent. It will be augmented by reason of the narrow sidewalks and because this station will be used for Brooklyn and upper Manhattan traffic.

Mr. Deutsch has suggested to the Merchants' Association and the Real Estate Board the advisability of having an arcade street created, handling the vehicle traffic on the present roadbed and the upper level for those using the subway and for pedestrians. He has also called the attention of the authorities to the possibility of taking all traffic off William Street, south of Beekman, and using the present roadbed as sidewalk space, with subway entrances ten feet wide at convenient points in what is now the middle of the street.

Mr. Deutsch states in favor of this plan that an entrance at least ten feet wide is necessary to handle the traffic at Fulton and Wall Streets, and furthermore that practically all property on William Street, particularly south of John, is given over to office purposes, and no one would be greatly inconvenienced by diverting the vehicle traffic from this street. Certain regulations would, of course, be made so that supplies, &c., for buildings could be delivered during certain hours, and for fire protection, &c.

It is certain that Nassau Street owners will watch the developments on William Street with keen interest. Within the past few years all owners on both William and Nassau, as well as on side streets, such as Pine and Fulton, were compelled to remove all encroachments beyond the building line at an expense of several hundred thousand dollars at least. None were exempted. All had to comply with Borough President McAneny's order.

Fronts of buildings were chopped off, show windows were cut down, railings removed, and even signs were not permitted to protrude within ten feet of the sidewalk. Many of these encumbrances were of a few feet only, nevertheless they had to be removed. Now the Public Service Commission and the city authorities propose to put encumbrances six feet six inches wide on ten-foot sidewalks. Such an idea seems almost impossible to those who have only recently been compelled to remove encroachments of the most trivial nature.

Mr. Deutsch is confident, however, that some solution will be found, as these six feet six-inch entrances are admittedly inadequate to handle the subway traffic, and with the Merchants' Association and the Real Estate Board co-operating with Borough President Marks and the Public Service Commission some plan should speedily be devised to handle the situation, because, to be properly settled, it must be decided at once, as Smith, Hauser & Locker and Mr. MacIsaac, the contractors, are making exceptional progress in this subway work. Mr. Deutsch is working with the Public Service Commission on the lines indicated above, and is receiving every assistance from its engineering department. In fact the attitude of the Public Service Commission is to do everything in its power to relieve an admittedly serious situation. All agree something must be done.

One of the bright features of the real estate market during the period of general depression has been the apartment house situation not only in Manhattan but to a very satisfactory extent in all the other boroughs. Since Jan. 1 the apartment house activity has been especially pronounced and the unexpected success of several of the newer and more expensive houses on Park Avenue, as well as on West End Avenue, leading to some large investment purchases, has naturally led to a number of new operations of more than average magnitude.

The upbuilding of Park Avenue as a choice apartment house thoroughfare has by no means reached its limit, and as a result of several big deals there by operators since the first of the year new buildings, costing in the aggregate several millions of dollars, will be under way before the close of the season. Among the big transactions for future improvement have been those of Bing & Bing on the northwest corner of Eighty-fourth Street, of Edgar A. Levy on the southwest corner of Eighty-first Street, and Robert W. Goelet's purchases from the New York Central Railroad, giving him possession of the two block fronts on the west side, between Fifty-second and Fifty-fourth Streets.

Mr. Goelet completed last Fall one of the fine houses in that neighborhood, on the southwest corner of Fifty-fifth Street. The big Montana, covering the block front on the east side between Fifty-second and Fifty-third Streets, was finished about two years ago and others that have well rented there include the building put up by Samuel A. Herzog on the southeast corner of Fifty-fourth Street. On the northwest corner of the same street is the new Fullerton-Weaver building, which is already eighty per cent. rented.

Among the noteworthy investment deals on the avenue during the present year have been the purchase by William Ziegler, Jr., of the fine structure erected by Edgar A. Levy on the southeast corner of Seventy-second Street, representing nearly $1,600,000, and the sale by the Fullerton-Weaver Company of its new building on the northwest corner of Sixty-sixth Street, about $1,200,000.

On the west side the active localities have been the district below 110th Street and in the upper Washington Heights territory north of 157th Street, especially in the vicinity of Fort Washington Avenue in the lower Sixties, where several six-story houses have been started and the success of former operations has resulted in some satisfactory sales.

West End Avenue, which from the elegance of its apartment structures might be called the Park Avenue of the west side, has figured prominently in the transactions of the year. On the corner of Ninety-seventh Street the Princeton Construction Company has finished a large house, and other corners which have lately been acquired for early improvement are those on the northeast corner of Eightieth Street, the northwest corner of Seventy-fifth Street, the northwest corner of Eighty-ninth Street, and the southwest corner of Eighty-eighth Street.

Among the big investment sales was that of the huge Chatsworth, overlooking the Hudson River, at the foot of Seventy-second Street, lately sold to a syndicate headed by Albert I. Sire. The new twelve-story Brixford apartment, at 138 to 144 West Seventy-ninth Street, was recently purchased by Clarence Payne of California from the builder, Edwin S. Brickner, for about $500,000, and Percival Kuhne, the banker, bought the six-story house at 7 West Ninety-first Street. W. Bourke Cockran also figured among the investors in Manhattan apartment property by acquiring the six-story house on the northwest corner of Fort Washington Avenue and 161st Street, and the sale by Mrs. Lillian B. Hyde of the Eton Hall and Rugby Hall houses at 29 to 35 Claremont Avenue, each held at $300,000, was another important sale.

Some of the upper Broadway blocks have shown considerable activity, and among the improvements are those of Vincent Astor on the block front on the east side between Ninety-second and Ninety-third Streets, and the big house planned for the upper part of the block on the east side between Eighty-eighth and Eighty-ninth Streets, by Jacob Axelrod.

The purchase last week by Mrs. Anne C. Rogers of the two six-story houses covering the westerly block front on Fort Washington Avenue, between 177th and 178th Streets, from Harry Goodstein, was one of the largest deals in that section for some time, and was a clear illustration of the investment confidence in that growing quarter of the city.

DIRECT TAX LEVY IN STATE COUNTIES

Method of Equalizing Realty Assessments Explained by Commissioner Purdy.

HEAVY RATE THIS YEAR

City's Average of State Burden Has Been Almost Twenty Per Cent. Annually Since 1912.

By LAWSON PURDY.

The State of New York is confronted with the largest direct tax since the year 1900; in that year the State tax rate was 1.96 mills; this year it is to be 1.70 mills. A direct tax of this magnitude directs attention forcibly to the manner in which a direct tax is levied and distributed throughout the State.

A direct tax for State purposes has the merit that it does bring more people to consider State expenditures and to take an interest in State Government. There are very few persons, nevertheless, who understand the manner in which a State levy is apportioned among the several counties.

In some counties the assessed value of real estate is less than half the full value. New York and Kings Counties are credited by the State Board of Equalization with an assessment of real estate equal to 91 per cent. of full value. No county is credited with a higher ratio than the Counties of New York and Kings. The largest number of counties are credited with an assessment between 70 and 80 per cent. of full value.

In order that each county may pay its proper share the law provides for a Board of Equalization composed of the three State Tax Commissioners and the Commissioners of the Land Office. It is the duty of the State Board of Equalization to revise the valuations of real estate "by adding or deducting such sum as in its opinion may be just and necessary to produce a just relation between the valuations of real property in the State."

The State Board of Equalization prepares a table based upon the information they obtain by personal visits and otherwise. This table shows the ratio of full value at which real estate is assessed in each county of the State. When this table is approved by the Board of Equalization the assessed valuations are equalized in the following manner: In the first column is set down the assessed value of real estate of each county; in the next column the full value based on the percentage of full value which has been determined.

The average assessment is then determined by dividing the aggregate assessed value by the aggregate full value. In 1913, for example, the average percentage for the whole State was 87.14. Then to the assessed value of each county which is assessed below the average ratio an amount is added sufficient to bring the county assessment to the average ratio. Each county whose real estate is assessed for more than the average receives a reduction of an amount sufficient to bring the assessed value down to the average ratio.

To show the operation of this method in the last three years I have prepared tables showing the City of New York as one unit and the remainder of the State, taken together, as the other unit. The following table shows the assessed value of real estate in the City of New York and the equalized value of real estate in the City of New York for 1912, 1913, and 1914:

Year.	Assessed Value.	Equalized Value.
1913	7,861,809,890	7,540,418,779
1914	8,006,647,861	7,561,076,209

A similar table for the remainder of the State for the same years is as follows:

Year.	Assessed Value.	Equalized Value.
1912	$2,702,661,200	$2,972,392,535
1913	2,822,881,598	3,143,871,400
1914	2,953,613,031	3,399,184,683

On the basis of assessed value of real estate, without equalization, the city had 74 of the aggregate for each of the years 1912, 1913, and 1914 as follows:

1912	74.41 per cent.
1914	73.05 per cent.

From this table it appears at once that the assessed value increased more outside the city during these three years than it did in the city. The increase in the city from 1912 to 1914 was only $48,000,000, whereas the increase outside the city was $250,000,000. The actual share of what the city was called upon to pay to the State for these three years showed a greater reduction in 1914 from the total for 1912 than a comparison of assessed values would indicate; that is because the equalization table was more favorable to the city in 1914 than it was in 1912.

The equalization percentages for the city were the same in all three years, but the average equalization for the remainder of the State shows a marked decline in these three years; the average for the remainder of the State was as follows:

1914	74.55 per cent.

Because of this change in the equalization table the amount deducted from the assessed value of the City of New York and added to the rest of the State, for the three years, was as follows, (using round figures):

1912	$275,000,000
1913	328,000,000
1914	451,000,000

The following table shows the equalized value of real estate in the City of New York and in the remainder of the State for the three years:

Year.	Equalized Value. City of N. Y.	Remainder of State.
1912	$7,589,108,838	$2,972,392,535
1914	7,561,076,209	3,399,184,683

This shows that the basis for the distribution of the tax in the City of New York was less for 1914 than it was for 1912, in spite of the increase in assessed value, whereas for the remainder of the State the increase was much more than the increase in assessed value. On the basis of the equalized real estate the City would have paid of the State tax in each of the years as follows:

Year.	Per Cent.
1913	70.5
1914	69.0

There is no equalization of personal assessments. The law has always been enforced in the City of New York. It has not been enforced in the remainder of the State for a great many years. In a few places Assessors have been diligent, but ordinarily enforcement has been very lax. In round figures, the assessment of personal estate in the City of New York for 1912 was $383,000,000 and in all the rest of the State $101,000,000.

The City of New York then had 77 per cent. of the total. Based on the aggregate equalized real estate assessment and the personal estate, the city pays a little more than on the equalized real estate alone.

	Per Cent.
For 1912	72.10
For 1913	70.80
For 1914	69.10

Since 1911 the State Board of Tax Commissioners has been greatly aided in preparing a proper equalization table by two amendments of the tax law obtained in 1911. That year is memorable for a number of tax law amendments, in great part due to the intelligent cooperation of Governor Dix. Without his aid the amendments would have been impossible.

The two amendments which have helped to bring about a better equalization are, first, a requirement that the Boards of Supervisors of the several counties must prepare an equalization table for the various towns and cities within the county in the same manner as the State Board of Equalization prepares an equalization table for the State. This amendment further provided that the State Board of Tax Commissioners should publish annually these county equalization tables.

The second amendment dealing with equalization required the State Board to equalize its assessments of special franchises with other real property in the tax district. When this change was made in the law all public service corporations were interested in presenting evidence to the State Board tending to prove that other real property in all the tax districts was assessed at a low ratio of full value because they desired to obtain as low an equalized assessment of special franchises as possible; on the other hand, Supervisors were interested in presenting evidence to show that other real property in their tax districts was assessed at a high ratio of full value. Moreover, Boards of Supervisors, being obliged to prepare an equalization table, had to put themselves on record as to the equalization ratio in each tax district of a county.

The results of this salutary legislation have been apparent in the equalization table of 1914. In that table, as has already been shown, the average equalization rate for the counties outside the City of New York was fixed at 74.55 per cent. in 1914, instead of 79.77 per cent. in 1912.

The chief difficulty encountered by Boards of Supervisors and by the State Board in establishing a fair equalization table is the lack of evidence of the true value of real property as compared with its assessed value. The best remedy would be the rule that every deed must contain the actual consideration for the transfer. During the last few months, however, the State has had the advantage of the United States war revenue law compelling the affixing of stamps to deeds to represent the value of the equities.

This provision multiplies by at least ten the number of considerations which can be obtained without personal knowledge of the transaction. The enlarged powers given to the State Board by the legislation of this Winter ought to result in a few years in such an accumulation of evidence of actual value of real estate throughout the State as will enable them to prepare an equalization table that will be as nearly just as practicable until there shall be a complete revision of the law governing local assessments in towns throughout the State.

While a large direct State tax comes as a heavy burden at this time, it brings with it the incidental advantage of increased pressure upon the State Board of Tax Commissioners and local assessors to equalize real estate assessments throughout the State.

THE STATE TAX.

An Unfortunate Blow to the Realty Market at the Present Time.

By LAURENCE M. D. McGUIRE.

President of the Real Estate Board of New York.

The value of New York City's real estate is fixed and determined by its pre-eminent location. Nature destined this wonderful city as the commercial emporium of the Western Hemisphere, located as it is at the confluence of the Hudson and East Rivers, connected by the continent with many bridges and subways, having the most magnificent harbor with but one or two exceptions in the world, it is essentially the great commercial market of the United States.

From time to time disturbing influences may occasion temporary falling off in prices and frequently make it difficult to obtain a ready market for real property. We are now wading through a period of abnormal depression, caused primarily by over-taxation and administrative over-regulation and inspection. This is so unfortunately true that it has created a doubt in minds as to the desirability of real estate as an investment. This doubt, however, is not warranted, as the responsible causes can and soon will be, I believe, corrected.

It is unfortunate that at this time there should come a question of an enormous direct State tax. So much has been said on this subject, some claiming no necessity for it and others that it must be, that it would be useless to attempt any discussion of whether or not the amount claimed to be required for State expenses should be reflected by direct tax to be levied in this year's budget.

Not only are we concerned with the direct State tax, but we have also to reckon with the amount to be charged in the coming year's budget, for public improvements as agreed in the resolution passed by the Board of Estimate at the time of financing the city's notes, which were held in Europe. New York City's share of the direct tax computed on the last available figures will approximately add fifteen points to the tax levy and from five to seven points will be added through charging in one-quarter of the non-sustaining public improvements. This is not altogether a cheerful outlook.

It may be that economies can be effected in the city's administration which will somewhat reduce this estimate, but of one thing we may feel certain; and that is, there will be a substantial increase in the tax rate this coming year.

The city's administration realizes that real estate owners are struggling under a terrible burden and I believe they are entirely sincere in their desire to relieve real estate in every way possible. We have arrived at a time where the strictest economy must be practiced. It is useless to say that property owners can increase rents. There are few, if any, sections in the entire city where rents could be increased. Consequently, the burden is not to be borne by the tenant, but by the owner.

It is regrettable that so much opposition was directed at the so-called Lockwood-Ellenbogen bill, and I believe much of this criticism came through misunderstanding, or misinformation. If this measure is enacted it will, I believe, make for a considerable saving to the city.

We have before been through periods of depression and when all is said and done, they are but temporary. Real estate must always be counted on as a choice asset; there are things in the future which look bright and promising. The completion of the barge canal and of the interior waterworks system and the Panama Canal are all big factors in making New York City commercially great, while the great system of interborough transit will not only develop the boroughs, but will also in time greatly benefit Manhattan, which must remain the central unit of the city.

UNIMPROVED LAND.

Vacant Parcels in Manhattan Assessed at $158,681,830.

The Tax Department reveals some interesting facts on the unimproved property in New York. Thirty-five per cent. of the number of parcels in the city are unimproved for a total assessment of $618,041,300. The least percentage of vacant parcels are, of course, in Manhattan, 7.6 per cent., a decrease from last year of 1 per cent. The vacant parcels in Manhattan aggregate in assessments $158,681,830.

The highest percentage of vacant parcels is in Queens, 60.8, a decrease from last year of 2 per cent. The assessment for the Queens unimproved property reaches $139,412,500.

The total number of vacant parcels in the greater city is 193,077. There are 7,202 vacant parcels in Manhattan and 82,065 in Queens, showing the lowest and the highest number of vacant parcels in the five boroughs.

The facts as to unimproved property in Manhattan reveal significant tendencies in different portions of this borough as to building activity. In the district below Watts and Grand Streets the number of vacant parcels has been reduced since last year from 218 to 165. In the section from Fourteenth Street to Watts and Grand Streets, stretching from the East River to the Hudson, the number of parcels has been reduced from 306 to 269. From 589 to 486 are the reductions in vacant parcels in the district from Fourteenth to Fortieth Streets.

The greatest building activity seems to have occurred in the narrow strip from Fortieth to Ninety-sixth Street and Central Park to the Hudson, evidenced by the reduction from 800 parcels to 450. The section from Fortieth to Ninety-sixth Street bordered on the east by the river has remained at a standstill as far as the reduction of the number of vacant parcels is concerned.

SMALL LOFTS INVESTMENT.

Advantages in Four to Six Story Buildings in William Street Section.

By CHARLES F. NOYES.

My experience of sixteen or seventeen years in active brokerage convinces me that there is less money lost, larger income secured, and a greater profit in proportion to the investment, in the purchase of small loft buildings south of Brooklyn Bridge and east of William Street than from any other type of real estate. The advantages that such property offers the buyer and the stability of the neighborhood are self-evident.

In the first place this district is not given over to any special line of business, as many other sections have been, and cannot therefore be left barren of tenants by suddenly encountering a condition of trade shifting to some other district. Then, again, these small loft buildings are usually rented to substantial tenants at such low figures that new buildings cannot compete as far as the rental is concerned, with the result that the tenants do not move. While there is no wide fluctuation in rents, yet when taxes are increased the rents can generally be increased in the same proportion, and when city and State authorities compel changes in buildings, the increased rental secured from tenants often makes good such expenses.

The small four, five, and six story loft buildings in this east side district can usually be secured at practically ground value, so the purchaser is securing a realty investment which from the underlying economic conditions is as near ideal as possible, as the value is almost entirely in the land and not in the building.

Some large profits have been made by builders who have erected cleverly designed buildings, and skillfully capitalized rents, and then sold their product on a temporary or possibly a permanent investment yield. In many cases, however, the value of the building is greatly out of proportion to the value of the ground upon which it stands, so that while the building steadily depreciates in value the enhancement of the ground does not offset this condition. Then, if the character of the neighborhood changes and tenants vacate, tremendous loss is incurred. No such loss as this is possible where an investor buys primarily for the ground, and incidentally secures a building yielding a good return upon his money.

Irrespective of what others may say to the contrary there is no question that well located New York City realty is the one best asset. Ground here is worth today more than it was yesterday, and its value was greater in 1914 than in the year previous, and Manhattan's realty will continue to increase in value just as rapidly as the city's and the country's prosperity continues to increase. If a careful analysis of the situation is made it is my opinion that the property east of William Street and south of Brooklyn Bridge will be found to have held up much better than in any other section of New York.

Uptown neighborhoods, such as Fifth Avenue south of Thirty-fourth Street, the Pennsylvania section, Fourth Avenue, Broadway in the vicinity of Twenty-third Street, and the residential blocks in the Seventies, have shown marked depreciation in value, the reason being in most cases that new construction was too rapid for the demand. Such a depreciation has not occurred downtown.

My reason for recommending the purchase of Broadway property in the vicinity of Canal Street at proper prices is because buildings can be purchased for less than what I believe is the intrinsic value of the ground. That there has been a sharp cut in Broadway values cannot be denied. Neither can it be asserted that income on Broadway in the vicinity of Canal Street has not been lessened. This was caused by a number of prominent tenants moving uptown and also because of the business reverses of several large firms.

This decrease of income has to a very large extent been confined to the neighborhood south of Spring Street, although during the past year I think rents have been increased there rather than diminished. There are not many vacancies, and with the return of better business conditions Broadway property from City Hall to Twenty-third Street will again come into its own, because there is no question that Broadway at the same rental is a better business street than any side street or many of the new uptown business sections, and the rentals on Broadway are less, if anything, than on the side streets in its vicinity.

Every investment commodity has had its reaction during the past few years. A dispassionate view of the situation should convince the investor that real estate has stood up better than any other type of investment. Railroad securities have depreciated to a greater extent than average New York real estate.

My opinion is that if the man who is accumulating money today will look over the field of investment securities in an unbiased manner and be guided by what has happened during the past five years his choice of investment will be New York city real estate. Should he be looking for the safest investment and is satisfied with a fair speculative profit and conservative income, as against the possibility of a larger profit but more doubtful income, he will select the four, five, and six story loft buildings. If he is willing to purchase small properties worth from $15,000 to $50,000 he cannot afford to overlook the advantages of the downtown district east of William Street, or if he is looking for properties in which to invest from $75,000 to $150,000 he should not disregard the possibilities in the future of Broadway near Canal Street.

Jitney Bus at Great Neck.

A jitney community bus line has been started at Great Neck, L. I. It forms a connecting link between the Great Neck Station village and the old village of Great Neck, also the points known as Steamboat Landing, Elm Point, and Kings Point. Great Neck Village is about a mile and a half from the station and many building operations are now planned there. It is proposed to extend this jitney bus service until it covers the entire peninsula of Great Neck.

Counties Market in 1746.

"Peter De Joncourt, living near Coentjes Market, having left off keeping Tavern, continues to sell out of Doors, by small Measure, good old Madera Wine, Jamaica Rum, French Brandy, Batavia Arrack, and Claret: He also sells by retail sundry sorts of Dry Goods, all Sorts of Spice, Tea, Coffee, Raisins, Sugars, &c. He likewise keeps very good Accommodation for Lodgers.

N. B.—He will sell Coffee by the Half dozen Pound, or any large Quantity at 17 pence half penny per Pound."

Business Advertising in 1748.

Judging from many advertisements in the early New York newspapers, the numbers of buildings were very little used. Business houses were usually designated by a characteristic sign or by the locality to other well-known residents. An example of the latter is the following from The New York Gazette of Dec., 1748. Smith's Fly was at the foot of Maiden Lane.

"Henry Hansen, who lately kept his store next Door to Mr. John Groesbeeck's, is now removed to Capt. Richard Langdon's, in Smith's Fly opposite to Col. De Peyster's, Treasurer, where he now keeps his Store. He has likewise imported in the last Ships from London, a fresh Assortment of European Goods."

$340,000 Y. W. C. A. Building.

Plans by Donn Barber have been filed for the $340,000 home which the Young Women's Christian Association will erect on Lexington Avenue at Fifty-third Street.

It will be the largest women's club building in the city. The structure will contain offices, a large gymnasium on the fifth floor, with a swimming pool; a general clubroom on the sixth floor, an employment bureau, classroom, and library on the seventh floor, and a kitchen and restaurant on the tenth floor. The type of the building will be Colonial, with a facade of brick, limestone, and terra cotta.

About two years ago the association erected a ten-story building on the adjoining Fifty-second Street corner for its national executive offices, and with the completion of the new structure the entire block front will be occupied by buildings used for the work of the Young Women's Christian Association.

To Head $15,000,000 Company.

G. M. P. Murphy of the Assets Realization Company, representing the creditors' committee of the defunct New York Real Estate Security Company, will head the reorganization plan for the management of the $15,000,000 worth of apartment and office building properties, as President of the company, which has been formed to take title to the properties. The transfers of titles will be made on April 30 toward completing the recent auction sale conducted by Joseph P. Day, who struck the realty down for $25,000 above the liens.

ALL WHITE AND SHINY AT THE NEW MARKET

Butcherette, Also All in White, with a Saucy Cap, Ready to Take Meat Orders.

PICK YOUR FISH ON THE FIN

Crowd Out for First Day at Cosmopolitan Garden, Where Household Things Grow.

The woman butcher has made her appearance in common with several other new things in New York's latest attempt to popularize the public market idea. The old Stern Brothers dry goods store, in Twenty-third Street, between Fifth and Sixth Avenues, has had liberal coats of white paint inside and out, stalls and counters have been put in, and the whole building blooms forth as the Cosmopolitan Garden, where the public is invited to come and buy its household supplies.

The moment you enter the main door you see the butcherette—in fact, you see six butcherettes, for there are that many behind the counters of the dealer in meats who has his stall just opposite the entrance. They are attired in white, with saucy white caps, and they wear a feminine idealization of the unbeautiful apron that has satisfied their brother butchers.

Up to this time they have done little more than carry order pads and scribble down what you want, for in the obscure regions of the ice box lurks a he-butcher, always ready to attend to the more sanguinary details of the profession. But there is hope. Yesterday one of the butcherettes actually screwed up her courage to grasp a chicken by the neck, shut her eyes, and walk right up to the chopping-block with it. The manager says he means to give them all lessons with the cleaver and saw shortly, and expects that they will be so proficient in a few weeks that the he-butcher's job will be a sinecure.

One feature of the new public market is that it abolishes the market basket, as far as the public is concerned, with it. The lessees of stalls get free delivery along with their rent, according to one of the officials. Any one buying at the market can have the goods sent home free of charge in New York. In the enormous basement of the old Stern store they have built a delivery department, which is equipped to sort the packages and put them into the wagons with great rapidity. In the basement there is also a refrigerating plant, which sends cold air to the stalls to be turned on and off with a faucet like water or gas, and an incinerating plant, which will dispose of the waste and rubbish.

All day yesterday a crowd streamed through the building. At present only the ground floor and the second are in use. A moving stairway at the rear connects the two. Not more than half the stands were occupied and doing business yesterday, and all over the building workmen were putting on finishing touches, while at some stands the merchants were still installing their goods.

In the morning there had been an opening ceremony at which Borough President Marcus M. Marks made an address.

The property used for the market is owned by the estate of Isaac Stern. Louis and Benjamin Stern supplied the capital, it was said at the office, for altering the building and fitting it for use. The plan is an adaptation of Covent Garden in London, and was designed and carried out by Maurice Bergar, who has been connected with the London prototype of the scheme.

When you enter the building you are struck by the effect of cleanliness and cheerfulness that has been obtained. Everything in view is shining white. The walls on the main floor are of concrete. The stalls have been built in concrete and are covered with white glazed tile, so there is nothing to interfere with quick and thorough cleaning. Yesterday the ensemble presented a contrast to some market scenes, for all the goods were arranged with taste, the clerks were neat and low-voiced, and there was a general air of efficiency.

It is said by those in charge that prices will be 25 per cent. lower than in the average store. This is possible, they say, because the retailers who sell there are relieved by the community management of much overhead charge. The rent includes free refrigeration, free wet and dry storage, free advertising and delivery, besides the ordinary overhead charges, such as light, heat, &c. The rents are from $25 a month for a small stand to $150 for those of larger size and better location; so that some merchants pay less than $1 a day.

The class of commodities that are to be had includes meats, poultry, fish, eggs, butter, vegetables, fruit, general groceries, and housekeeping wares. There are a few demonstration booths, and the list includes candy shops, a bootblack stand, and one which sells paper, twine, and other requisites for those who carry their goods home.

Among developments that are projected, according to the management, are a restaurant and flower garden on the roof. Plans for this are somewhat indefinite as yet, but one of the officials seemed to think they would make a specialty of cooking for you anything that you had bought in the market downstairs. He said there would be large tanks downstairs, in which fish would be kept alive, and that patrons could pick out the fish course of their dinner on the fin, as it were, have it netted, and sent up to the restaurant to be cooked then and there. He also thought you could pick out your roast downstairs, or check a chop, and have it sent up for immediate consumption.

A feature of the arrangement of the stalls is that similar goods are displayed in one section, which makes possible more ready comparison of prices and conditions.

New Homes for 3,000 in Ridgewood.

In the Ridgewood district of Brooklyn, near the Queens Borough line, the G. X. Mathews Company has been engaged in an active building campaign for over a year. Model flats have been erected for 3,000 families. Another factor in the Ridgewood growth was the recent announcement by the Public Service Commission that plans and contracts for the new Eastern District Subway from Fourteenth Street, New York, which is to pass through the Ridgewood section, are now ready.

This line to Fourteenth Street will bring residents of Ridgewood within fifteen minutes of Broadway. The route to Ridgewood will be a tunnel from Fourteenth Street to the Eastern District, then over the old Long Island Railroad tracks to Ridgewood and East New York.

Building at Larchmont Gardens.

At Larchmont Gardens near Larchmont, N. Y., Clifford B. Harmon states that over thirty houses have been built and occupied within the past two or three years, the average price of the houses is $5,000, but there are also several $8,000 bungalows. New homes have recently been completed for Oscar H. Hasson, Herbert J. Mallard, Frank E. Beck, Robert W. Hardie and Mathew Mellor.

A new house is now being built for Mrs. Mary O. Dillon just inside the entrance gates on Myrtle Boulevard.

STEADY GROWTH IN RETAIL CENTRE

Standard of Values Well Maintained Along Fifth Avenue Above Fortieth Street.

IMPROVEMENTS OF A YEAR

Rapid Expansion of Madison Avenue as High-Class Commercial Thoroughfare.

By HARRY STEWART HALL.

During a year of almost unparalleled realty depression in Manhattan certain sections of the city stand out as having upheld a standard of values and a good rental demand. These neighborhoods, to be sure, are not over many, but among them may be mentioned the zone bounded by Fortieth and Fifty-ninth Streets, Madison and Sixth Avenues.

This area is given over almost entirely to occupancy by retail concerns, and its stability is proved by the fact that this class of tenancy deals in extravagances and luxuries—lines that naturally suffer in a time of business depression.

Fifth Avenue, of course, is the leading artery in this section, and it has been the scene of several important transactions. The Rogers Peet Company is already settled in its new building at the northeast corner of Forty-first Street, and the upper floors not occupied by them have rented well. The new building to be occupied by Arnold, Constable & Co., at the southeast corner of Fortieth Street, is well under way, and presumably will be occupied in the Autumn. Both of these transactions are sufficiently large to be of great importance to Fifth Avenue.

Between Forty-second and Fiftieth Streets there is very little for rent, especially as to stores, and a remarkable example of the demand for space on the avenue at fair prices is shown in the building at 557, sold within a few months, and which is now being remodeled. This property was purchased with all of the leases expiring on May 1, and within a few weeks all of the space, with the exception of one floor, has been leased to new tenants. In the upper stories of Fifth Avenue an important lease was that of the six-story building at the southwest corner of Fifty-second Street, taken by Revillon Frères, for many years on West Thirty-fourth Street.

As a matter of fact, Fifth Avenue today is for New York the Rue de la Paix and Bond Street combined in one, and whether times be good, bad, or indifferent, there is always a demand from the high-class retailer for space thereon. With business conditions good such firms make very large profits, and oftentimes such profits serve as an ample surplus against the lean years.

Madison Avenue below Fifty-ninth Street is rapidly becoming a prominent retail street, appealing to high-class firms that cannot stand the rental pressure of Fifth Avenue, and in addition, business is fast creeping in between Fiftieth and Fifty-ninth Streets. The most notable movement in this avenue was the removal of Brooks Brothers to the northwest corner of Forty-fourth Street, which building they will shortly occupy. The proposed removal within a year or so of St. Bartholomew's Church undoubtedly presages the improvement of that valuable corner with a mercantile structure.

Several important structures have been added in the way of office buildings, notably 6, 8, and 10 West Fortieth Street, a twenty-story building, the lower portion of which has been leased to the Munsey interests. A ten-story addition has been made to the Transit Building in Forty-third Street, while at the southwest corner of Vanderbilt Avenue and Forty-fifth Street the twenty-story Vanderbilt Concourse Building is nearing completion, a structure with magnificent unobstructed north light.

In the side streets off both Fifth and Madison Avenues some building has occurred, either by new structures or alterations. These seldom run over six stories in height, and the tenancy is one dealing in wares that delight the heart of women. In Fiftieth Street, opposite the Cathedral, the Hampton Shops, long in West Thirty-second Street, will build and occupy a twelve-story structure. Forty-sixth Street, west of Fifth Avenue, has developed with remarkable rapidity, although almost entirely along the lines of alteration work. There are few vacancies in the block, and the owners and tenants have formed a local association for the betterment of the street, a laudable and beneficial project.

The streets adjacent to Fifth Avenue in the upper Fifties have developed two interesting colonies, one of the highest type of dressmakers, the other consisting of art shops, and in many instances former private dwellings have been occupied for these purposes without alteration of any sort.

In the zone treated herein there have been sales at low prices, of course, and leases have been made at figures lower than those obtained in more prosperous years. There is space for rent, though no great amount of it as compared with the acres of vacancies in other commercial neighborhoods.

One thing seems assured, probably for many years this section will remain the center of the highest class retail trade in the city, located, as it is, adjacent to a great railroad terminal, mammoth hotels, and fine residential streets.

This entire area will no doubt ultimately be given over to business, and already one of the greatest retardants, the Columbia College restriction, has been modified, allowing some forms of business, which is a very important letting down of the bars.

LIFE IN BRUSSELS OUTWARDLY NORMAL

American Traveler Found Stores Open, Restaurants Full, and the People Calm.

POSTERS FOR NEWSPAPERS

Thinks Charges of Atrocities Are Nearly All Untrue—Travel on the North Sea.

The representative of a large American company who recently visited Belgium has written to his home office a letter descriptive of conditions. He says in part:

"I was greatly surprised to find life in Brussels so normal. I had rather expected to see the city completely paralyzed, both socially and economically, but the countrary was quite the case Practically all of the stores were open and, apparently, doing fairly good business. The restaurants in the centre of the city were well patronized, several of the moving picture theatres were open and one of the small theatres had a long advertisement over the door announcing that it would open soon in order to give work to the actors and at the same time increase the funds for the assistance of the poor.

"I had read so many stories regarding the brutal and uncivilized attitude of the German invader that I expected to see all the Belgian civil population walking in the streets and the sidewalks occupied by German soldiers and officers. As a matter of fact, the soldiers and the civilian population were mingling just as freely as they do in Berlin. The private soldier was not very much in evidence, but there were a very large number of officers in the streets. The restaurants along the Boulevard Anspach each evening were full of officers, all of whom conducted themselves very properly and paid cash for their meals. All over the city were posted official notices of the new government covering every matter of muncipal interest. Every night at 9:30 the Government issues an official bulletin giving the latest communications from the General Staff regarding the war news. This bulletin is posted all over the city and takes the place of newspapers, but of course, it only gives the situation from the German standpoint, but as far as I could judge the news contained therein was just as accurate as that reported in the official statements of the Allies.

"In Rotterdam the German and English Consulates both issue bulletins giving a translation in Dutch of the official report of the Commanders in Chief of the German and allied armies. These bulletins are posted side by side in the windows of tobacco shops, restaurants, &c., thereby giving an excellent opportunity to compare the accounts of both sides on the same date. It was very seldom that in reading these two bulletins usually they mentioned different points and were only notable for omissions. Whenever the French announced an advance, the Germans were quite silent regarding that particular point in the day's operations, and when the Germans announced an advance, you could find nothing about it in the French communiqué, so that, by adding the two together—the report of the Germans and that of the Allies—it was possible to form a pretty good idea of what was actually taking place at the front.

Journalistic Difficulty.

"There is only one newspaper published in Brussels, called Le Bruxellois. The information published in this paper and called "news" was laughable. In order to pass the German censor, only articles favorable to the Germans could be published. As these are of course of no interest to the Belgians, the paper, in order to be sold, limits its efforts to the publication of imaginary tales of battles that were never fought and lists of Belgian citizens who are residing 'freely and gladly in Germany.' * * * Occasionally it gives a list of German wounded in some German hospital and a French translation of the official German communiqué.

"Mr. Whitlock has made for himself, among the Belgian population, a wonderful reputation. A man at my hotel told me that if it had not been for Mr. Whitlock the Germans would have carried off all the food in Brussels; he stated that Mr. Whitlock, in the last days of August and beginning of September, every morning, at 6 o'clock, with Mr. Max, the Burgomaster of Brussels, and divided the amount of French products which the Germans were entitled to take, according to international agreements, and purchased the balance for the people of Brussels in the name of the American Government. I do not know that this is I do not know, but there is no doubt that Mr. Whitlock, who, as you know, is a Socialist in practice as well as in thought, has rendered the greatest and most invaluable services to the Belgian people. All day long, from early morning till night, his office is open to them, and he never refuses to converse with them and to give them such assistance as lies in his power. It was a great pleasure to me to note that our American Minister should have stood so bravely at his post and made such a reputation for himself and for the American people.

Garde Civique Registered.

"During my presence in Brussels the Germans called up all of the Belgian militia, or garde civique, who had taken part in the war. There was a great excitement, because most of these militiamen feared that they were going to be shipped back to Germany as prisoners. The American Legation was thronged with the families of these men, asking for help and information. When the Germans got the men together, they simply informed them that they had no intention of sending them back to Germany, provided they delivered up any arms that they might have in their possession and reported to the German authorities at stated intervals. As a matter of fact, I think the Germans were anxious to secure the exact addresses of all of these men, so that, in case of retreat, they might know where to lay their hands on them.

"The King's Palace is used as a Red Cross Hospital and all of the big Government buildings are occupied by the various German military and civil departments. The post and telegraphic offices are, of course, now under German control and accept telegrams and correspondence for Germany only, and nothing for neutral or any other countries. The Belgian postmen of Brussels had refused to distribute the mail for the Germans, with the result that for nearly two months it was only possible to secure correspondence by going to the Post Office. The Germans have now taken the matter in hand and organized a regular mail delivery service.

"In all fairness to the Germans and justice to the Allies, I wish to say that after talking with Belgians and with Germans, I came to the conclusion that the stories of atrocities which have been reported in the Allies' press were not only grossly exaggerated, but that 90 per cent. of them were utterly untrue. All the German soldiers and officers with whom I came in contact and whom I observed seemed exceedingly anxious to establish a feeling of friendliness with the Belgian civil population. They contributed largely and freely to all the women who visited the restaurants collecting funds for Belgian relief work. The officers who took me to Antwerp also gave money to the beggars who surrounded our car when we stopped at Malines.

"My trip back from Antwerp to Rotterdam was uneventful. I left Rotterdam on Saturday for London, taking the Batevier line to Tilbury on the Thames. Owing to the difficulty of navigation in the North Sea, we lay off the Hook of Holland all night, with the result that we did not reach Tilbury until nearly 8 o'clock the next evening. The Captain of our boat reported having seen two floating mines. As you can imagine, navigation in the North Sea under the present conditions is exceedingly risky and not very comfortable, but that is the only part of my trip which caused me any worry.

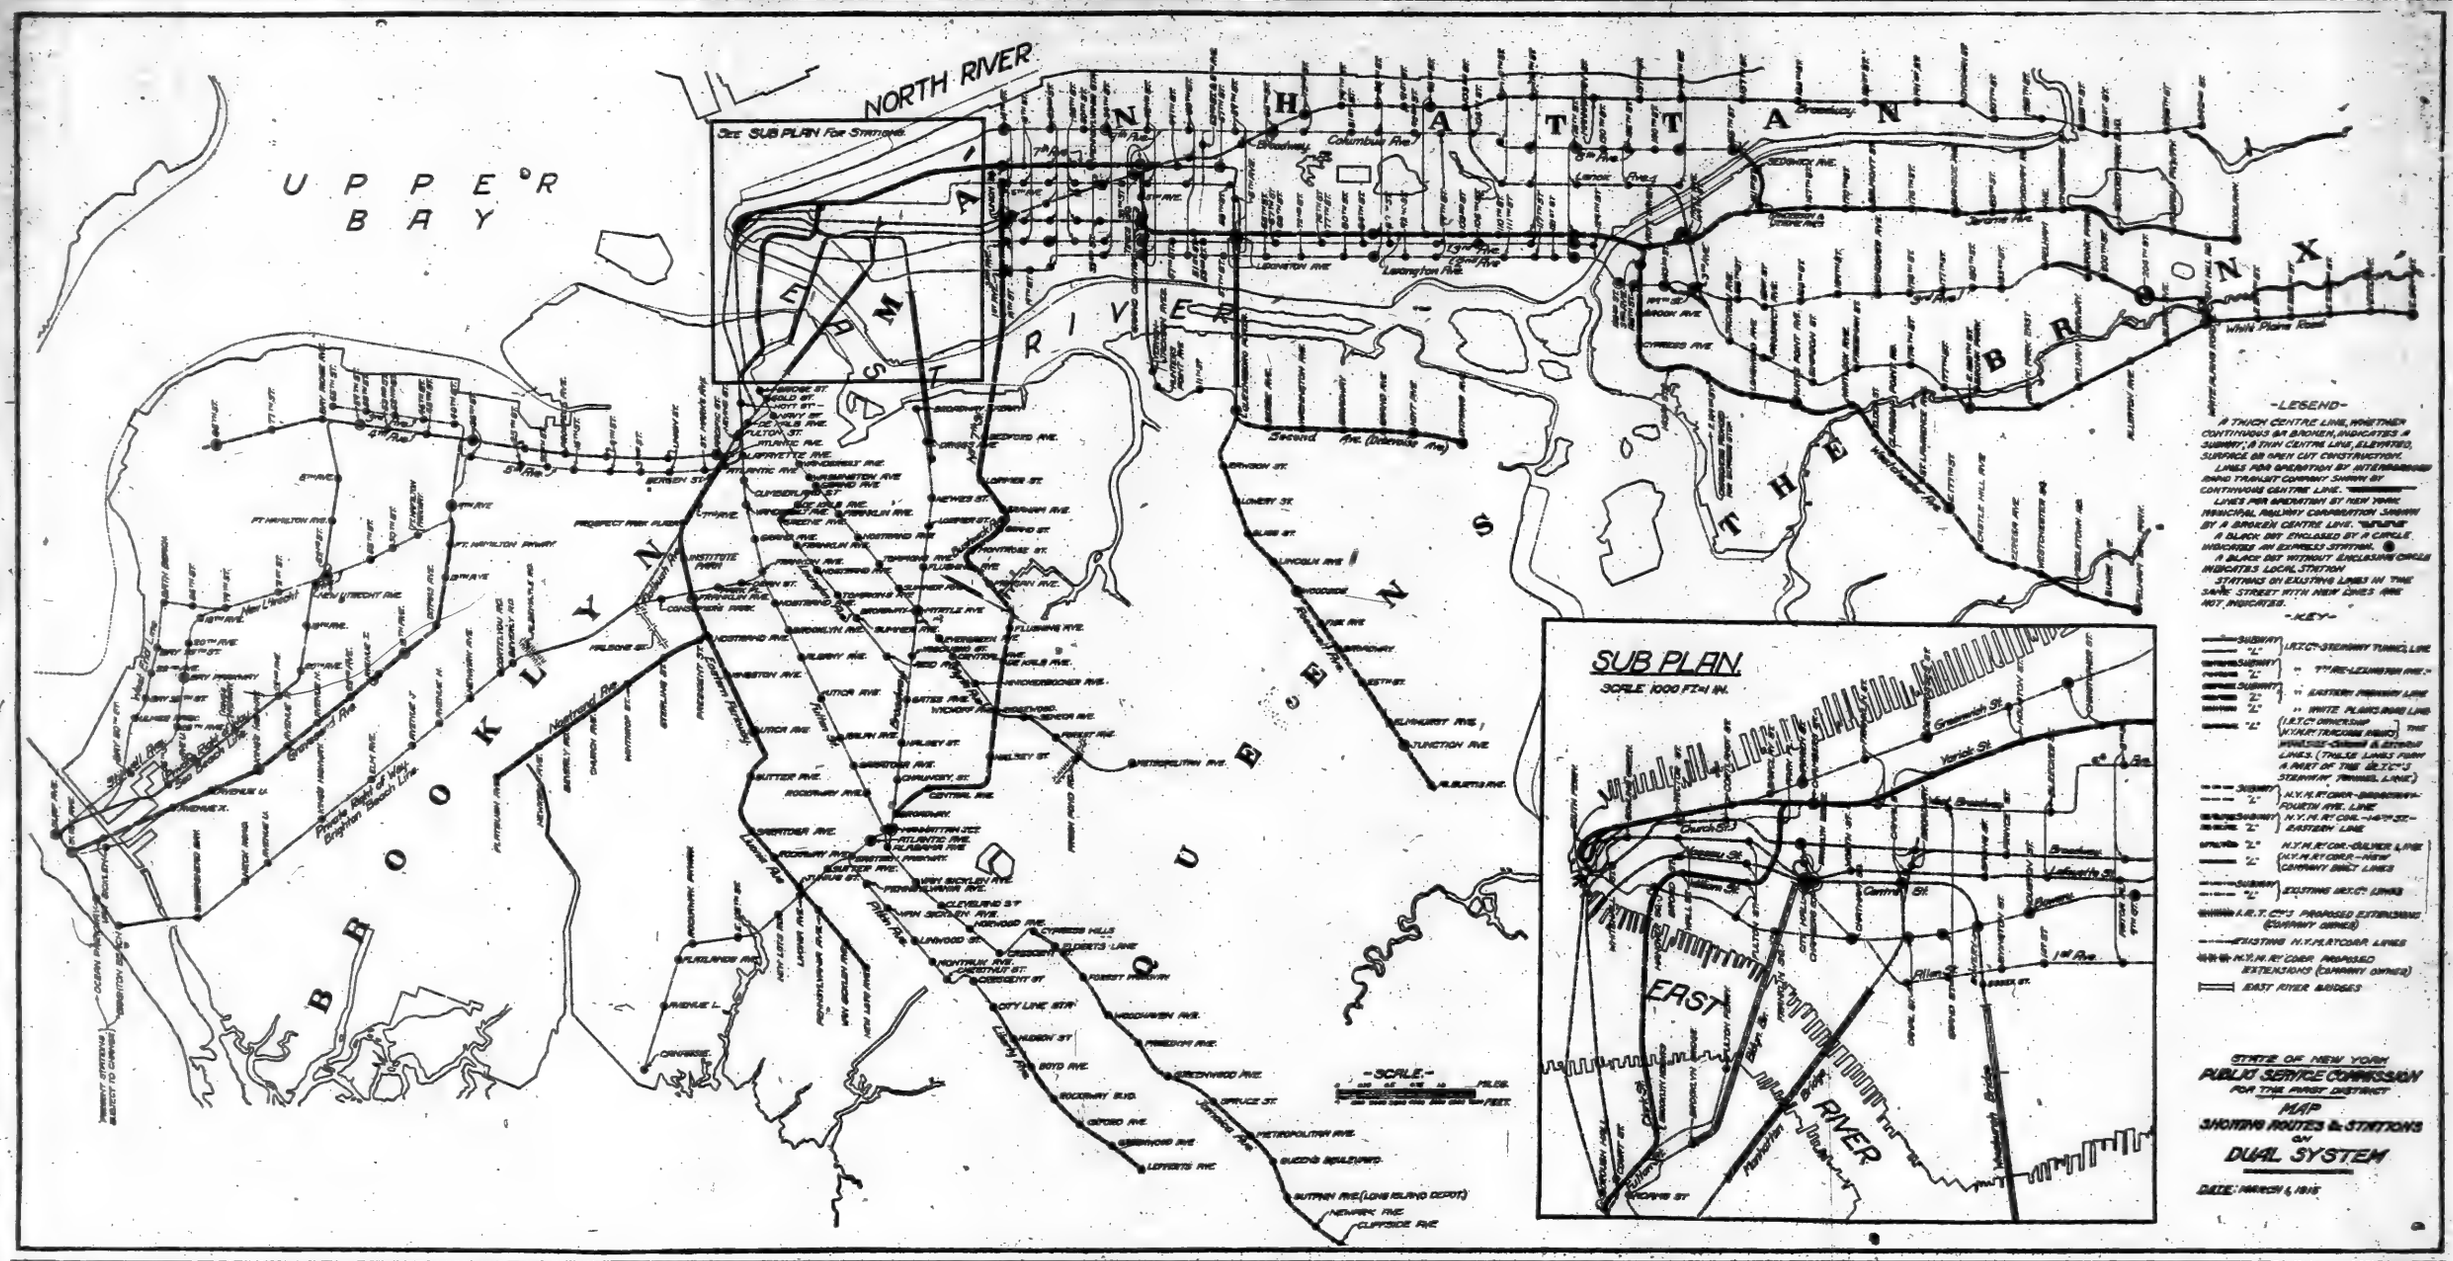
ROUTES AND STATIONS OF DUAL SUBWAY SYSTEM



More than two years ago the dual subway system contracts were signed, and for a good many more than two years the work of constructing the new rapid transit lines has been in progress. For nearly two years one part of the enlarged system, the Centre Street Loop, has been in operation, and already in Brooklyn the Brooklyn Rapid Transit has begun to use portions of its elevated lines.

Next month the Public Service Commission hopes to make two important additions to the rapid transit lines of the city, and by July 1 to bring South Brooklyn and Coney Island on the one hand and Long Island City on the other perceptibly nearer Broadway. Not yet can it announce positively the date on which it can open for operation the Fourth Avenue subway and the reconstructed Sea Beach Line to Coney Island or the temporary tracks through the Steinway Tunnel, as there are a number of small difficulties to overcome, but it has no doubt that some time in June both roads will be open to the public.

The Fourth Avenue line is of particular importance at this time of year, as it will materially aid in ameliorating the congestion of the Coney Island traffic. It will permit trains to be operated without a change from the Municipal Building in City Hall Park over the Manhattan Bridge, through the Fourth Avenue subway to about Sixty-fifth Street, and thence by the reconstructed Sea Beach line to Coney Island.

A few months later in the year, perhaps by November, the Fourth Avenue subway will be put to considerably greater use. By that time the New Utrecht line to Coney Island will be finished, and the new connection between it and the Fourth Avenue subway at Thirty-sixth Street will be in operation. As soon as that route is opened the Coney Island 5 cent fare at all hours of the day will be an accomplished fact. According to the dual system contract it was not to be established until the first of the lines to be reconstructed by the city's capital was in running order, and that provision has barred the reduction of the fare on the opening of the Sea Beach route.

Almost simultaneously with the appearance of the Fourth Avenue subway in the rapid transit system of the city will be the beginning of temporary operation of the Steinway Tunnel. It might begin by June 1, if the most sanguine hopes of the Public Service Commission were realized, but it is hardly likely to be actually collecting fares before the latter end of the month.

When it does, passengers from Manhattan will enter it in Forty-second Street, half way between Lexington and Third Avenues, and will be carried down to the very considerable depth at which it runs by escalators. Then after crossing beneath the East River they will alight at Jackson and Van Alst Avenues.

At present this will leave them, so to speak, somewhat in the air. A station of the Long Island Railroad, it is true, is within easy walking distance, and the trolley lines of the New York & Queens County are handy to take them to whatever part of Queens they wish, but they will have none of the conveniences which will be theirs a few months hence. Then the Steinway Tunnel will connect directly with the line that is to run by Ely Avenue to the Queensboro Bridge Plaza, which is so far a little more than half complete.

It is in Queens that the most interesting developments in the rapid transit situation have taken place recently. First there came the proposition to substitute a tunnel under the East River at Fifty-ninth Street for the use of the Queensboro Bridge by the B. R. T. trains.

This was the result of apprehension that the operation of both elevated and subway trains across the great span would occupy so much room as to encroach seriously upon the accommodations for trucks and other road vehicles.

Fortunately, it happened that the Degnon Contracting Company, which has the construction contract for the section of the Fifty-ninth Street line that joins with the Queensboro Bridge, was also greatly interested in this section of Queens.

It is closely affiliated with the Degnon Terminal Company, which is seeking to develop a great industrial area near Long Island City, and it realized that the future of that would be affected materially by the trucking facilities of the Queensboro Bridge. So it made an offer to the Public Service Commission and the Board of Estimate whereby it would assent to the modification of its subway contract in Manhattan if the tunnel were substituted for the use of the bridge, and it also agreed to construct the tunnel at such a price as made it possible for the city to consider it. Consequently, negotiations were set on foot looking to the adoption of the tunnel plan, and these are now nearing a favorable conclusion.

Another important change in the rapid transit outlook has taken place in Queens by reason of the offer made to the city by the Long Island Railroad Company. In nearly every other part of the city it has been found possible to prolong the rapid transit system to the city line. In the Third Ward of Queens, much to the disappointment of the residents and property owners of such important sections as Flushing, Bayside, and Douglaston, it was found impossible, for financial reasons, to carry the line for the present beyond Main Street, Flushing.

Now, however, the Long Island Railroad Company has proposed that by constructing half a mile of track from the Corona line to its system near Whitestone Junction the city's rapid transit lines can be hitched up with its own Whitestone and Little Neck branches, and the B. R. T. and Interborough trains can obtain trackage rights at very favorable terms to the city.

The Long Island Company calculates that by using its tracks the city will be saved construction, the carrying charges on the cost of which would be $500,000 a year. So it has asked $250,000 rent for the use of its lines, with the division of the operating expenses proportionately to the number of trains which each party to the bargain operates. The commission will seek some reduction in this charge, but there is little doubt that the arrangement will be put through.

On the west side of the East River the first increase in the mileage of the rapid transit system is likely to be along the White Plains Road line. This is the extension of the present West Farms branch of the existing Subway to the city line. It is under contract as far north as 241st Street, and good progress had been made with it until a few weeks ago it struck an awkward snag. It was discovered that, as it tried to pass between the right of way of the New York, Westchester & Boston and Bronx Park it lacked a few feet of room necessary to avoid either of these properties.

The commission proposed to exchange about 15,000 square feet of land for about 12,000 within the park, in order not only to acquire the right of way that was absolutely essential, but also room for a storage yard. It suggested this in order to get rid of the bugbear of rapid transit operators, the necessity of hauling empty cars unnecessarily to the end of the line.

A stiff opposition to any cession of park land, even in exchange for more than its equivalent, sprang up, and the storage yard part of the plan had to be given up. Chairman McCall, however, took a firm stand upon the necessity of acquiring a few feet of public land to enable the White Plains Road extension to be constructed, and the opposition had to give way. An enabling act was passed to authorize the exchange of Public Service Commission land for land held by a city department if it received the assent of the Sinking Fund Commission, and another obstacle to rapid transit construction was removed.

Another line in the Bronx, which is likely to be put to service before the main Manhattan lines, is the Jerome Avenue elevated. This is an extension of the new Lexington Avenue Subway, and will eventually connect with that, but it will also be able to make a connection with the existing Eighth Avenue elevated line, and so send trains down either Sixth or Ninth Avenue. Both its sections are under construction, and should be completed by the beginning of Winter, but it cannot be put into operation then, because the Lexington Avenue line will not be ready for trains for a couple of years, at least, and the connection with the Eighth Avenue elevated is not even begun. The Public Service Commission has only returned recently to the Interborough the contract for this little bit of line, and it will probably be twelve months, at least, before it can be constructed.

When the present condition of the Lexington Avenue Subway, which is to form the upper half of the great east side trunk line, is considered, the effect of the long-drawn-out controversy over the extension of the subway system is seen. From Fifty-third to 157th Street the road is practically ready to receive its rails and signaling system, with the exception of a short stretch at Fifty-ninth Street and the tunnels that have to be placed under the Harlem River. These portions of the work could be finished in a few months, but there is no object in hastening them, on account of the conditions below Fifty-third Street.

There then are two sections, one containing the very difficult "diagonal connection" between the old and new subways at the Grand Central station, which are only in the first stages of building. The connection is not supposed to be completed before April 2, 1917, and until that is handed over to the Public Service Commission for its final equipment all the other work along the line goes for naught.

According to the hopes entertained at the time of signing the dual subway system contracts, the bargain between the city and the companies should be in operation and the trains should be running by Jan. 1, 1917; but it seems now that New York will be fortunate if this great trunk line on the east side is really opened by Jan. 1, 1918.

It must also be remembered that, for technical reasons, it is impossible to separate the beginning of operation on the east and west side trunk lines. It is true that the work of connecting the existing Subway at Times Square with the Seventh Avenue line is progressing very rapidly, and may be completed, as the contractors hope, by the end of the Summer, but that particular section has been speeded up merely because it was considered more economical to do so. The other sections of the Seventh Avenue line have been let under such conditions that they must be finished in the Spring of 1917, and so it may be assumed that both east and west side trunk lines will reach completion at about the same time.

Meanwhile there is a serious break in the B. R. T.'s Broadway line. It is now practically complete from the lower part of Manhattan to a little south of Union Square, and good progress is being made up to Thirty-eighth Street, but there comes a hiatus. The commission has not yet advertised for bids for the Times Square section, from Thirty-eighth to Fifty-first Street and Seventh Avenue, and until that difficult and delicate piece of construction has been accomplished the rest of the Broadway line will be of little value.

The Canal Street line, which will connect the Broadway tracks with the Fourth Avenue (Brooklyn) Subway by Manhattan Bridge, will, indeed, be ready, according to schedule, in the earlier part of 1917; but until the Brooklyn trains can run through to their turning point in Seventh Avenue the utmost use that could be made of the Broadway work would be by the operation of a shuttle service.

Probably the first great relief to come to Manhattan transit will be through the running of express trains on the elevated lines. The necessary third tracking is already under way, but here, too, one of the unexpected complications has occurred. Storage yards for the cars are to be built at the extreme north of the Webster Avenue extension of the existing Third Avenue line, and not yet has the work of providing the links which must connect the old structures with the new been put under way.

The B. R. T. in Brooklyn can claim the credit of having already completed a few portions of its new work. As has already been said, the important Fourth Avenue Subway and the Sea Beach line to Coney Island are to be in operation in a few weeks. The Lutheran Cemetery line is already in use, as well as the Myrtle Avenue and Broadway connection. To these will very shortly be added the Liberty Avenue extension to Lefferts Avenue, and the third tracking of the old lines is making good progress.

In this connection, however, there is a possibility of a radical change, which if put through would have a profound influence on the borough. So much opposition has arisen to the installation of an extra track along Fulton Street, one of the busiest business thoroughfares of Brooklyn, that it may yet come about that a large stretch of the existing elevated line in the heart of the borough will be pulled down and replaced by a subway.

SIXTH AVE. RENTING PROBLEM

By AARON RABINOWITZ,
President of Spear & Co.

The problem presented by the hundreds of thousands of square feet thrown on the market by the removal and failure of the large department stores in the district below Twenty-third Street still remains unsolved. The recent announcement of the failure of the J. B. Greenhut Company will, in the event of liquidation, throw on the market an additional million and a half square feet to compete with the already tremendous floor area vacant and seeking tenants. Sixth Avenue at the present time presents a unique problem for solution.

The department store buildings are of enormous area. The Siegel Cooper Building has an area of 85,000 square feet to a floor, and only firms of like size are able to absorb that amount of space. The remaining store buildings are of such size that they eliminate themselves in the general competition with the normal sized buildings in the district. Nevertheless, their being vacant are real factors in the sense that they create an atmosphere of general depression in the district.

Fifth Avenue, on the other hand, seems destined to a great deal of activity this Fall. There is every indication that the large vacancies will be rented to merchants and manufacturers below Fourteenth Street. A start in this direction has already been made by the removal to the district of several large clothing, toy, shirt, and umbrella houses.

The wisdom of the large lending institutions in having curtailed loans to builders of lofts above Thirtieth Street has done much to revive activity and maintain better prices in the district below Twenty-third Street. Whether the result is due to the stringency of the money market or not, nevertheless, the cessation of building to a large extent has acted as a boomerang to those owners with vacant space below Twenty-third Street.

The continuation of the scarcity of lofts above Thirtieth Street has already had a marked effect upon not only the increase of rentals but also upon the responsibility and the type of firms settling below Twenty-third Street. In the past we have been creating more space than the merchants in their normal activity were able to consume and with buildings uptown much more up-to-date, have outclassed the others in the competition for tenants.

If we could devise a scheme to permanently remove the midday crowds to other quarters or to the building roofs, Fifth Avenue would be tremendously improved in the attractiveness of the street.

The leasing of the entire twelve-story building at Union Square and Fifteenth Street by the Van Buren Estate to the H. E. Verran Company will largely offset the removal of Muser Brothers, for a decade located in the Knickerbocker Building at Fifth Avenue and Sixteenth Street, to a location further uptown. The possible damage will be more than neutralized by this firm and will have considerable influence on similar firms locating in the district.

Below Fourteenth Street the situation has been much the same and not nearly so difficult. The rentals have not varied to any reasonable extent and the percentage of vacancies is normal. Vacancies we think have reached the limit and it needs only the resumption of normal business to create comparatively healthy real estate conditions.

A very interesting situation, however, is developing. The ownership of the property is changing largely through forcclosure proceedings. The mortgages are calling constantly for a reduction of the principal, often disproportionate, with the result that the owners whose funds have been depleted by large expenditures demanded by the various city departments are not in a position to meet the new demands now made upon them. The savings banks, the life insurance companies, and the mortgage holders generally are fast becoming the owners of the property. A direct factor in causing much of the removal to other buildings uptown has been that tenants have been annoyed by the multiplicity of inspection and over-regulation by numerous city departments.

There is a very mistaken idea held by the Board of Assessors, given expression to by George McAneny in a memorandum published in The Evening Post on Monday, April 19, discussing the tax of 2.15 for 1916. Mr. McAneny is quoted as saying: "Rents will have to come up. The landlord will have to protect himself.

"I believe that high rents will be the natural result of the 2.15 tax rate." It is fallacious to argue that taxes regulate rents and it is unfortunate that at this time the tax rate shall be increased. We are unable to form any judgment whether it will affect the situation favorably in other districts, but it is certain that the increase of the rate in the manufacturing district will have little or no influence upon the rental.

We have on one hand a large amount of vacancies with owners seeking tenants, on the other, shrewd and well-trained merchants negotiating for space. In the lower district the increase of the tax rate will largely offset the benefit that the owners derived last Fall when the Tax Department attempted to ease the burden of real estate by decreasing in the section between Grand and Fourteenth Streets, assessments to the extent of ten millions; the decrease in assessed valuations in the district between Fourteenth and Twenty-third Streets amounted to approximately nine millions.

BUSINESS STIMULATES BROADWAY BUILDING

Attention has been sharply directed recently to the old theatre and hotel centre on Broadway between Twenty-third and Thirty-fourth Streets in view of the radical transformation now under way in those blocks. From both the business and realty standpoints, this section has been one of the most active in the city.

The readjustment of these blocks to the changing trade conditions began a few years ago with the demolition of the old Café Martin and the Hotel Victoria, and on their sites now rise huge twenty-story buildings. The increasing demand for light and airy rooms by scores of large as well as small concerns identified with the dry goods wholesale interests in what is becoming the big wholesale centre has led to the improvement of many choice plots whose former buildings had outgrown their usefulness. This changing condition was well illustrated a few years ago when the immediate Twenty-fifth Street corner of the Hoffman House was torn down and a modern loft erected by Mrs. Gerry, now occupied by wholesale firms formerly in the downtown centre.

Today there are under construction or projected for immediate construction no less than five mammoth buildings in the ten blocks from Twenty-fifth to Thirty-fifth Street. They will represent a cost of over $4,000,000. It is significant that three will replace theatres which held their popularity for years. Of these the Bijou has already been torn down for a sixteen-story loft. Wallack's Theatre, directly opposite, on the northeast corner of Thirtieth Street, has succumbed to the trade invasion and closed last night. This week wreckers will begin tearing out the stage and rear portion for the twelve-story loft to be erected on the Thirtieth Street side, 69.7 feet with a depth of 90.9, the land having been purchased by Moses Crystal from Bing & Bing, who recently acquired the entire property.

A few blocks below, on the northeast corner of Twenty-sixth Street, adjoining the twenty-story building lately finished by the Johnson-Kahn interests on the Victoria Hotel site and directly opposite the similar building put up by the same operators on the Café Martin site, the Ayer estate is preparing to put up a sixteen-story office structure. The excavation has been finished and next season it will be ready for occupancy.

The most southerly in this chain of high-class structures will be the sixteen-story building planned by Louis J. Horowitz on the Hoffman and Albemarle Hotel sites, including the northwest corner of Twenty-fourth Street with an extension on Twenty-fifth Street. The work of tearing down these famous hostelries will soon begin and the new improvement will cost nearly $1,500,000.

The fifth and most northerly in the chain will be the twelve-story structure covering the westerly Broadway frontage between Thirty-fifth and Thirty-sixth Streets. This will also wipe out another theatre, the old Herald Square, which, under various names, has been a popular amusement place for about forty years. The purchase of the property by William H. Barnum and William Everdell, Jr., a year ago was the realty feature of the season, involving property held at about $6,000,000. To this will be added about $2,000,000, the cost of the new building.

The old theatre closed its doors last week, and within a year the new building will be ready for occupancy. It has been designed by Clinton & Russell; the architects of the Longacre Building, at the northeast corner of Broadway and Forty-second Street, erected a short time ago by Barnum and Everdell. Their new Broadway structure occupies an exceptionally choice location for trade, possessing excellent transit facilities, being opposite Macy's, close to the McAlpin Hotel, and in a section which is showing a healthy growth for business interests requiring fine office space.

A commendable restriction has been placed by the owners in prohibiting all manufacturing business. This should act as a strong barrier against the encroachment of factory lofts in that part of the city.

In the immediate vicinity two more high-class buildings are about to go up, both on Fifth Avenue, one being for Burton Brothers, the lower Broadway cotton goods merchants, on the northeast corner of Twenty-ninth Street, the old Calumet Club site, lately bought by them, while the second will cover the old Dinsmore home at the northwest corner of Thirty-first Street, plans for which have been filed by the Strathcona Construction Company. This will be twelve stories, costing $350,000, and the old house is now being torn down. The new Burton building will be eleven stories high.

Work on Brokaw Brothers' new building on Broadway, just below Forty-second Street, is well under way, while other important improvements are the 8 and 10 East Forty-fifth Street building, the new Fifth Avenue-Rogers Peet building, Arnold, Constable & Co.'s new home on the Lewis corner of Fifth Avenue, northeast corner of Thirty-seventh Street, and the attractive building nearing completion for Brooks Brothers at Madison Avenue and Forty-fourth Street opposite St. Bartholomew's Church.

STATEN ISLAND DEVELOPMENT

By PERCIVAL G. ULLMAN, JR.

The Borough of Richmond has rapidly progressed within the last year in the development of home sites and the completion of a large number of detached homes, due to the demand that is increasing from year to year.

There have been a large number of acreage tracts sold for immediate and future development located along the South Shore of the borough, overlooking lower New York Bay. This active demand can easily be accounted for, because Richmond Borough has a peculiar advantage in being country-side, seaside and cityside, with efficient and agreeable transportation and easily accessible to Manhattan for the commuting public, and this the home-buyer and investor is gradually seeking in this part of the Greater City.

The extremely low price of land is another incentive for the homeseeker to locate in Richmond, for in no other section in the Greater City, located an equal distance from Manhattan, can there be found better land for the home owner at anything approaching its price.

A striking illustration for the demand for home sites may be found in some recent operation of development companies, who have placed on the market large tracts for development purposes. J. A. Matthews, manager of a large bungalow development near Midland Beach of about 1,000 lots, recently reported that he has sold this property, involving about $250,000, in a remarkably short time. The increasing demand has induced him to take up the development of 1,200 lots at Woodland Terrace and nearly $100,000 worth of property has been sold up to the present time.

The present owners have recently purchased a large tract of waterfront property adjoining Woodland Terrace, paying a higher price for it than has ever been paid for similar waterfront acreage on the south side of the borough. Other evidences of a large demand for lots and acreage may be found at Greatkills, where several development companies are successfully selling lots on a large scale.

This activity extends as far and includes Huguenot Park and Prince Bay, while at Tottenville, the extreme end of the borough, enjoys a good local demand for the sale of houses and lots.

St. George strongly represents interest in the building of apartment houses overlooking the New York Bay and Manhattan, while in other locations in this section many merchants are buying new sites for their business, owing to the necessity of keeping within the limits of the city centre, which is surrounded by the present cities and the new [illegible] house now under course of construction. The approach and new Court House when completed will afford a more attractive entry than any other borough within the city limits.

The waterfront of the borough on the Staten Island Sound is unsurpassed for large manufacturing industries, and it is now receiving the earnest attention of Congress and the State Government.

Within the past two months the Hon. Frank M. Williams, State Engineer, made an inspection of the shore front for the purpose of selecting a site for a barge terminal in connection with the new barge canal now building, and he was very much impressed by the possibilities of the waterfront development on the Staten Island Sound for large manufacturing plants.

The United States War Department is about to consider additional improvements to the channel in the Staten Island Sound from lower New York Bay to upper New York Bay under an act recently passed by Congress. The contemplated improvement involves many millions of dollars, and when completed they will undoubtedly produce an advantage at this port over any other port on the Atlantic seaboard.

The waterfront of the borough is attracting manufacturers, and within the past three months many inquiries have been reported. It is, therefore, probable that new plants will be erected in the near future, which should increase the importance of Richmond Borough as a large manufacturing centre.

The Staten Island Rapid Transit last year increased greatly the train service on its lines running to Grassmere, New Dorp, Greatkills, Huguenot Park, and Pleasant Plains, both as to additional trains and the connection with the municipal ferry. I understand that the company, owing to the great demand from the traveling public, will again this year increase the train service and accommodations on this division. The railroad company laid many miles of double track in the past year, and it is planning to lay additional trackage within a few months.

The increase in trolley service for the lower and central portions of the island has been due to greater travel. The trolley company has ordered a large number of new steel cars, which it is putting into operation as rapidly as received from the builders. The company has also improved its routes and the running time on various lines.

The Subway Conference Committee is very active in Subway matters relating to Richmond Borough. They are well organized and are representative of the people in Richmond Borough on Subway matters. This committee recently appeared before the Transit Committee of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, and with the aid of over three hundred Staten Islanders presented strong and impressive arguments for a subway to and through Richmond Borough.

RESERVE BOARD SEES CONFIDENCE RETURN

Finds General Improvement the Country Over in Business Conditions

AND REAL OPTIMISM HERE

WASHINGTON, May 2.—General improvement in business conditions, with "returning confidence," is announced today in the Federal Reserve Board's digest of reports of agents in the twelve reserve districts into which the country is divided. The development of a strong, active securities market on the New York Stock Exchange and considerable activity in certain industries in connection with the war are pointed out.

From the New Yorw district general improvement with optimism in New York City is reported. The real estate situation is said to have been bad; with leases at greatly reduced rates. Prices of dry goods, textiles, and other commodities have quite generally advanced since April 1 as a reflection of better demand.

Slight improvement is noted from the Boston district. There business directly affected by the war is in much better condition than trade not so benefited. Commercial paper in the hands of brokers is scant, and the demand for money in the larger centres is light.

Some improvement in the last few months is reported from the Philadelphia district, although information from all parts of the district intimates that business conditions are below normal. The conditions in the coal, lumber, shipyards, sole and upper leather, and paint businesses and in various iron and steel industries have improved. The cotton goods manufacturing situation is fairly satisfactory, the wool market is quiet, and the cement business is below normal.

Business conditions are said to have improved materially in the Cleveland district as compared with six weeks ago. The metal industry has been stimulated by foreign orders. Clothing manufacturers report increasing medium grade business. Funds for investment are plentiful. The coal trade still is reported unsatisfactory because of labor, legislative, and trade conditions.

"Improving conditions and promise of continued betterment" is the summary of reports from the Richmond district. Progress is still retarded by war conditions. There is decided improvement in cotton prices. With confidence in the future, cotton milling is prosperous. Shortage of dyestuffs is causing some uneasiness.

The Atlanta district report indicates "increased activity of sound and conservative nature in all lines," though no remarkable improvement. Increased railroad, hotel, and postal receipts reflect cotton trade advance and growth of confidence. "Industrial and manufacturing interests," the report says, "are again on a normal basis, and conditions are improving in all trade lines."

The Chicago district report shows improvement, though not very pronounced outside of those lines profiting by war orders. Money conditions are said to be easy.

Reports Good Collections.

In the St. Louis district the demand for general merchandise has improved. While below normal, the sales and collections for the first quarter of the year show improvement over the previous quarter and a year ago.

The outlook in the Minneapolis district is said to favor improvement in all business lines that are below normal or are dependent on agriculture. Retail trade is active, though below normal in various lines. Copper mines are working full time. The wheat acreage is the largest the States of this district ever had, and other cereals show corresponding increases.

Abundant crops are promised in the Kansas City district, with agricultural and horticultural conditions almost perfect. The supply of loanable funds far exceeds the demand in practically all districts. Stock men and other large borrowers are expected to reap benefits of rates this Spring lower than for many years.

Steady and conservative increase for retail trade is reported in the larger cities of the Dallas district. "The feeling throughout business circles, agricultural, and livestock section is encouraging," adds the report.

In the San Francisco district agricultural prospects are reported exceptionally good, mercantile lines satisfactory, petroleum and lumber industries depressed, with indications, however, of improvement in lumber. Mining generally has improved.

GIVES RESERVE BANK NEWS.

Federal Boarkd Starts a Journal to Inform Financiers.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—The Federal Reserve Bulletin was added today to the list of regular Governmental publications. The Bulletin, which is issued by the Federal Reserve Board, will be published monthly, and will be distributed free to Federal Reserve Banks and member banks. A subscription price will be announced later.

The Bulletin's announcement says that it is intended not "as a vehicle for the expression of opinion, but as a means of distributing information." It will include consolidated statements of bank conditions and such abstracts of correspondence of the Federal Reserve Board as have a relation to banking problems. In a department devoted to points of law, opinions of the Federal Reserve Board's counsel will be given with reports of National and State legislation affecting member banks.

Among the articles in the first issue are a discussion of the "Work of the Federal Reserve Board," of "A Plan for Clearing Checks," and an essay on "The Gold Clearance Fund at Washington."

Among other things discussed in the first number is the development of the acceptance business. The bulletin says that the Federal Reserve Bank of New York has been buying acceptances since Feb. 12, when the board's regulation permitting their purchase was promulgated, and that last Monday the bank had in its portfolio $5,638,000 of accepted bills. "Inquiries," it is added, "indicate that additional banks are preparing to offer acceptance facilities to their customers."

GERMAN LEADER AT VATICAN

Head of Clerical Party Seeks Audience with the Pope.

ROME, May 2, (via Paris, May 3.)—Mathias Erzberger, leader of the Clerical Centre Party in the German Reichstag, has arrived here on a special mission to the Vatican.

Herr Erzberger today visited Cardinal Gasparri, the Papal Secretary of State, and requested an audience with Pope Benedict.

WOMAN TAKES POISON IN PARK AVE. HOTEL

Miss Bessie Byfield, a Newspaper Writer, Came Here From Indianapolis to Die.

Miss Bessie Byfield, 41 years old, a newspaper woman who had been society editor on several papers of Indianapolis, Ind., where she lived, registered at the Park Avenue Hotel on Saturday evening, and, after depositing $35 at the desk, was assigned to a room on the second floor. She was traveling alone, she said, and carried only a small hand bag. She went to her room early in the evening and was not seen again until shortly after noon yesterday, when Selma Anderson, a maid, opened the door with her pass key and saw her apparently asleep in bed. But when the maid made a closer examination, she found that Miss Byfield was dead.

Dr. A. A. Moore, the house physician, discovered that Miss Byfield had committed suicide with cyanide of potassium, which she had taken in capsules. Several capsules and a four-ounce box of the poison lay on a chair beside the bed. She had been dead twelve hours or more when the body was discovered.

On a table in the room the police found two letters, directed to Mrs. E. C. Byfield and Miss Emma Byfield, 1729 North Illinois Street, Indianapolis, Ind. The letters were identical, except that one began "Dear Mother," and the other "Dear Sister." Near the letters was a pencil draft of them, which indicated that Miss Byfield had first composed her thoughts in rough copy and then had transcribed them in ink for her mother and sister. The letters read:

> Do not censure me for this act. I fear I am losing my mind, and I think this is the kindest way out. I would not want to be a burden on the family, and you would not want to see me suffer. I hadn't the courage to do this at home, and I knew New York better than any other place. I hope this will be the means of bring the family closer together. I am not afraid to die. I have done nothing that I think God will not forgive. Please do not mourn.

Among Miss Byfield's effects were several articles of jewelry, including a gold necklace, a bracelet and a wrist watch. Miss Byfield was not known at the hotel and, as far as could be learned, had never registered there before Saturday. The mother and sister in Indianapolis were notified, and the body was put in the care of undertakers at 144 Lexington Avenue.

Special to The New York Times.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., May 2.—Miss Besie Byfield disappeared from her home here on Friday morning, and her relatives had asked the police to search for her. She had been employed in the offic of the National Press Association in this city, and notified the manager on Friday morning that she would not be able to work that day because of a severe headache. Charles Byfield, her brother, who is Assistant Postmaster of Indianapolis, said tonight that his sister had been suffering from a nervous breakdown and that he feared her mind had become deranged.

PRESIDENT AS GODFATHER.

Consents to Use of "Woodrow" for Sayre Baby's Middle Name.

Special to The New York Times.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., May 2.—Standing in the little chapel of St. John's Episcopal Parish here, President Wilson acted as godfather this afternoon to his grandson, who was christened Francis Woodrow Sayre. The other godfather was John Nevin Sayre of Princeton, N. J., a brother of Mr. Sayre, and the godmother was Miss Agnes Winter of Philadelphia, a close friend of Mrs. Sayre, who was engaged with her in settlement work there. The sponsors answered in unison to the questions of the Episcopal ritual.

Shortly after the child's birth in the White House, his father announced that he would be named simply Francis Sayre, because the President thought he should live his own life, and should not be named after him. It was said today that the President's objections had been overcome.

The christening was rigorously guarded from the scores of curious villagers who stood about the chapel during the ceremony. Mrs. Mason, President Garfield's mother-in-law, walked to the chapel with Dr. Harry A. Garfield, President of Williams College, and his wife, followed a few minutes later by Mrs. Robert H. Sayre, Mr. Sayre's mother, and John Nevin Sayre. Miss Margaret Wilson and Miss Helen Woodrow Bones walked to the church with Dr. Cary T. Grayson, the White House physician. Stepping from the automobile which brought them, the President and Mr. and Mrs. Sayre walked quickly inside the chapel. Mr. Sayre bore his son, wrapped in heavy blankets against the damp air of a very cloudy day.

During the christening the baby lay quietly in his father's arms. Just at the end he cried for an instant, and then calmly permitted himself to be borne from the little church, and into the waiting automobile.

This morning the President walked with his daughter, Mrs. Sayre, to the Williams College chapel, where he attended the morning service. The Rev. Dr. J. Douglas Adam of the Hartford Theological Seminary preached the sermon. The President sat well to the front of the chapel in Dr. Garfield's pew.

After the morning service President Wilson called at the home of Dr. Garfield, and then returned to the Sayre home. Later he strolled with Mrs. Sayre to the grounds of the Taconic Golf Club. After the christening he remained indoors until late in the afternoon, when he left for Washington.

AVEZZANO AGAIN SHAKEN.

Vibrations so Severe as to Alarm Survivors of Great Earthquake.

AVEZZANO, Italy, May 2.—Since the great earthquake, the shocks have continued with more or less frequency. This morning the vibrations were so great that they caused alarm among the whole population, who are camping in the fields, owing to the fact that almost the entire town has been leveled.

The shocks today were strong enough to cause some of the old walls to collapse.

Mrs. Bussman is suffering from the effects of an X-ray burn on her back, and skin grafting was regarded as the only means of saving her life. Dr. Gottman was unable to find any one who would furnish the skin.

HIS HEART SEWN UP, PATIENT RECOVERS

Three Ribs Are Removed for Remarkable Operation on a Wounded Man in Hospital.

LUNG COLLAPSE PREVENTED

Mixture of Ether and Air Forced In for Anaesthesia and to Keep Up Normal Pressure.

A remarkable operation, involving the sewing up of a wound in a man's heart, was performed successfully on April 20 at the Beth Israel Hospital, Monroe and Jefferson Streets, it was announced yesterday. The injured man, Israel Ziff of 238 East 105th Street, is well on the way to recovery, and probably will be out of the hospital in a few days.

Ziff operates a pushcart in Monroe Street, near the hospital, selling slices of cocoanut to passers-by. He is in the habit of slicing the cocoanut himself with a knife, more than a foot long, whose wide blade tapers down to a sharp point.

Several months ago Ziff cut himself badly while cutting up his wares, and his wife and children begged him to give up his occupation and find some other method of earning a living. He tried to do it, but he could find nothing else. His pushcart was well known in the neighborhood, and his business was good; so he was compelled to keep at it.

Business was brisk on the night of April 20 and the cocoanuts were going fast. Ziff had to cut up new ones from time to time, and every few minutes found him bending over with his knife at work. Presently the thing he had always feared happened; his knife slipped and cut through the left breast, a deep wound.

Wounded, Ran to Hospital.

Ziff knew he was badly hurt. So he straightened up, laid down his knife, and started for the Beth Israel Hospital, about a block and a half away. How he got there continues to be a mystery to the surgeons, but he did get there. He walked into the office in Jefferson Street, near Cherry Street, looking as if nothing much was the matter.

Dr. George Levy, who received him, saw that his injuries were serious, and notified Dr. Alfred A. Schwartz, the house surgeon. Dr. Schwartz's examination disclosed a wound at least an inch and a half long at the outer surface and going down in part.

Dr. Schwartz called up Dr. Charles Goodman of 960 Madison Avenue, the attending surgeon, and told him that he was badly needed at once. Dr. Simon D. Ehrlich, the hospital's anaesthetist, also was notified, and Ziff was carried to the operating room. Dr. Schwartz packed the wound with gauze, and stopped the flow of blood, and everything was made ready to start work when Dr. Goodman arrived.

The operating surgeon arrived in record time, and then began some quick work. The flow of blood had to be stopped in the first place, and the patient's anaesthetized for the operation. But if the chest were cut open to check the hemorrhage the lungs would have collapsed from the air pressure on the outside, so air had to be pumped in until the inflation was sufficient to resist the pressure from without.

This process was combined with the application of the anaesthetic by the method known as intertrachial anaesthesia. By means of an apparatus operated by electricity, ether was mixed in a jar with air in the proportion considered advisable, and the resultant mixture forced through a tub down into the patient's throat. By this means anaesthesia was produced and the air within the lungs was raised to double the normal pressure.

Three Ribs Cut Away.

With the patient anaesthetized and the lungs secured against danger of collape, Dr. Goodman cut away three ribs and a piece of the breastbone. He found the chest full of blood, and this had to be drawn off before anything more could be done. When the blood was cleared away Dr. Goodman found that the knife had made a big cut in the pericardium and that the point had gone down nearly three-eighths of an inch into the heart.

The most ticklish part of the operation followed—sewing up the heart while it was palpitating. One stitch was sufficient to close the wound in the heart itself, three more did the work with the pericardium. Dr. Goodman sewed the skin together over the wound and Ziff was put away to recover. He came out of th eoperation as rapidly as could have been expected, and except that the protection of the ribs over the heart will be missing, he is likely to be in no way the worse for his experience.

Had the point of the knife gone a millimeter or two further in Ziff never would have lived to get to the hospital, as the consequent hemorrhage would have been almost instantly fatal. The hospital authorities at first supposed from the nature and depth of the wound that he had been stabbed in a fight, and it was not until a day or two ago that Ziff recovered sufficiently to tell them how he had been injured.

BLOW UP TABERNACLE.

Evangelist's Foes Employ Dynamite in a Liquor Crusade.

Special to The New York Times.

HAGERSTOWN, Md., May 2.—What the police regard as a deliberate attempt to destroy the Biederwolf Tabernacle, a rough timber building seating 7,000 persons, used by Dr. Biederwolf, the evangelist, in his six weeks' campaign here, was made about 2 o'clock this morning, when a quantity of dynamite was exploded at a corner of the structure.

J. C. Finfrock, the caretaker, who sleeps in the building, was thrown from his cot and slightly hurt. He fired three shots in the direction of the explosion, but did not see the dynamiters. While the earth was torn up for some distance, the actual damage to the tabernacle was slight.

By some persons friends of the liquor interests are held responsible for the explosion. Since the Biederwolf meetings opened here a month ago a crusade against the liquor traffic has been carried on with unusual vigor. Several weeks ago an attempt was made to break into the building.

Dr. Biederwolf, in referring to the attempt to wreck the building before an audience of 6,000 men this afternoon, said:

"If those toughs who pulled off this stunt have an idea that they can scare us, they got another think coming to them. It puts a little ginger into the fight, and that's about all. The sad part of it is the news will go all over the United States that you have such people here, for this is the first time in the history of evangelism that such an attempt has been made."

LETTER A FORGERY, SAYS LIMANTOUR

Former Finance Minister of Mexico Repudiates Document Given Out by Carranza Men.

NEVER ENCOURAGED REVOLT

Two Letters Represented Diaz and Limantour as Seeking to Win Over Angeles.

By Cable to the Editor of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 2.—I am informed you have published a letter bearing my signature addressed in May, 1914, to Señor de la Barra encouraging him to work in a reactionary movement through Villa and Angeles. If so, my signature has been evidently forged. I have never written such a letter nor encouraged anybody to take part in revolutions. LIMANTOUR.

The letter referred to by Señor Limantour, former Finance Minister of Mexico, was given to THE NEW YORK TIMES by the Mexican Bureau of Information last Thursday and appeared, together with another letter addressed to General Felipe Angeles and purporting to be from General Porfirio Diaz, the former Mexican President, in THE TIMES of last Friday. The Mexican Bureau of Information is managed from the same office as the Carranza Consulate General in New York.

An official of the Mexican Bureau of Information stated that the letters had been found by a trusted agent of General Carranza in Lower California, and by that agent transmitted to the Carranza agents in this country. The originals of the letters, it was added, were now on the way to General Carranza in Vera Cruz.

The originals, it was further stated, came into the possession of the Carranzistas in the little town of Calexico, Lower California, where it was said General Angeles was on duty at a date, not disclosed, but later than June, 1913, when the first of the letters, the one from General Diez to General Angeles was supposedly written.

After General Angeles left Calexico, it was said, the letters were found in a room he had occupied at a hotel in the town. The finder was a woman, the proprietor of the hotel. Subsequently, an agent of the Carranza movement visited Calexico, and the woman showed him the letters. The agent, it was said, offered the woman $10 in gold for the letters, and she gladly accepted the money and turned over the letters.

The letters given out here, it was said, were true copies of the originals. The letter from General Diaz to General Angeles was dated Paris, June 18, 1913, and the one from Limantour to de la Barra was dated Paris, May 30, 1914. How General Angeles came to be in possession of a letter from Limantour to de la Barra was not made clear, but the supposition created was that de la Barra had himself given it to Angeles, as the letter, purporting to be from Limantour, says that "it would be well to disclose the plan to Angeles in a frank and decided manner, so that he can come to a ready understanding with Villa for the rest of our project."

The letter which the Carranza officials asserted, Limantour wrote to de la Barra reads in part as follows:

> You know that the northern division has no political or social aim in view, since it is commanded by an ambitious man, eager for money and power; on the other hand, one of our men is serving in his ranks with a highly significant military grade. It is impossible for Felipe Angeles ever to forget the great services which he owes to General Porfirio Diaz. We can satisfy the ambition of the former with our gold, and use to advantage the gratitude of Angeles with our ability. Once this has been done we will advise Villa how to draw Zapata to him, and thus give our new order of things a revolutionary and revindicating aspect, which, for the time being, is what we want. We will withdraw Zapata to the plan of Ayala, distributing the lands only in the State of Morelos, and compensate ourselves for this munificence with concessions and lands in other less tumultuous States. We will then organize a powerful army, selecting the most conspicuous members of the Federal Army and placing the Villa-Zapatista army under its command, and in this manner we will again rule in Mexico in a way which will perhaps be definite and energetic. We will restore to our afflicted country its prestige, stanching its wounds forever.

The letter also predicts the early fall of Huerta, and says that with Huerta would disappear all that is good and noble in Mexico."

In Washington last Saturday the confidential agency of the Villa faction issued a statement in which, in the name of General Angeles, who is Villa's right-hand man, the authenticity of both letters was denied. It was stated that General Angeles was never in Lower California in his life, and it was added that the letters "are the fabrications of a Carranza Consul on the west coast of the United States."

At the Ansonia Hotel, where General Huerta is stopping, E. Z. Steiner, General Huerta's financial adviser, declared yesterday that neither he nor General Huerta believed that General Diaz or Señor Limantour had ever written the letters given out by the Mexican Bureau of Information.

It was pointed out last night that General Carranza should receive the originals early this week, and that if they were genuine he would not have much trouble in proving that fact by the signatures and the postmarks on the envelopes in which they are said to have been mailed.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—General Villa has assumed the offensive against General Obregon and emerged victorious from two days' fighting in the vicinity of Leon, where he defeated and turned back the vanguard of the Carransista army, according to advices received here today and tonight by Enrique C. FRENCH BOMBARD DEFENSES OF METZ

Paris Reports That Two Days' Shelling of the Southern Forts Is Effective.

GERMANS GAIN IN ARGONNE

Take Several Trenches and 156 Prisoners—Disable Two French Aeroplanes.

LONDON, May 2.—The southern fortifications of the German intrenched camp of Metz were subjected yesterday and today to an effective bombardment by French artillery, according to today's official reports from Paris. This may be intended as an answer to the German bombardment of Dunkirk, which has has ceased—as the French office believes, either because the big gun used has worn itself out or because it has been kept from further firing by the activities of the Allies' aviators.

The fighting about Ypres and in the forest of Le Prêtre was marked by unsuccessful assaults by the Germans, the French account says, but it makes no mention of French attacks in both regions which are recorded by the Berlin bulletin as failures, nor of the loss of French trenches (reported by Berlin) in the Argonne.

The French again charge the Germans with employing asphyxiating devices, this time in the valley of the Aisne and in Champagne.

The long-range bombardment of Dunkirk has ceased, the French War Office expressing the belief that the big German gun has been put out of commission, possibly by the Allies' aviators.

Dunkirk Bombardment Ceases.

Following are the French official reports:

(Day Report.)—There is no modification to report in the situation along the entire front.

Information received from a deserter is to the effect that for about two months engineers of the Krupp works have been directing in the suburbs of Dixmude, a sector where there has been no fight for several months, the installation of a marine gun capable of firing a shell over a very long range. It is this gun which may have bombarded Dunkirk. The gun is believed to have a range of thirty-eight kilometers. (23.5 miles.)

Only nine shells were fired on the second and last bombardment of the French seaport. There is reason to believe that the gun either has been damaged by a method of fire which the most powerful pieced do not resist a long time, or that the continual presence of our aeroplanes has had the effect of stopping its fire.

On our side we yesterday bombarded one of the forts on the southern front of the intrenched camp of Mets.

(Night Report.)—In Belgium, to the north of Ypres, the Germans attempted an attack on our right, but were immediately checked by our machine guns.

Nothing new has occurred on the British front.

At Maucourt, to the south of Chaulnes, an attack in which about eighty men engaged, was directed against our lines. The Germans were armed with wire-cutters, grenades, automatic pistols, and knives. They were almost all cut down by our infantry, several of them were taken prisoner.

In the valley of the Aisne and in Champagne the enemy employed during the course of the day divers devices, which, however, were without effect—near Tracy-le-Mont placed tubes which threw off in breaking the odor of ether, between Rheims and the Argonne bombs charged with inflammable materials, and, finally, gases emitting a greenish smoke, which rose over the lines of the enemy without reaching ours.

In the forest of Le Prêtre the Germans essayed a counter-attack, but were not able to debouch. We are holding all of our gain of yesterday.

We continued during the day to bombard the front to the south of the intrenched camp of Metz. The efficacy of our fire on one of these forts is undoubted, as well as on the barracks and the railway near by.

All Attacks Repulsed, Berlin Says.

The German official story of the day's operations on the western front is as follows:

In Flanders the enemy, after heavy artillery preparations, again attempted to storm our new positions to the northeast of Ypres. The French attacked strongly between the canal and the road from Ypres to St. Julien. The British attacked feebly to the east of this road. The efforts of the enemy were unsuccessful, owing to our active fire and back fire from Broodseinde and Zonnebeke. Two machine guns fell into our hands.

In the Argonne our attacks to the north of Four de Paris made progress, in spite of a strong defense. The French lost several trenches, and 156 men were taken prisoners.

Between the Meuse and the Moselle the only heavy fighting was in the forest of Le Prêtre, where the French attacked in great numbers. We repulsed all the attacks, some of which reached into our trenches, with heavy losses for the enemy. We captured ninety men.

Yesterday two more French aeroplanes were disabled. One was destroyed near Rheims by gunfire. The other, belonging to an air squadron, was forced to land at a point to the northwest of Verdun.

TWO GUNS SHELLED DUNKIRK.

One Fired Krupp Shells, the Other Austrian—Public Buildings Hit.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

NORTHERN FRANCE, May 2, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—Dunkirk continues to be the objective of the heavy guns of the enemy. It has been ascertained that in the first bombardment at least one long-range gun, presumably Austrian, was firing at intervals along the coast line over Nieuport and in the direction of Dunkirk.

Later other huge shells fell in Dunkirk, coming from a different direction altogether, but from a distance relatively the same.

Two guns were presumably firing these missiles, one of them very near Dixmude, amid the ruins of which the Germans have been installed all through the Winter.

Small houses in the outskirts of Dunkirk have mostly suffered, but shells have also fallen on the railway station, the Hotel de Ville, the Mairie, the Place Jean Bart, (where several persons have been killed,) and along the Bassin du Commerce.

Two of them failed to explode. One was a 12-inch missile marked "Krupp, Berlin," and the other a monster of about 17 inches, breast high when standing on end, tipped with an aluminum shield, and marked "Imperial Arms and Ammunition, Austria."

SHIPS IN BATTLE; 3 VESSELS SUNK

Germans Lose Two Torpedo Boats and Blow Up a British Destroyer in North Sea.

TRAWLER SENT TO BOTTOM

Two German Officers and Forty-four Sailors Captured by the British.

FISHING BOAT IN FIGHT

Captain of Small Craft Trains little Guns on German Vessel and Puts Her to Rout.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

A BRITISH PORT, May 2, (Dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle.)—Two German torpedo boats were sunk in a short, sharp fight with four British vessels on Saturday. A German submarine was operating in the North Sea, with the object of menacing British shiping, and when in the vicinity of the Galloper lightship she encountered the British destroyer Recruit, an old twin screw vessel.

The submarine crossed the bows of the British vessel and manoeuvred for a position from which to attack her, and was successful in ending the career of the recruit, for she crashed a missile into the destroyer amidships. Slowly the British vessel began to heel over. She was able, however, to signal for assistance, and a Government trawler, the Daisy, hastened to the scene.

Boats at once were lowered, and thirty of the crew of the Recruit were picked up. The Daisy herself was next attacked. A torpedo was fired at her, but missed. So determined were the Germans, however, that the Daisy had to leace one of the rescue boats behind. The men in the latter had received instructions asto the course to take, and rowed away. They soon found, however, that they were being pursued, and a torpedo was fired at them. It took effect, and four men were wounded.

Meanwhile the Daisy had signaled for British destroyers, and four boats of the L class came up and at once encountered two German torpedo boats. The Germans steamed away as fast as they could. Two of the British vessels, the Lark and the Laforey, took up the chase and gradually the Germans were overhauled.

It was about 8:3 o'clock when the firing commenced, and in the running fight which ensued both the German vessels were sent to the bottom in less than an hour. The Germans made an extremely poor fight, their shooting was erratic, whereas the British firing was very effective. An eyewitness of the chase said:

"It was thrilling sight. The Germans looked beaten from the first. I never thought they would reach home. The British boats simply shot through the water. They were in grim earnest and almost every minute bang went one of their guns. I could see one shot crash into one of the German boats, and the must have been struck in a vital part for her speed became considerably reduced and she offered little further resistance. I watched them as long as I could and saw they were both doomed."

After the fight the British sailors showed the greatest respect for their foe and launched boats to their assistance. Altogether, forty-one men were picked up and cared for by the British boats. The prisoners included two officers. They were landed at Shotley on Sunday morning.

Admiralty Report of Fight.

LONDON, May 2.—The British Admiralty announces today that two German torpedo boats and the British torpedo boat destroyer Recruit have been sunk in the North Sea. The text of the Admiralty statement follows:

"A series of small affairs took place in the neighborhood of Galloper and North Hinder Lightship on Saturday.

"During the forenpon his Majesty's destroyer Recruit was sunk by a submarine, four officers and twenty-one men being saved by the trawler Daisy.

"At 3 P. M. the trawler Colombia was attacked by two German torpedo boats, which approached her from the westward, and commenced an action without hoisting their colors. The Colombia was sunk by a torpedo, only one deckhand being saved by other trawlers.

"A division of British destroyers, comprising the Laforey, Leonidas, Lawford and Lark, chased the two German vessels and, after a brief running fight of about one hour, sank them both.

"The British destroyers sustained no casualties. Two German officers and forty-four men were rescued from the sea and made prisoners of war.

"The destroyer Recruit was on patrol duty when the submarine sank her. According to details received here, she was struck amidships by the torpedo and began to sink at once. She signaled for aid, and her call was answered by the trawler Daisy, and thirty men of her complement of sixty-five were saved.

It is reported that a torpedo was fired at the Daisy, which was forced to leave one of her rescue boats behind, and that the submarine chased this boat and fired a shell at her, wounding four men.

British torpedo boat destroyers, signaling in the distance two German torpedo boats which had sunk the trawler Colombia, and apparently were supporting a submarine, engaged the Germans at long range in the vicinity of the North Hinder Light. The Germans tried to run away, but the British boats pressed them hard and soon sank them. The British boats rescued some of the crews of the Germans and landed them today.

YARMOUTH, England, Monday, May 3.—The trawler Barbados has arrived here in a damaged condition as the result of an encounter with a German torpedo boat off the Belgian coast on Saturday. The Captain of the trawler was wounded in the foot, but the rest of the crew escaped unhjured.

The Barbados reports that the trawler Colombia was torpedoed and sunk with seventeen hands. One survivor and one German bluejacket, who had fallen overboard from a warship, were brought to Yarmouth by the Barbados. The Barbados defended herself against AUSTRIA'S ANSWER FORETOLD TO ITALY?

Foreign Minister Has Long Conference With German Ambassador After Cabinet Council.

ROME, May 2.—All the Ministers met today with King Victor Emmanuel for the bi-weekly signing of decrees and to discuss the international situation. Baron Sonnino, the Foreign Minister, was the first to leave the conference, going from it to the Foreign Office to meet Prince von Buelow, the German Ambassador, with whom he remained for forty-five minutes.

It is asserted that Prince von Buelow indicated to Baron Sonnino the lines of Austria's expected answer to Italy.

Indications lead to the supposition that the answer will contain further concessions. It is not believed, however, that these concessions will satisfy the Italian claims, which, if really minimum, as is affirmed, mean practically an end to the negotiations.

NEW BRITISH BUDGET FOR A YEAR OF WAR

Cabinet Assumes Conflict Will Last Until March 31, 1916, in Their Estimates.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 2.—The Daily News says that the budget statement of Lloyd George will be introduced in the House of Commons on Tuesday. It will be a provisional budget, based on the assumption that the war will last throughout the financial year 1915-1915.

The assumpion that the war will be a long one has been for some time made by the coolest observers.

The British financial year ends on March 31, and the budget estimates will apparently be based on the assumption that the war will last at least until March 31, 1916.

GERMANY CALLS OUT LAST LANDSTURM MEN

All From 36 to 45 Years of Age Must Be in the Ranks by June 16.

LONDON, May 2.—The Berliner Tageblatt, a copy of which has been received here, says that the Landsturm men who have not yet served have been summoned to present themselves at Schoenberg, beginning tomorrow. The concentration will begin with the class of 1870 and continue until May 12, ending with the class of 1876.

The newspaper adds that a further calling of the Landsturm will begin June 4 with the class of 1871 and end June 16 with the classes of 1869 and 1870.

By the classes of 1869 and 1870 are meant the classes made up of men born in those years. Service in the Landsturm is from the end of the thirty-ninth to the end of the forty-fifth years, so that the class of 1870 is the last class of the Landsturm.

GERMANS ATTACK DERNBURG'S PEACE

His Outline of Terms That Would Be Accepted Stirs Press in His Country.

LONDON, May 2.—Dr. Bernhard Dernburg's letter read at a mass meeting in Portland, Me., on April 17, in which the former German Colonial Secretary said that Germany would evacuate the occupied portions of France and Belgium only on condition that the seas be freed and that Germany have freedom to expand beyond her frontier in Europe, has caused considerable discussion in the German newspapers, says a dispatch from Amsterdam to Reuter's Telegram Company.

The Post of Berlin says the letter supplies a "full and final proof of Dr. Dernburg's incapacity as a statesman," and the newspaper characterizes his remarks as "a fine piece of political foolery."

Count Ernst Reventlow, writing in the Deutsche Tageszeitung, said:

"It is impossible that Dr. Dernburg without direct instructions from the Imperial Chancellor should publicly announce in the United States the German war aims. He should without delay furnish explanation, and we cannot doubt that the German Government promptly will take all steps to obtain an explanation."

Vorwarts considers that Dr. Dernburg said nothing which was not justified by the Imperial Chancellor's speech at the beginning of the war, when Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg said that Germany wished to wage only a defensive war.

The Dortmund Arbeiter Zeitung has been placed under a preventive censorship for attacking those who favor the annexation of Belgium.

T. R.'S RETORT TO DERNBURG

Kaiser Invited Roosevelt to Dine, but So Did King George."

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—Although Secretary Bryan and other officials of the State Department said tonight that no official information had been received by the department confirming the report that the American oil steamer Gulflight had been torpedoed presumably by a German submarine, the concern of the Government over the possibility of serious international complications has been increased considerably. Coming so quickly after the action of the German Embassy in inserting in many American newspapers an advertisement warninging Americans not to take passage on transatlantic liners flying the British flag or the flag of any of Great Britain's allies, the torpedoing of the Gulflight is regarded with additional significance.

This Government will follow its usual course of waiting for official confirmation of the sinking of the American vessel before making any move. It is likely, however, that inquiries will be made of Ambassador Page at London if he does not make a report by tomorrow. The absence of President Wilson from Washington makes it impossible for any Government officer to say positively

LONDON, May 2.—The American oil tank steamer Gulflight, which sailed from Port Arthur, Texas, on April 10 for Rouen, France, was torpedoed at noon on Saturday off the Scilly Islands, according to a dispatch received today by the Central News Agency.

The Captain of the Gulflight, according to the same advices, died of heart failure as a result of shock. Two seamen jumped overboard and were drowned.

The other members of the crew were taken off by a patrol boat and landed. The vessel was towed into Crow Sound and beached.

PORT ARTHUR, Texas, May 2.—The torpedoing of the American tanker Gulflight off the Scilly Islands was confirmed today by General Manager Taber of the Gulf Refining Company, owner of the vessel. Mr. Taber said he had received a cable dispatch from First Officer R. E. Smith saying the vessel could be saved. He also said a British patrol boat was standing by the vessel.

Captain Alfred Gunter, C. G. Short, wireless operator, and one seaman are reported to have lost their lives. The operator and the seaman were drowned after jumping overboard. Captain Gunter died in one of the small boats, and it is believed his death was due to heart failure. The others of the crew were saved. First Officer Smith and Chief Engineer E. P. Butterworth live in Port Arthur. Smith is now in charge of the ship.

Felix Eysmans, clerk in the employ of the Gulf Company, was a passenger on the Gulflight, and it is reported that he was drowned. He was on his way to Paris to visit his father.

PITTSBURGH, May 2.—The tank steamer Gulflight, which was sunk off the Scilly Islands, left Port Arthur, Texas, on April 10, for Rouen, France, laden with 50,000 barrels of gasoline. She was due to arrive at Rouen today or tomorrow.

The Gulflight was built by the New York Shipbuilding Company at Camden, N. J., and was launched in August, 1914, for the Gulf Refining Company.

At the Pittsburgh office of the company it is believed that the ship carried a crew of thirty-five men. Wesley A. Looney of the Gulf Refining Company, received a message from England today confirming the torpedoing of the vessel.

what this new complication means to the United States. But it is an easy guess that the Government will regard the destruction of the Gulflight as the most serious incident that has arisen to affect the relations of the United States and any of the warring nations of Europe since the conflict began. The vigorous language employed by the State Department in protesting to the Government of Germany that the German war zone order, with its consequent submarine warfare, was likely to result in just such a case as now seems to have arisen, affords an inkling of the temper in which the Government will view the sinking of an American ship.

Expect Attacks on Liners.

Secretary Bryan and Robert Lansing, the Counselor of the State Department, declined tonight to comment on the Gulflight incident, but it is apparent that among Administration officers the belief prevails that the German submarine warfare is to be renewed in a more vigorous manner, and probably in a way that will endanger some of the great British passenger liners which are carrying large numbers of Americans to and from Europe.

This theory is based on the recent attitude of the German Government with reference to the shipment of arms, ammunition, and other supplies from the United States to Great Britain and France. The latest German complaints of this character have been extremely emphatic, and it is apparent that the German Government intends to take advantage of every opportunity to show resentment over the course of this Government in permitting such supplies to go to the Allies. In some quarters here it is believed that the advertisement of the German Embassy, which appeared in American newspapers yesterday, and which is to be repeated once a week for three weeks, was intended not merely as a warning to American travelers to remain at home, but as notice to this Government that the big passenger liners which carry large cargoes of American war munitions to Great Britain and France are to be made the victims of German submarines whenever possible.

In this connection it was pointed out tonight that the contention of the United States has always been, since the first German complaint on the subject, that it was for Germany and not the United States to prevent war munitions from reaching the Allies. But this Government has always been careful to insist that efforts to stop such shipments must be made only in accordance with the well-established principles of international law, and emphasis has been laid on the general agreement among nations that merchant vessels must not be destroyed until the vessel overtaking them has exercised the right of visit and search. This principle applies to the merchant ships of an enemy as well as the merchant ships of a neutral nation, the difference being that the enemy's ship is subject to capture without regard to the character of the cargo, whereas it is the character of the cargo that determines whether a neutral ship is immune from or liable to capture and possible destruction. The principle is so well established that when an enemy ship is captured or destroyed non-contraband cargo owned by the citizens of a neutral nation must receive pay from the Government whose war vessel confiscates or destroys these neutral goods.

May Be Like Frye Case.

Assuming that the Gulflight was blown up by a German submarine, a great deal will depend on the circumstances in the determination of the course to be taken by this Government. If the crew was permitted to take to the boats before the vessel was sent to the bottom, the case may assume the same status as that of the American sailing ship William P. Frye, which was sunk by the Prinz Eitel Friedrich last January. The commander of the Eeitel justified his action on the ground that the Frye contained a cargo of goods destined for British ports.

The German Government adopted the same argument in its response to the claim filed by the United States Government in behalf of the Frye's owner for the value of the vessel and loss on the transportation of the cargo, contending that the Frye, while her cargo was conditional contraband, was bound for an enemy fortified port. This claim was made prior to the transmission by this Government of a diplomatic note discussing the merits of the case. The United States is understood to have denied the German contentions concerning the necessity for sinking the Frye, although its note on the subject has not been made public. If it should turn out to be the fact that the Gulflight was attacked merely to prevent her cargo reaching a French port the German Government probably would set up a defense similar to that in the Frye case. The opinion was expressed in a high diplomatic quarter tonight that this would be the attitude adopted by Germany.

The Gulflight was loaded with oil. Certain classes of oil are conditional contraband, while others are absolute contraband. Fuel, which includes petroleum, is conditional contraband, while lubricating oils are absolute contraband. The Gulflight was bound for the French port of Rouen. In the Frye case the German Government asserted that as the Frye was bound for a fortified port of the enemy, the sinking was justified under the Declaration of London, which, however, is not recognized by other nations, including Great Britain and the United States. If Rouen is a fortified port, it appears to be certain that Germany will maintain that the sinking of the Gulflight, granted that the report is confirmed, is on all fours with that of the Frye and justified in the same manner.

Our War-Zone Protest.

In its order establishing a war zone in the waters contiguous to the British Isles, the German Government gave notice of its intention to sink enemy merchantships without exercising the right of visitation and search. This brought a vigorous protest from the Government of the United States, which warned Germany that the friendship between the two nations might be endangered if an American vessel were sunk by a German submarine or American passengers lost their lives through means of this sort employed by Germany. The language of this note was particularly vigorous and aroused resentment in Germany. In certain quarters in this country there was a disposition to criticise the Washington Government for employing rather strong terms in this note. By some critics it was said that the language of the American note was seldom employed except when a critical situation had arisen between two nations.

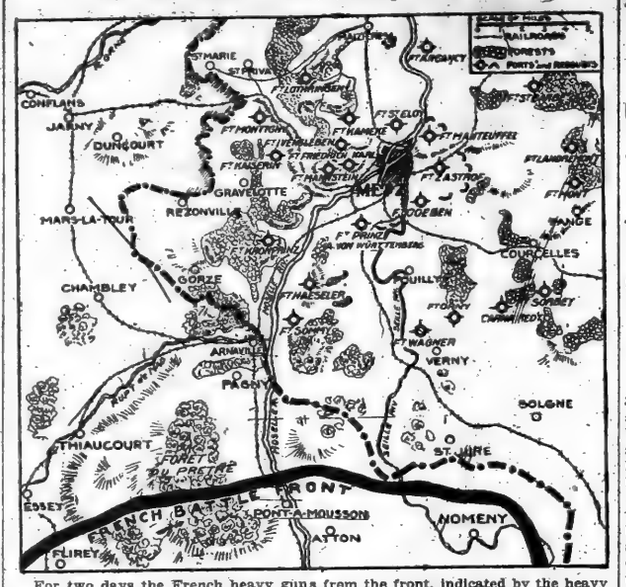
The defense for the use of this language was that it was necessary for the United States to make clear to Germany that the destruction of an American vessel, or the loss of lives of American passengers on a vessel of other nationality, might arouse public feeling in this country to such an extent that a crisis in the relations between Germany and the United States might arise. The Administration regarded it as wiser to sound the warning with all the emphasis possible before any such incident occurred, rather than to employ mild diction in the first instance and reserve to itself the use of more vigorous language after the damage had ben done and public opinion in this country was excited and possibly demanding redress against Germany.

If the Gulflight has been destroyed by a German submarine, that fact, in the opinion here, appears to justify the contention of Administration officials that the language used in the original warning to Germany did not go beyond the requirements of the occasion.

The life of one man believed to be an American citizen has already been lost through the German submarine warfare. He was Leon C. Thresher, whose relatives reside in Massachusetts. Mr. Thresher lost his life in the sinking of the British steamer Falaba early in April. As far as can be ascertained, the United States Government has made no representations to Germany in this case. The understanding here is that the Government is still engaged in an effort to ascertain definitely whether Thresher retained his American citizenship. With apparent realizatiton of the serious aspect of the Falaba incident, the German Government issued a statement on the subject, which gave reasons in justification of the destruction of the British vessel. It was said in this statement that a report from the submarine which sank the vessel had not been received by the German Government, but, according to trustworthy reports, the submarine had given the Falaba notice to put her passengers and crew into lifeboats, when other ships arrived on the scene, and, fearing that these were armed, "military necessity consequently forced the submarine to act quickly, which made granting of longer space of time and the saving of lives impossible."

In this same statement the German Government insisted that the responsibility for the loss of the Falaba rested on the British and not on the German Government. "The German Government," the statement read, "regrets sacrifices of human lives, but both

The Intrenched Camp of Metz.



For two days the French heavy guns from the front, indicated by the heavy black line, have been bombarding the southern fortifications (a little less than seven miles distant) of the German intrenched camp of Metz. These, in turn, are about six miles from Metz proper.

British ships and neutral passengers on board such ships were warned urgently and in time not to cross the war zone. Responsibility rests, therefore, with the British Government, which, contrary to international law, inaugurated commercial war against Germany, and, contrary to International law, has caused merchant ships to offer armed resistance."

MINES SANK TWO VESSELS.

But the Gulflight Is First American Ship to be Torpedoed.

Since the declaration of the "war zone" policy of the German Government, affecting the waters about the British Isles, two American ships have been sunk by mines in the North Sea, but the Gulflight is the first American vessel to be sunk by a torpedo.

On Feb. 20 the Evelyn, sailing from New York to Bremen with a cargo of cotton, struck a mine off the Dutch Coast. Inquiry established the fact that the Evelyn struck a floating mine, the nationality of which was left in dispute, although at the time of the explosion she was well within the field of mines sown by the Germans.

Two days later the Carib, formerly a Clyde Line boat, running between New York and Southern ports, struck a mine in the North Sea, off Nordeney, when bound from Savannah to Bremen with a cargo of cotton. Three men lost their lives in the of the boilers.

Following the destruction of the Carib the German Embassy in Washington issued a statement warning shipping for Germany to adhere to the route waters north of Scotland, which had been declared safe in the war decree of Nov. 15.

When the British ship Falaba was sunk by a German submarine on March 28, Leon C. Thrasher, an American, was among the 101 passengers wo were drowned.

WIFE OF CAPTAIN TOLD.

Mrs. Gunter Prostrated at Her Home in Bayonne.

News of the sinking of the steamship Gulflight and loss of her Captain reached Bayonne yesterday by the receipt of a telegram to Mrs. Gunter, wife of Captain Alfred D. Gunter, who lives at 162 West Fifth Street. The news so prostrated her that she could not see THE TIMES reporter who called at the house. A relative told him of the message, which had come an hour previously.

The chief officials at the office of the Gulf Refining Company at Bayonne were not on duty yesterday, but a clerk said he had heard of the loss of the Gulflight. The vessel was on her third voyage from that port to Europe with oil.

Captain Gunter was 52 years of age, and he was born in Bayonne. His title was Commodore Captain, and he had been with the Gulf Company ten years. He was formerly master of the tanker Oklahoma, which buckled and broke in half off Cape May, in the midst of a severe storm, in January, 1914. He was rescued, with seven of the crew of thirty-eight men, by the Hamburg-American liner Bavaria. The Booth Line steamship Gregory saved five others. The remainder were drowned.

AVOIDED A PITFALL IN WILHELMINA CASE

Course of the British Government Prevented a Precedent With Regard to Foodstuffs.

LONDON, April 13, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—Through the compromise with the owners of the cargo of the American steamship Wilhelmina the British Government avoids a court decision, which might have been extremely distasteful to Great Britain in future years. Had the prize court condemned the Wilhelmina's cargo, which was foodstuffs avowedly destined for the use of the civil population of Germany, Great Britain would have been on record as having made food to the civil population of a belligerent country absolute contraband, a position at direct variance with the policy of the country in the past.

Although Germany issued a proclamation under which the authorities took charge of all foodstuffs in the empire, the German Government nevertheless gave its pledge that it would not take over the Wilhelmina's cargo, and would permit American agents to give the food to the civil population.

When the Wilhelmina was reported at Falmouth nearly two months ago the vessel attracted marked attention because her cargo of food destined for Hamburg offered an opportunity to test the British policy on foodstuffs for the enemy. All suspected cargoes had been held up by Great Britain since the beginning of the war, and while food had not actually been allowed to proceed to Germany, the British Government had not gone on record as making foodstuffs absolute contraband.

The Wilhelmina sailed from America before Germany's policy of taking all foodstuffs under Government control had been promulgated. Consequently, the owners of the cargo were in an excellent position to make a successful fight for the admission of their goods to Germany, and the dilatory tactics of English officials made it clear from the first that they did not care to test the case in the courts. Consequently, the purchase of the cargo by the British Government at Hamburg prices under agreement to pay the owners what loss they have suffered as a result of the delay was the solution of the tangle which had been confidently expected by members of the Diplomatic Corps who had followed the negotiations.

WILSON WON'T COMMENT.

Told of Sinking While Returning by Train to Washington.

NEW HAVEN, May 2.—News of the torpedoing of the American steamer Gulflight off the Scilly Islands yesterday was communicated to President Wilson tonight on his special car, en route from Williamstown, Mass., to Washington.

He declined to make any comment.

Galveston Cargo in Prize Court.

BLYTH, England, May 2.—The Greek steamship Fotis, which sailed from Galveston and Norfolk three weeks ago bound for Rottaream, has been brought into Blyth in charge of a prize crew. It is stated that the vessel carries contraband.

DRIVE OFF FRENCH AT DARDANELLES

Turks Force the Asiatic Landing Party to Retire After Two Days.

ALLIES HALTED ELSEWHERE?

Constantinople Reports Their Left Wing Defeated and Many Munitions Captured.

ATHENS, May 2, (by Wireless to London, Monday, May 3.)—The French troops which landed on the Asia Minor side of the Dardanelles retired after a stubborn battle lasting two days.

CONSTANTINOPLE, May 2, (via London, May 3.)—The following official communication was issued today:

The left wing of the enemy was several times attacked by us the evening of May 1 from our positions near Gaba Tepe and driven back in a northerly direction toward Ari Burnu.

The enemy yesterday attempted an advance in order to avoid an effective flank fire by our artillery, but was driven back to his old positions by our bayonet attack.

During this operation we captured two machine guns and all the material and munitions landed by the enemy near Sedd-el-Bahr.

By reason of our artillery fire the enemy is in an untenable position.

The enemy's ships have taken no further action against the strait.

An enemy aeroplane flying over the sea near Alexandretta was damaged by our fire and fell into the sea.

LONDON, May 2.—A casualty list issued this evening by the British War Department shows that during the landing of British troops in the operations against the Dardanelles—that is, between April 25 and 30—twenty-six men of the British fleet were killed and fifty-three were wounded.

A dispatch from Athens to the Exchange Telegraph Company says it is learned from Mytilene that the landing of 4,000 French troops at Kum Kale, on the Asiatic side of the Dardanelles, last Sunday was executed for the exclusive purpose of facilitating the occupation by British troops of Sedd-el-Bahr, a town on the European side of the strait and at the southern extremity of the Gallipoli Peninsula.

As soon as these operations were completed the French, according to these advices, returned to their transports and proceeded for an unknown destination.

the torpedo boat with two small guns, and the Captain says the German was evidently hit, because steam was seen escaping from her. The wheelhouse and the funnel of the Barbados were riddled with shot.

TWO OTHER STEAMERS SUNK BY SUBMARINES

The Europe Shelled, Then Torpedoed, as Help Arrived—Captain of the Fulgent Shot.

LONDON, May 2.—In addition to the American steamer Gulf Light, two other vessels were reported today to have been sunk by German submarines. They were the French steamer Europe and the British steamer Fulgent.

The Europe, from aBrry for St. Nazaire with a cargo of coal, was torpedoed yesterday morning near Bishop Rock, and sank, says a dispatch to Lloyd's from Penzance. The crew was rescued by a steam drifter.

The submarine signaled the crew of the Europe to leave their ship. When they had done this the Germans shelled the steamer, which failed to sink. Meanwhile the skipper of the steam drifter Rosevine, attracted by the noise of the gun of the submarine, made an investigation, whereupon the submarine started to chase the Rosevine.

The Rosevine sent up distress rockets and was proceeding toward the Scilly Islands when a patrol boat, which previously had not been seen owing to the foggy weather, appeared. Together the patrol boat and the Drifter went back toward the Europe, at which the submarine was still firing with her gun. Half a mile off from the Europe the Rosevine picked up a boat loaded with members of the crew of the steamer. The work of rescue was interrupted by three shells from the submarine, which fell within thirty yards of the Drifter.

Then, apparently alarmed at the appearance of the patrol boat, the submarine torpedoed the Europe, which disappeared in a cloud of steam and coal dust.

The submarine carried no number.

The Fulgent was sunk northwest of the Skelling Rocks in the dark of yesterday morning, says a dispatch to Lloyds from Kilrush, Ireland.

A boat containing nine survivors and the body of the Captain of the steamer, who had been shot and killed, was picked up by a trawler, which landed the men at Kilrush. The trawler was unable to find the second boat of the Fulgent containing the remainder of the crew.

The steamer Fulgent was a vessel of 1,202 tons, and was built in 1910. She was owned by J. Westoll of Sunderland. The Skelling Rocks, near where she was sunk, lie off the southwest coast of County Kerry, Ireland.

There are three French steamers named Europe. Bishop's Rock, where the Europe was sent to the bottom, is one of the Scilly Islands, to the southwest of the main group.

FRENCH NOW HOLD MOUNTAIN TOP

Have Repelled All German Attacks Since Retaking Hartmannsweiler Last Monday.

TRENCHES 30 FEET APART

Sharpshooters Busy at Point-Blank Range—French Occupy Shell-Proof Shelters.

HARTMANNSWEILER, Alsace, April 30, (via Paris, May 2.)—Shells, great and small, fell upon this spur in the Vosges Mountains at the rate of from sixty to eighty-four a minute for hours last Monday after French mountaineers had carried the crest by assault.

Twice before had the Alpine troops won the summit of the mountain and been forced from it by obstinate German attacks. This time they clung to the craters made by mines and shells, and to the scant shelter of abandoned trenches and dugouts.

When the shell fire suddenly stopped and the Germans from their trenches below swept upward again the Alpine riflemen, supported and reinforced, were just able to throw back attack after attack.

The Germans persisted with the utmost courage, and the fighting after the first rushes was with the bayonet. Dead and wounded fell so thickly that the bodies touched one another. Presently the assaults died down and the Germans sank into their trenches on the slopes. They have remained there since, while day and night the French work at enlarging and deepening their trenches and digging and roofing in shell-proof shelters—organizing their position, as the French say.

This is the culmination of three months of violent efforts by one side to hold and by the other to take an eminence dominating the plain of Alsace.

Correspondent in the Trenches.

A correspondent of The Associated Press was with the French troops for one hour and a half this morning on the mountain top. Splintered and jagged stems of what were thick pine woods stand up among the boulders. The forest has been cut down by machine gun and shell fire. The whole place is scarred by the deadly business of the last three weeks. The ground is a plexus of trenches in which soldiers work with pick and shovel as close as they conveniently can, each man with his rifle within reach.

Sharpshooters on both sides snipe away through loopholes at any show of a hostile helmet or cap. Observers watch through crevices between stones or bags of sand concealed by pine branches. A periscope thrust above the trenches is shattered three or four seconds after its appearance.

The foremost points of the French position now are well roofed in with pine logs. Machine guns have been closely placed to sweep the approaches with crossfire.

The German trenches, in which no doubt the same deadly alertness prevails, are at one place within twenty-five or thirty feet, and at no place are they further away than 150 yards.

The Colonel in command took the correspondent to one of the forward observatories, and in whispers explained the position. The men standing by their pieces were taking morning bread and coffee. The instant readiness suggested a well-ordered fire engine house in an American city, where the men, at the sound of a gong, jump each to his place. The only gong here is the sharp call from trench to trench, at the sign of an attack, of "Alerte aux armes!" or perhaps there is only the bursting out of machine gun and rifle fire, with no word spoken.

Looking far beyond the German trenches to the plain below, which is sprinkled with villages and farmhouses, one can see a cherry orchard, now in full bloom. This is the country where kirschwasser (cherry brandy) is made. The landscape seems to be whitened by the tens of thousands of cherry trees in bloom. The murderous mountain warfare and the beautiful country spread out below it are in poignant contrast.

Peasants Peacefully at Work.

Through glasses one could see a row of women washing clothes in a creek, children playing about, and farmers working with oxen in the field. All the ordinary business of country life was going on as though this part of the 400-mile battle line was not at their front doors.

The men in the trenches, watching or lounging, digging or building, were quiet and weather-seasoned men. They talked simply, even with dignity, of their work, without any suggestion of having done anything extraordinary; with endless interest, confident in their power to take and hold.

One of the men cut open a loaf from a batch of German Army brown bread left behind by the late occupants of the trenches and compared it with the white French bread of his ration. Beef, preserved and cooked, in gelatine casings, is being served to part of the troops, and they apparently like it better than the American canned meats. Official reports have been made to the American War Department on the subject.

The forests in the rear of the fighting zone are astir with men cutting and sawing trees for roofing trenches. Others are widening the mountain paths into roads, along which wind strings of mules. They are sure-footed animals from the French and Spanish Pyrenés. They are loaded with shells for the 2½-inch mountain guns, ammunition boxes, bags of bread, casks of water and wine, and a thousand articles essential to operations in the forests. They also carry packages from home for the soldiers.

Passing down the other way are mule files with empty bags, casks, and boxes and with wounded soldiers swung each in a sort of basket chair, one on each side of a led mule. Those more seriously wounded are carried by stretcher men. Near here, in another part of the Vosges, Harvard ambulance men are working.

Paris papers two days old are delivered regularly, and the men and officers off duty in this rugged region read the gossip which circulates on the boulevards, and the same pleasantries are repeated.

Soldiers Expect a Long War.

The Associated Press correspondent was the first civilian who had visited this part of the battle front in months. Every one talked of a long war and even of another Winter in the trenches.

"Ah, yes," they said, "these Germans must take a lot of beating."

The only solution of the war from the soldiers' way of looking at it is to kill many more hundreds of thousands of their adversaries and to keep on killing and pushing them back. They feel in the Vosges that they are making positive gains at losses smaller than the ones they inflict.

The correspondent made the ascent of Hartmannsweiler with a staff officer and Lieut. Jean Rochambeau, a great-grandson of the Marshal Rochambeau who fought in the American Revolution. French and German batteries far in the rear of their respective trenches began exchanging shells in a leisurely manner as the visitors left the line of fire. Remotely on the right was a deep detonation, which an artillery officer remarked was that of a mine exploding. The rifles of sharpshooters continued to crack irregularly. Labor in the trenches of digging and hewing went on without rest. Near the downward trail a soldier was putting a bunch of wild flowers on the grave of a comrade.

Contradictory reports as to the possession of Hartmannsweilerkopf (probably due to its successive occupation by Germans and French) have been received from Berlin and Paris for days past. The foregoing dispatch makes it apparent that the French, now in command of the position, have held it since their successful assault of Monday, April 26. The British official bulletin of that date announced its recapture, and a Paris communique of April 27 told of its falling again into French hands.

As dispatches from the Vosges frequently reach Paris and Berlin a day late, both the Berlin and Paris bulletins in question may have been in accordance with the facts, the latter referring to the successful French assault described by The Associated Press correspondent.

HITS AMERICAN CONTRACTS.

French Deputy's Bill Calls for Revision of Those with Government.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, May 2.—A new law concerning Government contracts proposed by Deputy Henri Connevot, on the Socialist side of the Chamber, may prove a regular bombshell for certain American business men should Parliament act upon it favorably.

The law provides for complete revision by a board of arbitration of all contracts for supplies concluded to date by the Government. Secondly, power is given to the board to take criminal proceedings. Thirdly, all bargains to date below $1,000 are to be subject to a retroactive tax, the base of the percentage progressing according to the amount—even in cases where the board considers the bargain satisfactory. Where the board is not satisfied as to the price or quality of the goods, it is empowered to reduce the price or to quash the bargain entirely.

Commenting on the project editorially, the Temps says it is extremely improbable that the law will pass because it is far too sweeping and involved inextricable confusion. But the proposal of the Allies is symptomatic of a widespread feeling that some Government contracts are highly unsatisfactory.

It is probable that further efforts will be made to cancel the worst of these.

RIBOT VISITS LLOYD GEORGE

Finance Ministers Adjust Financial Questions in Entire Accord.

LONDON, May 2.—At the French Embassy in London it was announced today that Alexandre Ribot, the French Minister of Finance, had returned to Paris after spending three days in London conferring with David Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer.

The two statesmen discussed various financial questions, particularly the advances to be made to the allied countries and the payments to be made to England, Canada, and the United States for purchases made by the French Government.

A perfect understanding, the embassy statement said, exists between the Finance Ministers of the allied powers.

WILL FIGHT TO A FINISH.

French Agree with Dr. Eliot's Conclusion as Given in His Book.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, May 2.—The evening papers give extracts from Dr. Eliot's book, "The Road Toward Peace." His conclusion that the war is likely to continue until one side is beaten finds general acceptance here as representing the universal determination to fight to a finish.

The press constantly devotes editorials to alleged German desire for peace, which all agree is simply one more reason for the Allies to continue the war.

PRISONER SHOT IN CANADA.

Austrian Made Dash for Liberty While Bound for Detention Camp.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTREAL, May 2.—As prisoners bound for the Spirit Lake prison camp were being marched to the Windsor Street station last night to embark on the 9 o'clock train one of them made a sudden breakaway and ran down Osborne Street.

He was ordered to halt, but failed to obey, and was shot by one of the sentries while close to the entrance of the freight entrance. The bullet went through his right lung, and he died fifteen minutes after arriving at the General Hospital. His name was John Hauzsk, and he hailed from Austria. He was about 35 years of age.

DROP BOMBS ON EPINAL.

German Airmen Do Little Damage to That and a Near-by Town.

PARIS, May 2.—German aeroplanes, doubtless in reply to the recent French air attacks on Friedrichshafen, today bombarded various towns of Eastern France.

Four machines flew over Epinal, the capital of the French Department of Vosges, this morning and dropped twenty incendiary bombs. No one was hurt. The only damage was two small fires.

The aeroplanes possibly were the same that visited Remiremont, sixteen miles southeast of Epinal. At that place a squadron of French aeroplanes rose to meet the raiders, and the Germans turned toward their own frontier.

GASES WEAKENED GERMAN CHARGES

British 'Eyewitness' Says Many of Their Infantry Were Affected and Unable to Fight.

DESCRIBES YPRES BATTLES

Heavy Losses in Open Fighting—Heroic Work of British Aviator and Machine Gun Company.

LONDON, May 2.—That the Germans used asphyxiating gases not only on the first day of the battle of Ypres, but repeatedly afterward, and that many of their infantry were affected and unable to join in the charges is declared by the British "eyewitness" in his story of the latest stages of the battle.

The turning point in the battle, he says, came on the afternoon of April 26, when, after the Germans had delivered a number of fierce assaults and had pierced the allied lines near Brookseinde, a strong combined counter attack was carried out by the French and British along the whole front, from Steenstraate to St. Julien. This caused a definite check to the German offensive, relieved the pressure and gained a certain amount of ground.

"During this counter-attack," says the chronicler, "the guns concentrated by both sides on this comparatively narrow front poured in a great volume of fire. From the right came the roar of the British batteries; from the left the rolling thunder of the 'Soixante-Quinze,' (French 7.5 centimeter gun,) and every now and then, above the turmoil, rose a dull boom, as a huge howitzer shell burst in the vicinity of Ypres.

"On the right our infantry stormed the German trenches close to St. Julien, and in the evening gained the southern outskirts of the village. In the centre they captured trenches a little to the south of the Bois des Cuisiniers, west of St. Julien, and still farther west more trenches were taken. This represented an advance of some 600 or 700 yards, but the gain in ground could not at all points be maintained.

Fall Back at St. Julien.

"Opposite St. Julien we fell back from the village to a position just south of the place, and in front of the Bois des Cuisiniers, and on the left of the line a similar retirement took place.

"The enemy made extensive use of his gas cylinders and machine guns placed in farms and at other points of vantage. None the less, the situation at nightfall was more satisfactory than it had been. We were holding our own well all along the line, and had made progress at some points. On the right, the enemy's attacks on the front of Gravenstafel Ridge had all been repulsed.

"In the meantime the French had achieved some success, having retaken Lizerne and also the trenches around Het Sas, captured some 250 prisoners, and made progress all along the west bank of the canal.

"Heavy as our losses were during the day, there is little doubt that the enemy suffered terribly. Both sides were attacking at different points, the fighting was conducted very largely in the open, and made close formations of the Germans on several occasions presented excellent targets to our artillery, which did not fail to seize its opportunities."

The eyewitness describes briefly another counter-attack on the 27th, and adds:

"But the situation remained very much as it had been on the previous day. The Germans doubtless were much encouraged by their initial success, and their previous boldness in attack was now matched by the stubborn manner in which they clung to their positions."

After that the Germans did not interfere with the Allies, which, says the chronicler, "was not surprising, in view of the fact that they had been fighting for over five days."

Heroic British Aviator.

Paying tribute to the work of the aviators, he particularly mentions an unnamed airman, who lost his life in a raid on Courtral. "The aviafor," says the writer, "started on the enterprise alone in a biplane. On arriving at Courtral he glided down to a height of 300 feet, and dropped a large bomb on the railway junction. While he did this he was the target of a hundred rifles and machine guns and of anti-aircraft armament, and was severely wounded in the thigh.

"Although he might have saved his life by at once coming down in the enemy's lines, he decided to save his machine at all costs, and made for the British lines. Descending to a height of only 100 feet, in order to increase his speed, he continued to fly, and was again wounded—this time mortally. He still flew on, however, and, without coming down at the nearest of our aerodromes, went all the way back to his own base, where he executed a perfect landing and made his report. He died in a hospital not long afterward."

Mention is also made of a machine gun detachment who kept their gun in action until all were dead or wounded.

"The gun was stationed in an angle of the trench," says the eyewitness. "When the German rush took place one man after another of the detachment was shot, but the gun still continued in action, although five bodies lay around it.

"When the sixth man took the place of his fallen comrades, of whom one was his brother, the Germans still pressing on, he waited until they were only a few yards away, and then poured a stream of bullets on the advancing ranks, which broke and fell back, leaving rows of dead. He was then wounded himself."

CANADA'S YPRES LOSS MAY REACH 5,500

Five Hundred Known to Be Dead, 2,000 Missing—New Casualty List.

Special to The New York Times.

OTTAWA, Ontario, May 2.—Private advices received from London today indicate that the total Canadian casualties at the battle of Ypres were 5,500. About 500 are known to have been killed and about 2,000 are missing.

The totals given would indicate that more than one-fourth of the 21,000 men in the division were put out of action.

The Canadian official eye-witness reported the two battalions of Highlanders left behind in the fighting at St. Julien.

"The German line," the eye-witness said, "rolled over the deserted village, but for several hours after the enemy had become master of the village sulien and persistent rifle fire showed they were not yet master of the Canadian rear guard."

As Berlin reported 1,000 Canadian prisoners, it is feared here that 1,000 of these rear guards were killed before exhaustion of ammunition compelled the detachment to yield.

OTTAWA, May 2.—Forty-six casualties among the officers in the Canadian contingent at the front are reported in today's list issued by the Militia Department. The list includes the names of 11 men dead, 15 missing, 1 dead of his wounds, 3 wounded and missing, 14 wounded, 1 sick with fumes, and 1 dangerously ill. The list follows:

Killed.

GERMANS TRIPLY "DUG IN."

Have Three Sets of Trenches Every Eight Miles in Belgium.

Roy Howard, General Manager of The United Press, returned yesterday from Europe on the American liner Philadelphia, after visiting the German trenches on the Belgian frontier. He said that it would be extremely difficult for the Allies to drive the Germans out of Belgium, as they were intrenched in triple lines, with barbed-wire entanglements in front. These sets of three trenches are to be seen every eight miles.

The Belgian boys, Mr. Howard said, had become so indifferent to warfare that he saw some of them playing ball within 100 yards of the line of battle, where shells were whistling through the air.

DUTCH IN PEACE PARADE.

Soldiers and Civilians Unite in Big Celebration at Amsterdam.

LONDON, May 2.—A Reuter dispatch from Amsterdam says that this year's May Day celebration there took the form of a huge peace demonstration. Between 30,000 and 40,000 men, women, and children participated in it. In the crowds were several hundred soldiers in full uniform, many of them carrying red flags with inscriptions expressing a desire for peace.

The people marched through the principal thoroughfares, passed the palace, and finally held a great outdoor meeting.

ARABS BETRAY ITALIANS.

Irregulars Go Over to Rebels in Battle, but Column Saves Itself.

TRIPOLI, (via Paris,) May 2.—The Italian commander, Colonel Miani, with a mixed column, which included numerous irregulars, attacked a rebel camp south of Syrta on April 29.

The irregulars went over to the enemy at the beginning of the engagement, placing the Italian troops in a critical position. By dint of hard fighting, however, they extricated themselves and got back to the fort, but with severe losses.

Now comes a new method of filing

For years and years—ever since the first filing cabinet was made—there has been endless discussion as to the superiority of the Alphabetic and Numeric methods of filing. Each had—and has—its advocates; each its critics.

Now comes a new method of filing that combines the advantages of both the old methods; and has other advantages of its own.

It is called the "Automatic Index." Because it indexes itself, automatically.

With the L. B. Automatic Index it is easy to file letters correctly. It provides a check against errors. That, perhaps, is the best thing about it—the feature that sets it apart from any and all other filing methods.

"Vertical Filing" sent on request—the best book on filing ever written.

SUPPRESS GERMAN PAPERS.

Published Article on Peace Agitation of International Socialists.

How the German Government treats those Social Democrats who attempt to make good the international agitation for peace is shown by the suppression of the Essen Arbeiterzeitung, the Bergische Arbeiterstimme, and the Remscheider Arbeiterzeitung, for publishing an article written by the Social Democratic Reichstag delegate, Eduard Bernstein.

The order of suppression as made known to the Bergische Arbeiterstimme by General von Gayl, Acting Commander of the Seventh Army Corps at Munster, is printed in a recent issue of the Social Democratic central organ Vorwärts. It reads:

"In No. 76 of your paper of March 31, you published an article of Eduard Bernstein, entitled 'What It Depended Upon.' In the article there is a demand that the Social Democratic parties in the belligerent States should unite in order to insist upon peace; there is further a passage in which can be found the appeal to the soldiers who are members of the Social Democratic Party not to fire upon their opponents. Both expressions are calculated to incite to treason, and cannot be tolerated in the interests of the safeguarding of the internal peace and of our war administration.

"Unwilling as I am to take measures for the suppressing of newspapers, and gladly as I would have avoided such a step, after the conversations held with the editorial heads of the Social Democratic newspapers of my corps districts, and above all after the written declaration which you gave to the General Commander's office Jan. 22, I cannot in this case take it upon myself to fail to take rigorous steps against such declarations that are fraught with direct danger for the Fatherland.

"I therfore find myself obliged to suspend your newspaper for the next three numbers (daily editions.) The police authorities have been notified of this decree. In publishing the same you will have to refrain from any comment.

NO BELGIAN MEAT FAMINE.

Hamburger Nachrichten Denies That the Supply Will Be Exhausted.

Possibilities of a shortage of meat in Belgium are now limited to the next two months, according to the Hamburger Nachrichten of April 10, which says:

"The Belgian population is still unable to reassure itself about the question whether some fine day it will not be exposed to famine. Recently prophets of evil have predicted a shortage of bread and the disappearance of the meat supply. Those more familiar with the conditions have deprecated such exaggeration. A Belgian, whose position entitles him to express an opinion that may be regarded as authoritative, now speaks words of reassurance.

"Herr de Loyck, director of the abattoir at Curghem, who provides most of the meat for the Belgian capital, writes that the rumors of a meat shortage are exaggerated. Belgium, he says, must indeed pass through three hard months, April, May, and June, for the meat supply is furnished chiefly from East Flanders, and no shipments are for the time being possible from this war area. But Holland, he writes, is in a position to deliver meat from its own ample supplies.

"Herr de Loyck emphatically opposes a final wholesale slaughter of the Belgian cattle on hand. He thinks that the country, outside of the battle area, has sufficient pasturage to furnish the necessary green fodder. The expert concludes with the comforting assurance: 'We shall have to fight through three hard months, but in July conditions will already vastly improve, and then all conditions will again be normal.'"

RUSSIANS ATTACK NORTH AND SOUTH

Great Battle Developing on the Plain of Rawa, the Gateway Through Western Poland.

COURLAND RAID UNCHECKED.

Germans Penetrate Into the Region Southwest of Mitau—Austrians Report Carpathian Successes.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, May 2, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—Along the Carpathians the Russians have resumed the initiative. They gained an important tactical success on Friday when on the topmost heights overlooking the pass on the road from Stryi to Munkacz they captured some mountain guns.

The army of Archduke Joseph Ferdinand, which the Russians defeated two months ago at Stanislau, has now been brought round to the northwest of Hungary, below the Dukla Pass, covering the retreat of the Austrians from the Beskids.

The Austrians also have been forced back somewhat from Gorlice, but they have enormous artillery there and along the Nida, covering Cracow.

There also has been a very heavy exchange of artillery fire in the region of Rawa, which is the centre and only open gateway through Western Poland. This front, which is flat country between Rawa and the Pilitca, is beginning to develop into a great battlefield, where the Germans are resisting the Russian advance westward.

The first round of the bitter contest between Field Marshal von Hindenburg and General Alexeyeff for the initiative in the northern campaign is turning in favor of the Russians. On Friday they drove the German infantry in North Poland back upon their rear trenches below the Mazurian Lakes with immense losses, caused mostly by a Russian crossfire as the Germans retreated through the villages. The streets of the town of Seraenhina were covered with dead and wounded.

German Patrols Near Liban.

PETROGRAD, May 2.—The following official communication was issued tonight:

Detachments of the enemy occupy the region of Szawle, (Shavli, seventy-seven miles northwest of Kovno.) German patrols appeared May 1 near Liban. The same day hostile torpedo boats visited the Gulf of Riga.

West of the Niemen engagements continue. At the village of Tayenko, on the right bank of the River Netta, an entire company of a German line regiment surrendered.

In Galicia on the night of the 30th strong Austrian forces opened an offensive in the region of Ciezkowice. Our fire forced the enemy to retire 600 paces from before our trenches.

In the Carpathians the same night we repulsed Austro-German attacks in the vicinity of Golovetzko and Senetchouw.

German Raiders Go Far.

BERLIN, May 2, (via London.)—German troops in pursuit of retreating Russian forces have penetrated into the region lying to the southwest of Mitau, the capital of Courland, according to the German official statement issued by the Army Headquarters Staff today. Mitau is twenty-five miles southwest of the Russian seaport of Riga, which is the seat of Government of the Baltic provinces. The text of the statement follows:

Our operations in Northwestern Russia are progressing. Near Szawle (Shavli) we captured 400 more Russians. Pursuing the flying Russians, the German vanguard reached the region to the southwest of Mitau.

The Russians made an attack in the region of Kalwaria, (on the East Prussian frontier,) but were repulsed with heavy losses. Three hundred Russians were made prisoners.

VIENNA, May 2, (via London.)—This official communication was issued today:

In Russian Poland the enemy has been repulsed in some sectors of our advanced positions, our troops reaching the wire entanglements at the principal points.

On the west Galician front of the Carpathians the artillery has been active.

On the heights between Orawa and the Opord Valley we repelled heavy attacks by the Russians and captured 200 prisoners. Afterwards we proceeded to attack a strong Russian point east of the height of Ostry, and took several hundred Russian prisoners and machine guns.

In Southeast Galicia and Bukowina there is no change in the situation.

NURSES HERE FROM SERBIA.

Eight with Dr. C. P. King Sent Home to Recuperate from Typhus.

Dr. Clapham P. King, who left here last September for Serbia with two small Red Cross units, consisting of six surgeons and twelve nurses, returned yesterday on the Fabre liner Patria, accompanied by eight nurses from Gievigliia, on the frontier of Greece and Serbia, where the typhus epidemic has been raging.

Dr. King said that the party had been ordered to come home to have a rest, as all of them, including himself, had been down with typhus in a mild form. Out of the six surgeons four had contracted typhus fever, and of these two, Donnelly and Magrueder, had died. The remaining surgeons had been removed from Gievigliia to Belgrade with four nurses, where they are working with the Serbian Red Cross.

Dr. King said that conditions were a little improved before they left, owing to the arrival of fresh supplies, including drugs, linen, disinfectants, water filters, &c. The Serbians were panic-stricken at the ravages made by the typhus, and were useless as aids except to bury the dead, which was done in trenches.

One of the Red Cross nurses on the Patria, who was in Belgrade when the Austrians captured the city, and remained there until they were driven out again, said that the report of typhus fever being brought into Serbia by Austrian soldiers was amply proved during her stay there. On one occasion 60,000 wounded Austrians were dumped down in Belgrade and left by the roadside in a shocking condition. The Red Cross worked with the Austrian doctors and nurses on instructions from the United States Ambassador at Vienna, she said.

There were also five Red Cross nurses on the Patria who had been serving at the base hospitals in France.

PICTURE SALE FOR WAR AID.

Sketches of French Children for French Sufferers' Fund.

Miss Anna Milo Upjohn, the artist, has presented a number of her works to be sold for the benefit of destitute women and children of France. The pictures are of children of France, and particularly of Brittany. They were sketched from life by Miss Upjohn when she was abroad several months ago, and show the children in all the picturesqueness of their costumes and environments.

Fourteen of these pictures were given originally by Miss Upjohn, and five of them, ranging in price from $10 to $25, were sold immediately after being put on display. The other nine are said to be unusually attractive and interesting. The pictures may be seen at the Ralston Gallery, 567 Fifth Avenue.

BONSALL SAW FIGHTING.

Came from Manila by Way of Suez Canal and Germany.

Stephen Bonsall, Secretary to Gov. Gen. Harrison of the Philippines, arrived here yesterday from Manila on leave of absence on the steamship Patria, via the Suez Canal and Marseilles. He said that when he arrived at Suez in March on the steamship Perseus, a battle was being fought between the British and Turkish forces, and that his ship was tied up for forty-eight hours at the pier. The docks were protected with sandbags piled several feet high, and the soldiers built a barrier in front of the ship. The naval officer in charge told Mr. Bonsall that he would act on his own responsibility in going through the canal, which he did after the fighting was over.

Mr. Bonsall said he visited Germany on his way home, and was the guest of Field Marshal von Hindenburg in the eastern theatre of war for ten days. In that time, he said, he saw the Russians driven back in two engagements. His position with the Government prevented him from commenting on the war, he said.

DRINK EVIL ROUSES BRITISH NAVY HEADS

Sir John Jellicoe and Others Express Alarm Over the Conduct of Shipyard Workers.

CALL FOR PROHIBITION

Fleet Commander and Third Sea Lord Urge the Admiralty to Take Prompt Action.

LONDON, May 2.—The serious effect that drink is having on the repairs to the warship and transport services and in the output of munitions is disclosed in reports from firms and officers throughout the country, which were published tonight in the form of a White Paper.

Vice Admiral Sir John R. Jellicoe, Commander in Chief of the Home Fleets, and all the officers responsible for the navy are of the opinion that the short hours worked by the men in private yards is due to drink. They describe conditions as deplorable and urge on the Government the necessity of adopting the total prohibition of alcoholic drinks or restrictions on the sale of intoxicants.

The slackness of the men, it is alleged, is due to the fact that they are earning more money than usual, and that while they have any to spend they will not work. Sunday work is condemned, on the ground that the double wages earned that day lead the men to lie off two days during the week.

Vice Admiral Jellicoe, in a letter to the Admiralty on the subject, says:

"I am very uneasy about the labor situation in the Clyde and the Tyne. I sent a telegram or two lately about it," the Admiral adds. "You may think I am exceeding my sphere of action in doing so, but the efficiency of this fleet is so affected by it that I felt it my duty to wire today.

"An officer in a responsible position has arrived here and his account of things on the Clyde is most disquieting. He said the men refused altogether to work on Saturday afternoon; that they took Wednesday afternoon off every week, if not the whole of Wednesday, and worked on Sunday because they got double pay for it. He said also that they only worked in a half-hearted manner.

"My destroyer dockings and refits are delayed in every case by these labor difficulties, and they take twice as long as they need to. I feel you ought to know the facts, and so I put them before you."

Rear Admiral Frederick C. Tudor, Third Sea Lord, supplies a statement showing the effect of excessive drinking on the output of work as regards shipbuilding, repairs, and munitions of war, which is being carried out by contract for the Admiralty. Admiral Tudor says:

"Briefly the position is that now, while the country is at war, the men are doing less work than would be regarded as an ordinary week's work under normal peace conditions. Thus the problem is not how to get the workmen to increase their normal peace output, but how to get them to do an ordinary week's work of fifty-one or fifty-three hours, as the case may be.

"The reasons for the loss in time no doubt are various, but it is abundantly clear that the most potent reason is the facilities which exist for the men to obtain beer and spirits, with a high rate of wages and abundance of employment. Opinion on this point is practically unanimous."

Urge Drastic Action.

During the first week of March Admiral Tudor says, 135 fitters employed on submarine engine works did the on submarine engine work did the twenty-eight men. Other incidents are given which show that a large amount of lost time is general throughout the country.

Letters received from shipbuilders and officers superintending work for the Admiralty are quoted by Admiral Tudor. These complain of the drinking habits of the men and urge either total prohibition, martial law, or the restriction of the hours in which drink may be obtained.

The Captain-Superintendent of the Clyde says in his report:

"In the shipyards last week, where a warship was under repair, the work on the inner bottom of the ship was so badly carried out as to suggest at once on inspection that it could not have been done by men who were sober. It was dangerous and had to be condemned."

Captain Clement Greatorex, Director of Naval Equipment, in his report says:

"The condition of labor is deplorable, and the men are in a most uncertain and undependable state. This is so serious that at any time the whole of the shipbuilding work on the Tyne may come to a standstill."

The Director of Transport reported that transport work was being conducted under serious difficulties.

"The workmen," the director said, "rapidly are becoming absolutely out of hand. Yesterday the crew of a transport deserted. The same thing happened the day before. Firemen go aboard the transports drunk, making it impossible to get up a full head of steam, thus greatly reducing the speed and endangering the lives of thousands of troops by making the vessels targets for submarines. The root and cause for the serious congestion at some of the docks is not the shortage of labor, but the fact that the men can earn in three days what will keep them in drink for the rest of the week.

"What is wanted, in addition to proper control of the drink traffic, is a well-devised scheme, promptly applied; to bring seamen, naval and other workmen in the Government employ under military discipline.

Calls for Prohibition.

"In many cases it is now taking three times as long to get ships fitted and ready to sail as it did when the war broke out.

"Expedition is a thing of the past, and it is obvious that this may at any moment have a disastrous effect on the naval and military operations. In my opinion, measures are necessary to withdraw all licenses to sell intoxicating liquors throughout the country."

Statistics have been issued, contrasting the work in private yards with that in the Government yards. During the week ended April 24 78 per cent. of the men worked sixty hours or over in the Government yards, and only 5 per cent. worked less than the normal forty-eight hours per week. The statistical material supplied by the Shipbuilding Employers' Federation shows that of the ironworkers 493 men out of every thousand are working less than forty-five hours a week.

"The evidence is overwhelming," says the report, "that the main cause for this alarming loss of time is the lure of drink."

During four weeks, the report continues, 670,000 hours' work was avoidably lost in the shipyards.

Reports received from armament firms describe the situation in their plants as not so serious as that in the shipyards.

ATLANTIC CITY STRAWS OUT.

Boardwalk Gay with Summer Finery for Sunday Parade.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., May 2.—Ten thousand straw hats, the season's first crop; big "Jack" Curley, the fight promoter, in white flannels; ball-playing, bathing girls on the sand, hosiery shows on the wooden way and in pavilions, a real circus encampment at the Inlet, with jaded elephants taking their annual surf plunge, and a gay throng, near 100,000 strong, lent fanciful touches to May's first Sunday at the shore.

The turnout on the boardwalk included many college girls in the trim blue or check, "made-in-America" walking suits that dominate the Spring fashions. Green parasols and purple gowns, and diaphanous frocks of clinging white silk were seen to advantage in a weather setting for the morning show that was perfect.

Among the notables registering at the hotels were a score of national legislators from Washington.

MUCH VEAL SPLITS FAMILY.

Husband, Defending Suit, Says It Was Served Four Days Running.

Sick at heart and of stomach because of too much veal served to him by his wife, William Krack, a dealer in clothing, raised a row in his home, at 469 Evergreen Avenue, Brooklyn, and his wife, affrighted, ran into the street and called for the police. Later she sued for separation, alleging cruelty, and asked the Supreme Court to allow her alimony. Justice Weeks refused because she had tied up the money at the bank, where it was deposited in the joint names of herself and her husband. Krack explained how it happened. He said:

"On the Saturday preceding April 6 the plaintiff bought a large quantity of veal and kept it in the house until Sunday, when it was cooked and partly eaten for dinner. On Monday night the veal was warmed over for dinner. Tuesday noon the same veal was presented in fricassee form. Tuesday night the fricassee again appeared warmed over, and as a result of the defendant's endeavor to eat the veal he was taken violently ill during the night, and plaintiff ministered to him.

"Notwithstanding the defendant's bad condition, on Wednesday the veal was again presented to the defendant in the form of meat balls. The defendant was sick at heart as well as at his stomach when the veal was again placed before him for Wednesday's supper, in the form of warmed-over meat balls, and with patience and mild submission entirely exhausted, the defendant did seize the platter of veal meat, balls and all, and threw them into the coal scuttle."

Then it was, according to Krack, that his wife ran screaming to the street. He says he did not strike his wife.

SHOT DEAD BY BURGLAR.

Dr. C. C. Ferrell, Alabama Educator Killed—Two Negroes Captured.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 2.—Dr. Chiles Clifton Ferrell, President of the West Pratt Mining Company, and a noted Southern author and educator, was killed by a burglar with a shotgun early today at Praco, a mining camp near here.

Bloodhounds were put on the trail, and two hours later two negroes were captured about a mile from the camp. One of the men had a shotgun.

Dr. Ferrell was born in 1850 at Greenville, S. C., and educated at Vanderbilt, the University of Leipzig, and the University of Paris. For many years he was Professor of Modern Languages at the University of Mississippi. He is survived by a widow and two children.

Mr. Burton Off to Buenos Aires.

SANTIAGO, Chile, May 2.—Former United States Senator Theodore E. Burton left here today for Buenos Aires after a stay of several days in Santiago gathering information that will aid in the forming of closer relations between the United States and the republics of Latin America.

NEW MOVE BY PEARSON.

Wants Alleged Shrapnel Castings Shown in Pending Suit.

Special to The New York Times.

MILWAUKEE, May 2.—Developments are expected to come fast in the next two years in the suit filed here by which General Samuel Pearson, the ex-Boer leader, is trying to stop, by charging conspiracy to murder, all shipments of munitions by the Allis-Chalmers Company to the Allies. Tomorrow the compan, will be served with papers ordering the bringing into court at Wednesday's hearing of samples of the castings which are being furnished for the Bethlehem Steel Company, for determination as to their character.

Genarl Pearson is said to be acting under some sort of secret commission from the German Government. The proceedings here will be essentially different from those instituted by General Pearson at the time of the Boer war, when he tried to stop exports of mules, according to his counsel, Henry F. Cochems. Mr. Cochems says the mule suit was thrown out of court as a political case. The suit here is under the State law to prevent conspiracy to commit murder.

Steel castings made at the Allis-Chalmers plant are alleged by General Pearson to be used in making shrapnel. The subpoena ordering the castings to be produced followed this statement by General Otto H. Falk, President of the Allis-Chalmers concern:

"We received a big order for parts of steel castings, which we shipped to the Bethlehem Company. They turn out the complete castings, and we have no knowledge of what the final product is. For all we know they may be using them for locomotives or anything else besides munitions of war."

Nothing was made public today regarding the working out of the plans of General Pearson, who left Milwaukee Friday for Chicago, and possibly Pittsburgh, with the reported object of beginning an action similar to that started here, in which the Bethlehem Steel Company of Pennsylvania would be made a defendant. It is rumored that the new suit may be brought in the United States courts.

HOLDS CHURCH FACES CRISIS

Bishop Greer Issues Pastoral Letter on War Situation.

In the Cathedral of St. John the Divine and in all Episcopal churches yesterday a pastoral letter was read from Bishop Greer. Most of the Episcopal rectors made the substance of the letter the basis for their sermons. The argument is that because of the war the Christian Church on all names is facing a critical situation, and that it must arouse and prepare itself to meet it, or acknowledge failure.

The Bishop set Whitsunday, May 23, as a day of praying and giving. There is a campaign to collect $400,000 for general work under Episcopal Church authority. Bishop Greer said that New York was not doing its share, and had not done so for some years.

JAPAN MORE HOPEFUL.

Believed That Concessions Should Win Chinese.

TOKIO, Saturday, May 1, (Delayed.)—It is generally believed in Tokio that the negotiations in progress at Peking between China and Japan have entered a distinctly hopeful stage as a result of the decision of the Japanese Government to make important concessions in its demands on China.

Japan, it is learned, has agreed to restore to China the German concession of Kiao-Chow if China will accept the Japanese amended demands. Japan has abandoned the clause in the fifth group of the demands, which relates to the Chinese police administration, and the clause dealing with armaments is changed by leaving for future consideration whether a Japanese arsenal shall be established in China, or whether munitions shall be purchased in Japan.

The question of China's granting to Japan the right to build railways in Southern China has been postponed, pending discussions between the Japanese Government and the Government of other interested powers.

A Peking dispatch, under date of May 2, said that at the conference in Peking on Saturday the Chinese Government definitely had refused to accept some of the clauses embodied in what is known as Group V of the Japanese demands. The conference terminated with neither the Japanese nor the Chinese asking for another meeting.

VILLA TURNS BACK OBREGON'S ADVANCE

advance toward the north, although the decisive battle is yet to be fought.

The telegram from General Villa, which brought the later advices covering yesterday's fighting, stated that the forces of Obregon's army, which had advanced as far as Leon, had been driven southwest of Trinidad to the Hacienda de Romita. The Villistas have now advanced as far as Trinidad, eight miles southeast of Leon, on the railroad running southward from Aguascalientes to Irapuato.

The severe character of the fighting, according to these dispatches, is indicated by the loss of more than 800 dead by the Carranzistas in the battles that have been in progress since Friday.

The Carranza agency here was silent tonight on the Villa-Obregon campaign beyond the statement that General Obregon was in the vicinity of Leon. Tonight's message from General Villa to Señor Llorente read:

"I beg to advise you that our troops yesterday engaged the enemy for almost four hours with complete success. Our losses were 20 dead and 30 wounded. The enemy was driven out to Hacienda de Romita. We inflicted upon the enemy a loss of more than 200 killed, and captured four machine guns and other munitions of war. The enemy has lost in these last fights more than 800 dead and many wounded, eight machine guns, and much war material.

"In the burning of a storage house near Trinidad, many Carranzistas perished, among them, it is reported, General Francisco Murguia. Fresh cavalry troops have arrived at Trinidad to relieve those who have been engaged and afford them some rest. These fresh troops are commanded by General José Rodriguez. In the engagements we had up to this time neither our infantry nor our artillery have been obliged to participate. We are receiving ammunition in large quantities every day."

According to information received by the Villa confidential agency, only 12,000 of Villa's soldiers, mainly cavalry, were employed in the fighting of Friday and Saturday. An earlier message received this morning by Señor Lorente from Diaz Lombardo, Minister of Foreign Affairs in the Villa Government, and sent from Chihuahua under yesterday's date, dealing mainly with the first day of fighting, on Friday, reads as follows:

"I have just conferred by wire with General Medinabeitia, General Villa's Chief of Staff at Leon, who reports that in a fight today at San Cristobal, San Judas, and at La Sandia, the enemy was repulsed and driven back ten miles from the place last mentioned, with small losses to us, though we cannot yet give precise numbers. In the centre and on the left flank there was no fighting. The task of gathering the dead and wounded still continues, as the fight of yesterday was not finished, due to the fact that we had to dispose of more than 500 of the enemy's dead. Medinabeitia adds that he requires no more ammunition, as he took from the enemy yesterday much more than he expended; he also states that several officers from Fierro's command have just arrived at Leon, bringing some wounded, who report that the enemy lost many horses and machine guns, and that the engagement did not cease until nightfall."

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VERA CRUZ, May 2.—It is reported that the advance guard of General Obregon is in touch with the rear guard of General Villa near Aguascalientes.

The War Department reports that the Villistas have abandoned the attempt to take Ebano, retreating in the direction of San Luis Potosi.

Fred Lantz, Manager of the Real del Monte Mining Company of Pachuca, who is here en route to New York, said today:

"Conditions in Pachuca are normal. The town is quiet and well defended by laborers working in the mines. The Military Governor of Pachuca is well liked, and gives all possible assistance to keep the mines working. The company has not been molested in any way, the Governor even furnishing trains to ship bullion and bring in supplies."

The arrival of the cannon captured from General Villa in the battle of Celaya was the occasion for a big demonstration at Orizaba. More than twenty-four four and five inch field pieces with a number of machine guns were brought in. Many of the cannon have no breech locks. A thousand five-inch shells are on exhibition, showing part of the ammunition captured. General Obregon reports he is using a number of cannon taken in the Celaya battle. The artillery of General Obregon consists of more than 100 field pieces and a large number of machine guns.

Benjamin Aguemedo has sent a special envoy to the Governor of Pachuca asking terms of surrender.

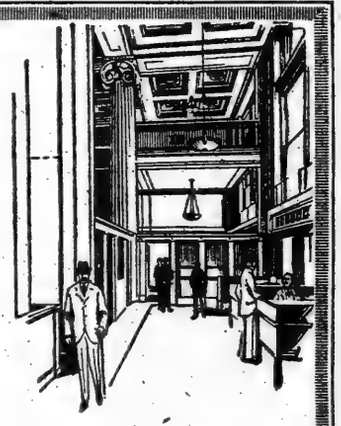
Service



OF the three essentials—strength, organization and service—afforded to clients by this Company, service is not the least important.

The Company's entire organization is permeated with the spirit of service. It is not enough to accept and safeguard the banking and trust business of clients; every effort is put forth to be of additional active service, within the Company's proper sphere.

For example, the Company, if appointed custodian of securities, will as agent sign ownership certificates required by the Federal Income Tax Law, collect dividends and coupons promptly as they mature, and either credit or remit the proceeds to the client; and will promptly notify him should any "rights" or other subscription privileges attach to the securities held.

Another example, clients are welcome to the Company's facilities for investment and for investigating and analyzing the value of securities.

Many other examples of special service to clients might be mentioned, all of which would help to explain the rapid and substantial growth of the Company's business.

SHORT-BALLOT FIGHT MAY ENLIST WILSON

Chairman Tanner Anxious to Get His Help in Constitutional Convention.

WANTS TAFT'S AID ALSO

Absolute Power of Appointment and Removal for the Governor Likely to be Proposed.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 2.—As an exponent of the doctrine that the head of the government in State and nation also should be the recognized leader of his party, President Wilson may be invited to address the Constitutional Convention when the proposal to centralize power in the Governor comes up for consideration. Ex-President Taft, who in recent addresses has advocated an increase in the powers of the Chief Executive, also may be invited.

The suggestion was made today by Chairman Frederick C. Tanner, of the Republican State Committee, who also happens to be Chairman of the convention committee on Governor and other State officers, more familiarly known as the Short Ballot Committee. He will broach the subject to the other members of his committee when the convention resumes its sittings.

"President Wilson was Governor of New Jersey before he became head of the national government," said Chairman Tanner. "He has had experience with both systems, for the system in vogue in Washington is practically identical with the system that would be inaugurated in this State if the Constitution were amended so as to permit of the adoption of the short ballot. President Wilson undoubtedly could give us a talk on his experiences under both systems which would be well worth listening to. Ex-President Taft, as appears from his recent utterances, has given much thought to the subject."

"Colonel Roosevelt also has had experience both as Governor and President of the United States," was suggested.

"Yes," said Chairman Tanner. "I doubt the wisdom, however, of injecting the Colonel into the deliberations of the Constitutional Convention."

The short ballot proposal is likely to provoke one of the liveliest fights in the Constitutional Convention. A strong combination of up-State Republicans under the leadership of Senator Brackett of Saratoga will contest every inch of ground with those who are contending for the doctrine that as the Governor is held responsible by the people for the success or failure of his administration he should have powers commensurate with such responsibility. The advocates of such centralization of power in the chief Executive believe that their object can be attained through the short ballot which would make appointive nearly all the present elective State offices.

Elihu Root, President of the Constitutional Convention, former ex-Attorney General George W. Wickersham, Herbert Parsons, ex-Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, Dr. Jacob Gould Schurman, President of Cornell University, who is one of the Vice Presidents of the convention and a majority of the leading Republican delegates are advocates of the short ballot. Both the Republican and Democratic State platforms contain planks favoring the short ballot, although there was considerable difference of opinion in the State Conventions of both parties as to just how "short" the ballot should be.

The testimony in the Barnes-Roosevelt trial at Syracuse has furnished the advocates of greater power for the Chief Executive with much material which they expect to use in their fight for the short ballot.

"To use a popular phrase," said Chairman Tanner today, "there is a 'twilight zone' between the various branches of the Government where apparently no one is responsible. This may or may not be the cause of the 'boss' system, but it is a powerful ally to it. It is not my intention to indicate any opinion as to the merits of the libel suit now being tried at Syracuse. It would be manifestly improper to do so, but both parties to this litigation have made the fact clear, although the construction placed upon the fact by each is different, that when Mr. Roosevelt was Governor of this State there existed a situation under which the real power did not lie either in the Chief Executive or in the Legislature elected by the people."

Chairman Tanner was asked today for a statment outlining the plans of his committee, of his own plans, for eliminating "invisible" government.

"This committee," Mr. Tanner said, "as its name implies, is a committee on the Governor and other State officers, their election or appointment, tenure of office, powers and duties. Its object is to devise a scientific scheme of government under which powers will not conflict or overlap and to shorten the present lond and complicated ballot. When we get through we should have a system of responsible government under which the Governor is the leader invested with authority commensurate with his responsibility.

"Under the present system, much as we like to delude ourselves, we do not have such a government. We have a series of departments, many of which conflict with each other, some of which are answerable directly to the people, others of which are answerable to the Governor, who appoints them. In the end the people have the right to look to one definite person, or a very small group of persons to whom they can put the question, 'Have you redeemed your pledges?' If that person, who in my opinion should be the Governor, has not sufficient authority it is obviously unfair to make him responsible.

"In a speech before the Young Republican Club before the Legislature began its session, I described the exact situation which has now been developed in court, and indicated what I thought my duty as State Chairman was. The words were in part as follows: 'But the spirit of the times has changed since the days of Mr. Platt. The demand that the Republican Chairman should direct legislation has steadily decreased and his power has been exercised less and less in that direction. The best political intelligence in the States places the responsibility for the passing of the laws and their execution where it belongs; that it, upon the Governor and the Legislature.' To stop this vicious system of using party patronage to control legislation—a thing which never was contemplated in our system of Government—I adopted the very simple expedient of refusing to do it.

"We have in a half conscious and tentative way recognized the need of greater centralised authority. The Constitution provides that the Governor shall make his recommendations to the Legislature, and gives him the power of veto. The custom has sanctioned, moreover, what is known as 'administration bills'; that is, bills that are prepared under the authority of the Governor and introduced by his friends. This gives him the power of appointing officers like the Superintendent of Public Works and Commissioner of Highways, but withhold it in the case of the State Engineer. I could multiply these illustrations in other departments, but it is unnecessary."

Chairman Tanner is planning a thorough investigation of the duties of the various State departments with a view to decreasing their number and simplifying the machinery of government. It is believed that the committee will recommend the absolute power of appointment for the Governor without "the advice and consent" of the Senate and absolute power of removal. It is likely, too, that the tenure of office of all appointive officials will be made co-terminus with that of the Governor.

Whether the Governor and the heads of the State departments should have seats in the legislative body and the right to participate in legislative debates, though not to vote, is a question to which Mr. Tanner's committee will give close study. While some members of the convention are advocates of a plan to incorporate in the government of this State this feature of the British system, it is not thought likely that the opposition of the Old Guard element in the Convention will be overcome. William Barnes, as Chairman of the Committee on Legislative Powers, undoubtedly will be a factor in the case.

PAID $400,000 IN ERROR.

Bank Superintendent Plans Action for Carnegie Trust Depositors.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 2.—Under the recent decision of the Appellate Division, First Department, in the case of the Madison Trust Company and the Nineteenth Ward Bank, Eugene L. Richards, State Superintendent of Banking, will endeavor to recover on behalf of the general depositors of the defunct Carnegie Trust Company more than $400,000 which he believes was paid erroneously to preferred claimants. These payments were made before Mr. Richards assumed office. The court held that these institutions which sought to recover $319,000 as preferred claimants against the Carnegie Trust Company were not entitled to preferential payments.

At the time of the failure of the Carnegie Trust Company it held accounts approximating $700,000 representing funds deposited with it as trustee under trust deeds to secure bond issues and for other special purposes. In no one of these instances was the Carnegie Trust Company a trustee under judicial appointment.

The predecessors in office of Supt. Richards considered the claims just mentioned as those entitled to a preferential payment under Section 190 of the old banking law, and paid in full such claims, except that of the Madison Trust Company for $190,000 and the Nineteenth Ward Bank for $124,000. It was for misappropriation of the latter sum that William J. Cummins, Director and Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Carnegie Trust Company, was indicted and convicted. These claims were rejected by the State Banking Department and actions were instituted against the trust company. The Nineteenth Ward Bank had assigned its claim first to Henry Phipps and thereafter to John M. McGrath for the purpose of suit.

The Appellate Division decided that these claims were not entitled to preferential payments, and that the word "trustee" in Section 190 was applicable only to a trustee appointed by the courts of this State. The judgments were, however, sustained by a majority of the court as general claims against the Carnegie Trust Company. Under this decision it appears that the preferred payments made by the predecessors in office of Supt. Richards of seventeen other claims, aggregating over $400,000 in amount, were unauthorized in law, and made under the erroneous assumption that the claims in question were preferred over the claims of the general creditors of the trust company.

MAKES RULE FOR JITNEYS.

Owner-Drivers Must Have Chauffeur Licenses.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 2.—Attorney General Egburt E. Woodbury today said that he had prepared an opinion that owners of automobiles who convert them into jitney buses and drive them for hire must obtain chauffeurs' licenses, and that persons engaged by the owners to drive jitneys must obtain licenses. The opinion will be submitted to the Corporation Counsel of Schenectady. The Attorney General based his opinion on that provision of the motor vehicle law which reads:

"The term chauffeur shall mean any person operating or driving a motor vehicle as an employe or for hire."

The driver of the jitney bus is driving it for hire as much as the driver of any other public conveyance," the Attorney General holds. "It is therefore my opinion that such chauffeurs should be licensed.

GENSLER DIES SUDDENLY.

Ex-Princeton Baseball Star Stricken Mysteriously at Bennington, Vt.

Special to The New York Times.

BENNINGTON, Vt., May 2.—Donald E. Gensler, 29, who was graduated from Lawrenceville Academy and from the Engineering Department of Princeton in 1908, walked into a Main Street drug store late yesterday afternoon and complained of a severe headache. Before a physician could be summoned by telephone he became unconscious. He remained in that condition until he died, shortly after noon today.

Gensler, who formerly was a member of the 'Varsity baseball team at Princeton, was a son of H. J. Gensler, Clerk of the United States Senate at Washington. He had been employed by a scale manufacturing company here as draughtsman since last November.

HELD FOR JEWEL THEFT.

Canal Street Jeweler Brought from Frisco to Stand Trial.

Brought from San Francisco to face charges of a jewel theft here, Herman Wander, a jeweler, 25 years old, of 105 Canal Street, was locked up in Police Headquarters yesterday. It is alleged that Wander received $2,000 worth of jewelry on memorandum in June, 1913, from Simon Sirinsky of 341 Grand Street and Solomon Hergiass of 234 Stanton Street, and disappeared without making an accounting. He was indicted on larceny charges and a bench warrant issued for his arrest.

On April 15 the police say they heard that he had written from San Francisco to friends here. The police in that city made the arrest on telegraphed advices and Detective Behan of the First Branch was sent to bring Wander back.

TRAVIS SETS FORTH ECONOMY AT ALBANY

But Controller Makes Claims Before "Reorganization" Bills Are Signed.

TELLS OF PAYROLL CUTS

Democrats Question Figures When New Places Are Filled—Executive Chamber Makes Mistake.

ALBANY, May 2.—Controller Eugene M. Travis today issued, at the request of Governor Whitman, a statement to show that the Republican administration had cut the State payroo! $50,000 a month since Jan. 1. There are also recorded certain increases in several departments, so that Mr. Travis submits an alleged net saving of $47,006.98 a month.

A careful analysis of Mr. Travis's statement shows that $43,188.86 of the saving is accounted for by the dropping of 367 employes of the State Engineer's Department who were dismissed in January because the Barge Canal work for which they were engaged had been finished. This would leave a final saving of $3,818.12 a month. The Republican program, which waits now only on the signing of "reorganization" bills now before the Governor, includes three Boxing Commissioners at $3,000 a year each, $9,000; additions to the Executive Chamber payroll of $7,000 a year, and increased appropriations of $28,000 for the Attorney General's office.

Figures at the Controller's office show that the new Tax Department will cost $45,000 more in salaries than the old Tax Commission. The salaries of three Court of Claims Judges have been raised from $6,000 to $8,000, and provision has been made for two additional Judges at $8,000 each. While these are not all of the Republican increases, they amount in all to $114,000 a year, or $9,500 a month increase in a half dozen departments.

Instead of a saving of $4,000 a month, those Democratic officials who have remained in office predict that the Republican program eventually will increase the pay roll at least $5,000 a month, and this without taking into account the additional expense of running departments with new men. They predict an extra burden on this account in the new Tax Department, the proposed Industrial Commission, the Conservation Commission, and the various other branches of the State Government which have been "reorganized."

Mr. Travis's statement has this introduction:

"That large decreases have been made in the monthly payrolls of State departments since the first of January and especially in the departments under Republican control, is shown by a detailed tabular statement which has just been transmitted to Gov. Whitman by Controller Travis. The statement has been prepared at the request of the Governor. In the nine months immediately preceding the inauguration of Republican officials, there were created by the Democratic officials 154 new positions, while 374 existing positions salaries were increased so that the monthly pay roll in December, 1914, was $21,270 greater than in March, 1914.

"Since then the tendency has been in the other direction. This is in conformance with the pre-election pledges of the Republicans to effect economy in payrolls."

Not taking into account the places which hereafter will be created in the proposed new departments since Jan. 1, and excepting the men laid off by the State Engineer because of completed work, the Republicans have abolished seventy-two places and created fifty.

Intending to show the bad condition in which the Democrats left State finances, there was issued from the Governor's office today a statement saying that "within the next two weeks the State Treasurer will be required to pay out of the funds of the State the following large sums —." There follows this table:

Armories—maintenance and repairs	$883,000.00
Highways—State aid to counties	1,883,000.00
Improved highways—mainten'ce	2,650,256.00
Balance due common schools	2,525,492.92
Sinking fund account	3,566,341.35
Canal fund	1,500,000.00
Total	$12,805,290.27

At the Controller's office, where it was not known that the statement had been issued, it was aid that the Treasurer must pay out $6,000,000, not $12,000,000, in the next two weeks. These are ordinary expenses. The Sinking Fund payment merely is transferred from one State fund to another; portions of other items which do not have to be paid out, cut the Executive Chamber figures to $6,000,000. It was said that this was the estimate the Controller's experts had submitted to the State Treasurer. The indirect taxes for April received by the State Controller amounted to $2,817,666. This sum was greater than the indirect taxes of the preceding month of March by nearly $1,000,000, but fell considerably below the indirect taxes collected in April, 1914, which aggregated $3,533,000.

WHITMAN BACK TO ALBANY.

Will Spend Time Till California Trip Begins Studying Bills.

Governor Whitman returned to Albany last night accompanied by his wife and Military Secretary, after three days in this city. He spent almost the entire day motoring about the city. He had no callers and no appointments, and had luncheon with Mrs. Whitman at Delmonico's. The Governor will go to California on May 26.

"The next twenty-four days I shall spend studying the mass of bills which must be signed or vetoed," said the Governor. "I shall then go to California. The exact make-up of the party has not been determined, but will be in a few days."

"Have you been served," the Governor was asked, "with notice to appear in Syracuse at the Barnes-Roosevelt trial?"

"I can only answer," he replied, "that in consideration of the court at Syracuse, I decline to be drawn into a discussion on my sentiments or plans."

FAIR SUFFRAGE VOTE IS PARSONS'S PLEDGE

Declares His Opposition to Any Plan to Evade Test of the Issue at the Polls.

SAYS THE PARTY IS BOUND

Believes Root and Barnes Hold Same Sentiments—Explains His Resolution.

Herbert Parsons, who, as a member of the Constitutional Convention, drew a resolution on woman's suffrage which he hopes will come before the convention this week, said last night that he considered himself personally, the Republican Party as a whole, and a majority of the members of the Constitutional Convention to be fairly bound and pledged to submit to the voters next Fall an amendment providing for the enfranchisement of women.

Pledges made on the suffrage question by himself would oblige him, Mr. Parsons said, 'steadfastly to oppose any movement in the Constitutional Convention to side-track the suffrage matter or to becloud the issue in any way." Mr. Parsons said that, besides himself, he considered Chairman Elihu Root of the convention to be personally pledged, also Delegate William Barnes.

The resolution which he introduced last week, providing that the Constitutional Convention should not attempt to debate the question of woman's suffrage but to reach and express any conclusion upon it, Mr. Parsons said he drew up in order to "carry out the spirit and intent" of the pledges he personally gave and by which he considered the Republican Party in the State to be bound.

Mr. Parsons discussed at length the question of woman's suffrage as it affects the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention, at his home, 115 East Seventy-second Street, last night.

Bound by Party Platforms.

"Why do you say the Constitutional Convention has no right to thresh out the question of woman's suffrage, when it was elected to go to the bottom of all matters affecting the State, and the Constitution itself gives its deliberations precedence over legislative enactments?" Mr. Parsons was asked.

"The answer is simple," he said. "Party platforms are made to guide the action of party members and are meant to guide their actions if elected on those platforms. The Republican platform pledged the Republicans who were elected to the present Constitutional Convention to submit to the people the particular amendment, on woman's suffrage that passed the last two Legislatures. The platform did not pledge the Republicans merely to submit an amendment. It designated the particular amendment they were to submit."

Mr. Parsons was asked if he felt quite sure that all Republican eaders would agree that they were bound by the party platform, and that it ought to be interpreted as he interpreted it.

"I am quite confident that I interpret that clause of the party platform correctly," he said, "because I wrote it myself and I knew the intention of the convention in adopting it.

"oYu see we had avery definite situation before us. The women were at Albany wondering what to do in the face of the fatc that a new Constitution and their amendment was coming up at the same time. The women sought the advice of the party leaders, and when informed that they acted upon this advice in pressing their amendment before the Legislature to its second passage. They would not have done that if they had not been confident it would be taken up by the Constitutional Convention in a spirit of willingness to see the proposition as a cumulative action in which two legislative sessions and the people at the polls would participate.

Need Not Be Complete.

It was suggestedto Mr. Parsons that many people held that the Constitutional Convention would necessarily bring in a completed document and that any provision as to suffrage in the completed document would take precedence over any amendment submitted to the people by the Legislature.

"It is not at all necessary," he said, "that the Constitutional Convention shall bring in a completed document. In fact, the Constitutional Convention of 1894 brought in an incompleted document and wrote out its intententions as to the uncompleted portion in final resolutions passed just before adjournment. The procedure of the convention of 1894 gives us a complete precedent for the procedure I think we are bound to follow on the suffrage referendum this year.

"In the previous convention the question the convention did not wish to settle finally was that of apportionment. So a resolution provided that a vote 'aye' on the constitution meant that the constitution was adopted except for a clause on apportionments. The same resolution provided that a vote 'aye' on the separately submitted apportionment clause meant that it was desired to have this clause incorporated into the constitution, and a vote of 'nay' meant that it was desired to have the old reading of the constitution perpetuated."

Meaning of Resolution.

Mr. Parsons explained the meaning of each of the three clauses of his resolution. "I drew up my resolution," he said, "to clear the air. The first clause provides that the Constitutional Convention 'shall propose no amendment to the Constitution on the matter of woman suffrage.' The reason for this was that its uassage would make the way clear for the submission to the people of the amendment of the Legislature.

"Section 2 of my resolution provides that Section 1 of Article 2 (describing the qualifications of voters) shall not be in conflict with the proposed amendment to the Constitution. This is to make it clear that the amendment will be submitted in complete form. That is to serve as a permanent answer to all inquirers, and to the courts, as to the convention's intentions. I wrote the clause to forestall any chance for a quibble to be carried to the courts. I know it would be possible to hold that the adoption by the Constitutional Convention of the present clause providing for 'male suffrage' would automatically count out the woman's suffrage amendment if it should win at the polls. I do not hold this view, but my resolution was drawn expressly to repudiate such a view and make it impossible to advance it later in a court test.

"Clause 3 of my resolution provides that if there is any desire in the Constitutional Convention to amend Section 1 of Article 11 of the present Constitution the conventional shall do it in such a way as not to make its action determinative, pro or con, of the woman suffrage matter.

"This clause I drew so that the convention may have full freedom of action in regard to the length of time a voter shall live in his district. Someone might bring in an amendment changing the time from thirty to sixty days. Then later, in the courts, somebody might claim that since the convention treated this section and amended a part of it the convention clearly meant to settle the woman sufrage matter. We spike that claim in advance of any court test.

"The resolution was drawn entirely to make clear the route of progress to both sides. It was drawn in strict conformity with platform pledges, and was not meant to favor one side or the other, but was meant to keep the situation clear."

Submitted to Root and Barnes.

Mr. Parsons said that suffragist leaders judged the situation wrongly if any of them had the idea, as he had heard many of them had, that the failure of the convention to order his resolution printed promptly was due to any hostility to it.

"I believe the resolution will pass," Mr. Parsons said. "The failure to get it printed, which led to my request for unanimous consent that it be printed, was due to my own oversight. I thought that resolutions were printed as a matter of course, as bills are. And so I allowed this one to repose in committee, thinking it would emerge from the printer's any day. When I failed to get printed copies I demanded to know the reason, and was informed that I had to make a demand upon the convention itself before I could get a resolution of any kind printed. The demand seemed startling and unusual to many and proof that unfair treatment being accorded to my resolution. That was not the case."

Mr. Parsons said he did not submit the resolution to suffragist leaders in advance as he considered it merely routine and very ordinary. He said h edid submit it, however, to Chairman Root and Delegate William Barnes. He said he believed it conformed with their view of the program to which the Republican Party was pledged.

PROTEST ON DEFENSE ISSUE

League to Limit Armaments Would Bar Political Ends.

The American League to Limit Armaments has sent to its members a circular asking them to notify the officers of the league at 43 Cedar Street of all evidence which comes to their notice that the preparedness issue is being employed for the furtherance of political ends. According to the circular, several politicians have been very frank about it. Representative Gardner is quoted as saying:

"Six months ago I should have been a mighty poor politician if I had preached about our lack of national defense. Today I should be a mighty poor politician if I were to drop the subject. If I were a real hero, I should promise to keep up this crusade as long as the Lord might grant me grace. Not being a real hero, I content myself with a promise to keep on shouting so long as the press will grant me space."

Then the circular continues:

"This is frank, at least. But not all the efforts to develop this subject for partisan purposes are equally frank. Colonel Roosevelt has an article in the April Metropolitan Magazine. Its title is 'The Need of Preparedness.' The main purpose of the article would seem to be its bitter attack upon the present National Administration, the basis for the attack being the refusal of the President to involve the country in the European conflict by taking a stand against the violation of Belgian neutrality by Germany. Had England's threat of war failed to keep Germany out of Belgium, how much effect, it may reasonably be asked, would a mere protest from the United States have had?

"The Navy League offered the national defense controversy to the first bidder as a partisan issue when it said that the Democratic Party, 'by knocking holes in the (navy) appropriation bill generally,' was 'presenting the Republican Party with the most popular issue now before the American people.'

"Members of the league can just now perform no greater service for the cause which the organization represents than to direct attention, whenever possible, to the partisan motives which, among others, underlie the agitation for greatly increased fighting forces."

MOB THREATENS NEGROES.

Special to The New York Times.

SEAFORD, Del., May 2.—In a race riot here early today J. Holmes Nicholson, a prominent young white man, was slashed nine inches across the throat and is supposed to be dying. Thomas Townsend White was badly battered, and several negroes were seriously wounded. The trouble started when a negro threw a whisky bottle into a crowd of men.

Two negroes are in jail under heavy guard, while an angry mob outside is threatening to break down the door and lynch them. A message has been sent to the Sheriff at Georgetown, who cannot reach here for several hours. In the meantime the streets are filled with excited and angry white men threatening vengeance upon the negroes. Special officers have been deputized to quiet the men.

ASKS TIME TO STUDY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mayor Requests Whitman to Defer Action Until City Can Be Heard.

TO ANALYZE THE FIGURES

Printed Copies Were Only Received Saturday and Officials Have Not Had Time to Examine Them.

Mayor Mitchel has sent to Governor Whitman a letter asking him to defer passing upon the appropriation bill until he has heard from the representatives of the city. It was only on Friday, said the Mayor, that the bills in their final form were available and it was possible to examine them. If the city has to pay the $14,000,000 direct tax, it will mean the city must control its own natural physical development or curtail its activities in the direction of education, health, and public safety.

Here is the Mayor's letter:

New York, May 1, 1915.

Honorable Charles S. Whitman, Governor of New York:

My dear Governor: May I, on behalf of the City of New York, urge very earnestly that your action on the several appropriation bills now before you be deferred until representatives of the city have been able to examine them in their final presented form, and until opportunity has been given to submit the view and suggestions of those who will speak for the city.

You will, I am sure, wish to be fully informed not only upon the intrinsic merits of proposed expenditures, but upon the capacity of taxpayers to bear additional burdens at this time. The citizens of this city will be called upon to raise 70 per cent. of any direct tax that is now levied by the State Government. The question of their ability to contribute to any tax next year, additional to that to be levied for municipal and county purposes, will be an important factor in determining your action on all pending appropriations that are discretionary.

I am leaving the city tomorrow for the West, but in my absence official facts and figures will be submitted to you, showing that the proposed direct tax of 1.7 mills—adding approximately $14,000,000 to the city budget for 1916—will raise the tax rate in New York City to a point that, upon our basis of assessed valuations, will prove well nigh confiscatory.

Either the State must moderate its proposed demands upon the city, or the city must control its own natural physical development, or curtail its activities in the direction of education, health, and public safety.

Printed copies of the appropriation bills passed in the closing hours of the Legislature were not available until yesterday. It seems desirable that whatever is said to you on behalf of the city should be said after more careful analysis of the expenditures proposed than has as yet been possible, and my present request for an adequate allowance of time for the further submission of my views is made with that fact in mind.

In my absence your reply will be received by the Acting Mayor.

Always very sincerely yours,

JOHN PURROY MITCHEL,
Mayor.

In a former statement the Mayor has called attention to the shape in which the appropriation bill was presented to the Assembly and has complained it was absolutely impossible for the members to know for what they were voting money.

Real Efficiency

This is the day in which every man's talents are required in their highest potentiality to enable him to hold his competitive position, and the Harriman National Bank suggests to thoughtful merchants that now is the time, in preparation for big business, to clear away dead-wood.

This applies to men as well as to materials. There are mercantile establishments everywhere prolonging their existence even beyond the ordinary span of human life, propped up merely by traditions of trading. They are the aged, hollow and decaying oaks of business by whose sides spring up the vigorous young saplings.

There is a saying in trade circles that business is never bad when you have the goods that people want; yet even in the metropolis of New York you can enter many of the great, and some of the less, but still important, shops that have not the goods you want; or, if they have the goods, they are just out of your size, or if they have both the goods and your size they are not sure about the price, and even when all these details are settled, perhaps there is failure to deliver on time or even at all, if perchance the inefficient salesman has forgotten your instructions. Such houses often complain of bad business. The principal causes are under their own roof.

It behooves the merchants of the United States to take thought of these matters and let that thought for their business extend to their banking. The Harriman National Bank offers real services and real facilities of a high and modern order of banking.

GORHAM CHESTS of Table Silver

The silverware is Gorham-made, so is the chest, thus the proposition is 100% Gorham

Of one hundred and one reasons why a chest of silverware should come from The Gorham Company these are paramount:

The immensity of Gorham selections.
The authenticity of Gorham patterns.
The dependability of Gorham prices.
The genius of the Gorham name.

The selections are prodigious—from a 24-piece chest all the way to a princely aggregation of 801 pieces.

The Gorham patterns are famous for two things—for their originality, in name and treatment, and for their basic fidelity to whatever inspiration or epoch may influence their design.

The Gorham prices are as dependable and basic and final as the standard quotations for bar silver—they are arrived at by actuarial computation, not by caprice.

And the Gorham name—that is something which is not secondary to the word Sterling itself—it is, in fact, your greatest protection against the loose usage of that much-garbled word.

NAVY IN CONFUSION, SO MEYER ASSERTS

Secretary Under Taft Picks Flaws in Daniels's Statement Alleging Efficiency.

NEGLECT OF THE PERSONNEL

Figures Quoted to Show That Fleet Yet Needs Thousands of Men—Daniels on New 14-Inch Guns.

BOSTON, May 2.—George von L. Meyer, ex-Secretary of the Navy, made public tonight a statement reviewing the open letter from Secretary of the Navy Daniels to President Garfield of Williams College, concerning the present status of the naval equipment of the United States. Mr. Meyer opens with the statement that Secretary Daniels's discussion of this subject "leaves much to be desired in the way of information." The statement follows:

The Secretary neglects to state, when he refers to the last two years of the Taft Administration, that the House of Representatives, which originates appropriations, was in control of the Democrats on account of the by-elections—that they went into caucus and voted "No battleships." It was on the issue that no party could afford to caucus on patriotism, placed before the people by some of the leading papers at my request, that we broke the caucus and obtained, very grudgingly, from the Democrats one battleship for each of the remaining two years.

The war and the campaign of education on national defense have influenced Congress in making more liberal appropriations, but the third battleship Mr. Daniels obtained was made possible by the sale of the Idaho and Mississippi to Greece, using the fund derived from this transaction for an additional dreadnought. But the Idaho and Mississippi were both modern ships, built in 1904, and while President's Wilson's sale was a good business transaction, it will not, apparently, increase our tonnage.

It should also be noted that the Indiana, Massachusetts and Oregon can no longer be included in our tonnage list; that the Iowa, Kearsarge, Kentucky and Alabama will reach their age limit in 1916, while the Illinois, Wisconsin, Maine, Ohio and Missouri are due for replacement by 1920, as battleships become obsolete in twenty years. It is obvious, therefore, that a policy pursued according to this year's program of two battleships, with certain auxiliaries, no scout cruisers and no battle-cruisers, will lead nowhere if it is the real purpose of the nation to have an adequate navy, for we are not even following a program of new construction intended to replace those vessels which have been or will soon be condemned because unfit for service on account of age.

Fleet Lacks 5,000 Men.

While, as the Secretary has stated, the navy is today recruited to its maximum strength, (which is due to the decreased demand for labor in various lines of trade throughout the United States,) yet the Commander in Chief of the Fleet, in a communication to the Naval Academy, gives the opinion that the fleet lacks in its complete equipment about 5,000 men and a number of officers. To put all the ships in commission that could be useful in time of war would require 18,000 additional men and many officers, according to Admiral Badger in his evidence before the Naval Committee this Winter; and yet in his letter the Secretary assures the public that the navy in 1915 is larger, better equipped, and in better condition than in any previous year, while experts know that this is impossible, since many of the battleships have been retained so long in Mexico that fleet maneuvering, vital for efficiency, has been terribly hampered and interfered with.

The naval conflicts of the European war have emphasized the importance of speed, range, and armament. The Blücher, faster than any of our ships, was destroyed because she was slower than any of the other ships in the conflict. Yet we are building no fast cruisers or battle cruisers. The Secretary, in his enthusaism over our 14-inch guns, which he says will shoot further, shoot straighter, and hit harder than any naval gun now in use, overlooks the fact that Japan has in commission and building eight naval ships with 14-inch guns probably as good as our 14-inch guns, and that England has the Queen Elizabeth in commission with 15-inch guns, a battleship of over 27,000 tons, with a speed of twenty-five knots, and nine other capital ships building with 15-inch guns.

The war has demonstrated the need and value of aircraft. The General Board recommended the appropriation of $5,000,000, but only one-fifth of the amount was obtained.

Need of Submarine Docks.

In view of the increasing number of submarines and the accident in Hawaii there is urgent necessity for testing and wrecking docks that may be used for salving submarines of any size, docking submarines, and testing to determine the resistance to external water pressure. Two docks of this description will be required for the Atlantic and two for the Pacific.

Upon the efficacy of the supply ships depends the efficacy of the fleet. The importance of supply ships has also been demonstrated in this war. One was authorized in 1913. It would have been nearly completed by this time if built under contract, but it is to be constructed in one of our navy yards, and it has not yet been laid down.

Without ample coal and oil storage at distant bases, in the absence of a large merchant marine to insure a continuous supply of fuel, the range and efficiency of the fleet will be seriously impaired in time of war.

The General Board in a report to the Secretary stated: "The strength of the fleet is measured too often in the public mind by the number and tonnage of its material units. The real strength of the fleet is the combination of its personnel (with their skill and training) and its material, and of these two elements the more important, the personnel, is too often forgotten and neglected in making provisions for our fleet."

One of the basic troubles at the present moment is the demoralization which has been going on of our personnel and which is not taken into account. Further, it is poor economy to build battleships without making, as we are doing now, a proper provision for the

BETTER THAN 15-INCH GUNS.

Pennsylvania More Formidable Than Queen Elizabeth, Says Daniels.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—In justification of the claim that the United States Navy has developed a fourteen-inch gun that is equal to any naval gun extant Secretary Daniels tonight issued a statement comparing the main batteries of the new United States dreadnought Pennsylvania with those of the British dreadnought Queen Elizabeth. The Pennsylvania, is the latest of the battleships to be launched for the American Navy. The battleship Queen Elizabeth is the latest type of superdreadnought in commission in the British Navy, and is the most powerful warship in the Anglo-French fleet endeavoring to force the Dardanelles.

In his recent letter giving a detailed review of the record of the navy during the Wilson Administration, Secretary Daniels made the statement that the Bureau of Ordnance had developed a "fourteen-inch gun that will shoot further, shoot straighter, and hit harder than any gun now in use or known to be designed by a foreign country." This assertion has aroused so much interest and such a controversy over the effectiveness of the guns of the navy that it drew forth Mr. Daniels's statement of tonight, based on information submitted to him by the ordnance experts of the navy, amplifying his former statement. He compares the big guns of the Pennsylvania and the Queen Elizabeth, and makes the claim that the number of blows that can be delivered by the former's guns exceed those that can be dealt by the weapons of the latter by 70 per cent. In other words he declares that the Pennsylvania's guns can deliver seventeen hits for every ten delivered by the Queen Elizabeth.

Here is Mr. Daniels's amplified statement:

"There is an axiom with regard to calibres which amounts to this: that a ship should mount the smallest big gun that will pierce the enemy's armor over vitals at the maximum probable fighting range. The 14-inch guns of the Pennsylvania will get through the maximum armor afloat, so far as our knowledge goes, at a range of 12,000 yards. The Queen Elizabeth's 15-inch guns will do little more than that. If our information is correct as to the velocity of the British 15-inch gun, the 14-inch guns on the Pennsylvania will range a little further than the Queen Elizabeth's 15-inch gun. The flatter trajectory of the 14-inch gun gives it increased probability of hitting in comparison with the 15-inch gun.

"The Pennsylvania mounts twelve guns to the Queen Elizabeth's eight. Therefore, the volume of fire of our ship exceeds the volume of fire of the British ship by 50 per cent.

"The Navy Department has built and proved a 16-inch gun superior to both the 15-inch and 14-inch, so far as penetration of armor at fighting range is concerned. If the Pennsylvania were to be armed with the 16-inch gun she could carry only eight, as against the twelve 14-inch guns now assigned her. If we adopted the 15-inch calibre we would have to make a sacrifice in number of guns as great, or nearly as great, as was done in the design of the Queen Elizabeth.

"Counting volume of fire and probability of hitting, we see that at battle range the number of blows delivered by the Pennsylvania in a given time will exceed those given by the Queen Elizabeth by 70 per cent. The 15-inch gun, it is stated, fires a shell weighing 1,920 pounds. Our 14-inch shell weighs 1,400 pounds. The bursting effect of the larger shell will be greater, of course, but we have little doubt that the destructive effect of the burst of the 14-inch will be quite sufficient for its task. No one can doubt the advisability of delivering seventeen hits to ten of the enemy. Added to all of the above, we must recollect that the chance of having gun fire survive rests with the ship carrying the greater number.

"Now, if we compare these guns at a range greater than battle range or armor-piercing range, and merely count the ability to reach the enemy's decks or unarmored parts, we find that the Pennsylvania's guns range quite as far, at a maximum, as those of the Queen Elizabeth. Both guns range further than they would have any hope of hitting a ship; that is to say, over 21,000 yards, or something like twelve land miles."

RURAL MAIL EXTENSIONS.

1,000,000 Persons to Benefit Without Extra Cost to Government.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—Without additional cost, rural mail facilities will be extended to 1,000,000 persons before July 1, according to an announcement today by Postmaster General Burleson. This improvement, explained Mr. Burleson, will be effected by rearrangements of routes so as to avoid duplications, without diminishing the service rendered. In the new fiscal year beginning July 1 Mr. Burleson hopes, by the employment of motor vehicles, that the rural mail facilites of important postal centres will be doubled.

Operating expenses for April were reduced $177,644 without curtailing service, and this saying has been utilized in establishing 283 new routes, serving over 31,000 families, or about 155,000 persons. In addition 104 miles of new rural routes have been opened, serving approximately 1,200 families.

ITHACA, N. The petition asks that osteopaths have the same standing in the infirmary as other physicians.

WOULD PUT COLONEL IN ANANIAS CLUB

Barnes Lawyers Searching Records in Effort to Impeach Mr. Roosevelt's Testimony.

SIMILAR ATTACK ON LOEB

Date of His Talk with Barnes Is Questioned—Batch of New Platt Letters to be Read.

Special to The New York Times.

SYRACUSE, May 2.—When William Barnes, Jr., goes on the witness stand to testify in his own behalf at the trial for libel he has brought against Theodore Roosevelt, and which will be resumed in the Supreme Court tomorrow, a strong effort will be made by the Barnes counsel to put the Colonel in his own Ananias Club. Mr. Barnes's lawyers have been going carefully through the Colonel's testimony, and it was said here today that they had discovered that he had made a number of misstatements, but whether deliberately or not they do not say. It has been a prodigious task to check up everything the witness said, for he went into minute details regarding many acts of his official life and spoke altogether something like 300,000 words, but lawyers and investigators have been searching old newspaper files and documents to find out if his memory was at fault.

On one matter at least they hope to show that the Colonel either had a very poor memory or was not entirely frank. This is his testimony regarding his sanction of the merger of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company and the Steel Trust. The Colonel testified that ex-Judge Elbert H. Gary, head of the Steel Trust, and Henry C. Frick called upon him at the White House early on the morning of Nov. 3, 1904, and that he, Mr. Roosevelt, insisted that full publicity be given to the transaction. He added that the newspapers of that day told all about what had taken place. As a matter of fact, Mr. Barnes's investigators say, the public was not taken into the President's confidence. They have searched the newspapers of Nov. 3 and 4 of that year and they can find no reference to the White House conference between the President and Mr. Gary and Mr. Frick.

Edward M. Platt, a son of the late Senator Thomas C. Platt, whose private correspondence has shed so much new light upon past political events in the State, arrived in Syracuse tonight with an entire new lot of letters. They will be read to the jury, if Justice Andrews allows them to go into the record, tomorrow or Tuesday. The letters complete the correspondence which passed between Colonel Roosevelt and Mr. Platt and between Mr. Platt and Mr. Barnes. None of the letters has been published. Mr. Platt brought them here under subpoena from John M. Bowers, senior counsel for Mr. Roosevelt. Just what the Roosevelt lawyers hope to show by them is not known; none of the lawyers would discuss the subject tonight.

Mr. Barnes, when he is called upon to testify, will deny point-blank that he ever had the number of conversations with Mr. Roosevelt, when the latter was Governor, that the Colonel has testified to. Mr. Roosevelt said that he had dozens of conversations with Mr. Barnes, many of them when no third person was present, and that he retailed to Mr. Barnes many things that Thomas C. Platt, the "easy boss," had said on legislative and other matters, and that Mr. Barnes had said he believed Mr. Platt's attitude was the correct one. Mr. Barnes will testify that he had but one conversation with Mr. Roosevelt when they were alone, during the time specified, and not more than five or six altogether.

Mr. Barnes, it appears, kept a diary during those years, and it will be produced in court. Its contents are being kept a profound mystery and the Barnes forces prophesy that in time it will become as famous as John A. Hennessy's "little black book."

It is very likely that an attempt will be made to put William Loeb, Jr., Mr. Roosevelt's former private secretary, in the Ananias Club, also. Mr. Barnes's lawyers have been carefully checking up his testimony, and they claim to have discovered that the conversation he testified to having had with Mr. Barnes about the United States Senatorship fight in 1911 did not occur in fact until two years later. Mr. Loeb's testimony is considered to be very vital to the Colonel's case, for it was offered to prove the Colonel's charge that Mr. Barnes and Tammany Leader Murphy had an alliance regarding legislation at Albany. Mr. Loeb fixed the time of the conversation with Mr. Barnes as "about the time Mr. Sheehan was being eliminated from the race." If it can be proved that Mr. Loeb was two years out in his dates, the Barnes lawyers believe it will strongly influence the jury to throw out all his evidence.

There are other matters that will be brought up by the Barnes forces to attempt to discredit both the Colonel and his witnesses. One of these relates to the Colonel's attitude toward corporations at the time he was Governor and later. The Colonel has made much of the fact that he vetoed the Ford Franchise Tax bill. William M. Ivins, Mr. Barnes's counsel, will attempt to show that this bill as originally drawn would have been effective in taxing large corporations, while the one the Colonel finally did get through, after it had been drawn up by Frank Platt, gave the corporations an opportunity to take their cases to the courts, thereby causing delay and the loss of millions of dollars to the State.

The Barnes lawyers will also seek to show that Mr. Roosevelt was taking campaign contributions from corporations at the time he accused Mr. Barnes of doing the same thing. Mr. Roosevelt criticised Mr. Barnes for accepting money from corporations during 1908, whereas it will be shown that Mr. Cortelyou collected nearly $200,000 from the Miss Kuper, Who Sought Bronx Hospital Funds, Is Discharged.

Miss Estelle Kuper, 23 years old, who lives with her parents at 936 Tiffany Street, the Bronx, was arraigned before Magistrate Breen, in Morrisania Court yesterday, charged with soliciting alms.

Lieutenant McAuliffe of the Police Commissioner's office testified he arrested Miss Kuper on Saturday night at 149th Street and Third Avenue. She was wearing a white sash, he said, bearing the words "Bronx Hospital," and was holding a coin box and soliciting contributions.

The defendant's brother, Theodore F. Kuper, an attorney, characteried the arrest as an outrage, and said his sister had been informed by Chief Inspector Schmittberger that she might ask contributions for the hospital provided she had credentials.

"There is no doubt that the defendant was asking the money for the hospital," said the Magistrate. "Discharged."

CHURCHMEN SEEK $60,000.

Grace Methodist Congregation to Start Ten-Day Campaign.

A campaign to raise $60,000 in ten days, which if successful will win a conditionally offered sum of $10,000, will be begun next Wednesday by the members of Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, of which the Rev. Dr. Christian F. Reisner is the pastor. In addition to the customary collecting teams of men and women, motion pictures of Billy Sunday in action, nightly dinners, and bicycle squads will be employed.

The Billy Sunday pictures were shown in Grace Church last night, and tonight Rodeheaver, Sunday's choir leader, will conduct a concert at the church. Rodeheaver will play several trombone solos and lead a choir of 400 singers trained by Tali Esen Morgan.

Dr. Reisner launched the campaign in his sermon yesterday morning. His appeal for team workers was responded to generously, and three invalid women in a near-by sanitarium who heard him through acousticons sent word that they would assist by letter writing and needlework. Dr. Reisner announced that the campaign would be begun with a dinner on Wednesday night, at which the chief speaker would be W. W. Kingsley, President of the Y. M. C. A., who led the recent $4,000,000 campaign for his organization.

The Treasurer of the Grace Church campaign is William Cummings of 280 Convent Avenue, and contributions may be sent to Frank Williams, President of the Broadway Central Bank, and H. C. Thompson, manager of the Colonial Bank. The money collected will be used to pay off a $23,000 mortgage on the church and for the extension of the church work.

BOYS CAUGHT AS THIEVES.

Went to Movies with 41 Cents Booty, Police Say.

James Cveny, 8 years old, and James Comiskey, 11, of 3,002 and 3,054 Third Avenue, respectively, were arrested and charged with juvenile delinquency yesterday.

It is alleged by the police that the boys broke into a fruit store at 3,056 Third Avenue and gathered up 9 cents and quantities of fruit, and then visited a butcher store adjoining and picked up two knives and 32 cents. The fruit and knives they hid in the cellar, and with the cash paid their way into the nearest moving picture show. They watched the performance three times, then went back to their cache.

The boys were peeling apples and oranges when Detectives McIlhargy and Hagney of the Bronx bureau, assigned to the robbery reported by the fruit store owner, found them in the cellar. The parents took the prisoners home. The boys will be arraigned in the Children's Court.

$235,000 PICTURE ARRIVES.

Thought to be a Holbein Portrait Bought by H. C. Frick.

On board the American liner Philadelphia, which arrived yesterday from Liverpool, was a painting consigned on order to New York, which, according to Purser Irvine, was valued in the ship's manifest at £47,000, ($235,000.)

He said the painting was in a wooden case about four by three feet and had been sent on board at Liverpool by an express company. It was locked up in the specie room for the voyage and will remain there until it is claimed today.

An official at the Custom House said the painting will have to go to the Appraiser's Stores to be valued, but no duty will be paid if it is proved to be old enough.

An art dealer said last night that he believed the painting was a portrait by Holbein, bought by Henry C. Frick.

PEACE ESSAY PRIZE GOES TO DR. ATKINS

Justifies Fighting for Freedom in Contest for Carnegie Union's $1,000.

FIGHTING EDGE NOT DULLED

Says History Has Shown All Wars to Begin in Aggression—His Plan for World Peace.

The prize winners in the peace essay contest under the auspices of the Carnegie Church Peace Union, which closed on Jan. 1, were announced yesterday.

The first prize of $1,000 goes to the Rev. Dr. Gaius Glenn Atkins, pastor of the Central Congregational Church of Providence, R. I., well known as a leader among the Congregationalists in New England.

The judges were Robert Underwood Johnson, former editor of The Century; Canon George William Douglas of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, and Dr. Washington Gladden of Columbus, Ohio. The prize that Dr. Atkins won was offered to "any pastor of any church in the United States."

Three prizes offered to students in theological seminaries were awarded to the following: R. W. Nelson, Phillips University, East Enid, Okla.; P. V. Blanchard, Andover Seminary, Cambridge, Mass., and R. Niebuhr, Yale School of Religion, Lincoln, Ill.

The ten prizes offered to church members were all awarded to men. They were: Hoyt H. Hudson, Coeur d'Alene, Idaho; Bryant Smith, Boulder, Col.; Oliver C. Moles, Edgewatef, Col.; Philip Arnold, Cranston, Ill.; Benjamin Lloyd Knight, Iowa City, Ia.; Roy Francis Howes, Palo Alto, Cal.; Arthur Lockwood Johnson, San Jose, Cal.; Charles L. Stewart, Urbana, Ill.; Walter B. Brock, Bethesda, Md., and Clyde Eagleston, Oxford, Tex.

Dr. Atkins's Argument.

Some of the striking parts of Dr. Atkins's essay, which is entitled "The Causes of War," follow:

This war is teaching us first of all that humanity has not lost its fighting edge. The hopes and fears of those who believed that our old fighting instincts were dead or so blunted as to have lost their primitive and terrible power are alike disappointed; we are offered from day to day proofs that men generally are capable of displaying a finer and more desperate kind of courage than ever before.

So, our world being what it is, we see how necessary it has been for liberty again and again to make its way with the sword. Religious wars are always quite as truly wars for religious freedom as wars of religious intolerance; a good part of all that fighting which we owe to imperialism is only the noble and saving resistance to those who refuse to be imperialized.

It is not too much to say that there is no real freedom today, whether in the administration of the State, in the unhampered worship of God, or in the operation of democracy itself, that has not been won by fighting. The measure of religious tolerance which holds in Europe today was, to begin with, at least won by the sword: at the edge of the sword Holland cut herself free from Spain; at the edge of the sword the "divine right of kings" was hopelessly and finally beaten down on English soil; at the edge of the sword the better part of the French Revolution got room and chance for life; at the edge of the sword the American colonies freed themselves from their overzealous mother; at the edge of the sword slavery in America was ended and paid for; and no prophet is wise enough to say that this long and heroic chapter in the history of humanity is finally closed.

Regarding the peaceful tendencies of democracy and the willingness of France as a Republic to avoid war and causes of war, he said:

We here in America have maintained a standing army, which may be dismissed as negligible, have reluctantly built a respect-commanding navy, and have on the whole been, perhaps, too careless of our national defense, not because we are unwilling to pay the price or fight, if need be—there is nothing in our national history to prove that we have been afraid to fight—but because on the whole we have instinctively given expression to the peace-making, peace-maintaining, peace-trusting forces, which are implicit, in the life and temper of democracy.

France's Character Changing.

Republican France left to herself, would have forgotten her military ideals and ambitions, and have even foregone her revenge, in spite of the menace of that cordon of steel lying over against her northern frontiers. France was rapidly becoming a peace-loving nation, and another generation without war would have gone far toward transforming her national character.

Democracies left to themselves do not take kindly to war; there is no denying that democracies have fought wars aplenty, but on the other hand they have never gone out to meet them, and have always been willing to make a just and honorable peace when the necessity for war has passed.

Arguing that all wars are brought about by aggression, Mr. Atkins said:

If we can succeed in eliminating the causes of wars of aggression, we shall, of course, at the same time eliminate wars of defense. Wars for liberty and national independence, which are the only wars in which humanity can take just pride, have always been forced upon the people who carried them on. They have always been slow in appealing to the arbitrament of arms, and have almost always sought to exhaust every means of peaceable settlement before they finally began to fight.

The word "pacifist" has become a term of reproach, and even now, when we are having such a demonstration of the havoc of war as has sobered the whole world, public opinion as represented by the average American newspaper is still contemptuous of the pacifist and all his works.

Why is this? Evidently because we have failed to see that the solution of any question on the very highest levels is an immensely more difficult and heroic thing than its solution on lower levels.

We fight because fighting is easier than keeping the peace; war is not, as its apologists would tell us, a high and heroic way out of international difficulties; it is the low and cowardly way. It is easier to take arms against a neighboring people than to sit around a council table and work out in wisdom and brotherhood and self-restraint the questions which the war involves.

Braver Man Turns Other Cheek.

However we may differ as to the wisdom of turning the other cheek, we must agree that it takes a braver man to turn the other cheek when he does it as a matter of principle than to strike back.

Here is the true answer to Bernhardi and his kind. All that they seek in discipline and devotion to militant ideals can be more truly attained as the nations address themselves to the ideals of peace, which are not the cowardly or complacent submission to things as they are, but the resolute endeavor to make things what they ought to be.

In his conclusion Dr. Atkins makes a plea for educational activities toward the end that the causes of war may be eliminated. He points out, in this direction, the opportunity of the Church.

"At the heart of our American life," he says, "is the American Church. Free from entangling alliances with the State and its parties, with no cause to serve save the causes of an ultimate justice and a regnant righteousness, she has leadership, power, influence to feed into the life of this nation an idealism which shall cast its light far down the future's broadening way and make plain the path along which the people shall come."

A similar contest is now being held by the union, to close on Dec. 31.

The Church Peace Union was founded about a year ago and endowed by Andrew Carnegie with $2,000,000. Its purpose is to spread the gospel of peace through Church agencies, and, in harmony with this, soon after organization the prizes announced yesterday were promised. Also, $10,000 was appropriated in April, 1914, for a world peace congress in London or Berne, which was postponed because of the war. The Secretary of the union, who has active administration of the details of its activities, is the Rev. Frederick Lynch, 70 Fifth Avenue.

WALSH NOW ASSAILS ELDER ROCKEFELLER

Nation's Employing Power Is Almost Subject to His Will, Labor Investigator Says.

TO BLAME IN COLORADO

And Is Still Managing the Mines Through John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Cincinnati Audience Is Told.

CINCINNATI, May 2.—Frank P. Walsh, Chairman of the United States Commission on Industrial Relations, in answering the charge of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., that he had made public private correspondence, said today that "no matter which has to do with breaking down the civic organism of the State or country can be called private."

"If these letters that Mr. Rockefeller has sent to this commission are true," Mr. Walsh continued, "and I believe they are true, then I have violated no confidence, inasmuch as the facts in these letter show conditions which have not heretofore been given to this commission, and which I believe are vital to the understanding of the Colorado coal strike situation.

"But I have nothing but pity for John D. Rockefeller, Jr. He is representing the greatest fortune in the world, and I want to say in doing this he does not do anything without first getting orders from Tarrytown. John D. Rockefeller, Sr., is still managing all the mines in Colorado. He is still building up all of his investments the same as he did when building up the Standard Oil Company.

"And in this respect I want to say that if this commission did nothing more than open up the doors of 26 Broadway it would have justified its existence. I believe the fortunes of Rockefeller and the Rockefeller industries point the way to the solution of industrial unrest in the country today. I base this conclusion on what the commission has found out to be facts. The source of the potential employing power of the United States is almost entirely invested in New York City, and I might say it is almost subject to the will of one man, and that man is John D. Rockefeller, Sr.

"I want to call your attention to the fact that the Rocky Mountain Fuel & Iron Company and the Victor American Fuel & Iron Company are two of the largest corporations of this nature in Colorado and are practically controlled by the Rockefeller group, owners of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company. This is a fact despite the stout denial by the Rockefeller people, up to the time that we went to Colorado to conduct the investigation."

Mr. Walsh then sketched briefly the situation in Colorado.

"Mr. Rockefeller, in his letter to me, stated that it appeared singular to him that I was one to disturb the industrial peace," continued Mr. Walsh. "If the trial of Lawson and the Ludlow massacre is industrial peace, then God forbid that we have peace. I fully agree with Mr. Rockefeller that the women and children at Ludlow were not shot, but were smothered to death, and I lay this at the door of the Rockefeller group.

"It is a crime in Colorado to fix prices, but in a letter from L. M. Bowers to John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Mr. Bowers said: 'The Colorado Fuel and Iron Company usually leads in the fixing of prices.' Mr. Bowers is brought back and punished for what is a crime in that State, the fixing of prices.

"A letter that has been sent broadcast is one containing a speech by the Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis of Brooklyn, part of which says that the Colorado operators were willing to meet with the union and deal with them collectively. This is a falsity that is palpable. Senator Patterson of Colorado on the witness stand testified that he had a group of operators and a group of union mine officials in adjoining rooms and that the union miners not only agreed but were anxious to meet with the operators, but the latter absolutely refused to meet with the union men. This Hillis pamphlet was issued from Detroit, and inquiry there by our investigators revealed the fact that the young lady in charge of the office did not know where it came from, but was under instructions to see that it was widely distributed.

Mr. Walsh then touched upon the Texas land situation. He said in part:

"In Texas conditions are worst of any, but the hopes and the hearts of the people are brighter than any. We received sworn testimony of numerous witnesses that men, some of them with families, worked for 50 cents a day and had to pay their own board. At the same time we ascertained that on one ranch alone, the Taft ranch, comprising about 300,000 acres, only 12,000 were being worked. We found in Texas conditions bordering upon serfdom. We found in numerous localities the women and children of Texas are in the same condition that confronts the women and children in the cruel, crowded and congested districts of some of our factory towns, plus loneliness and lack of educational facilities."

Mr. Walsh, in answering Mr. Rockefeller, addressed the People's Power League of this city.

How often have you sat beside a Phonograph and thought, "Could I but play it—could I but exercise some power of control over this music! How wonderfully perfect, how satisfactory, how much more interesting would the Phonograph become!"

The Aeolian-Vocalion

Is a Better Phonograph and One that You Can Play

When You Play It

When you play the Aeolian-Vocalion by means of its wonderful new feature—The Graduola—you do not change the artist's interpretation. That remains always, in spirit, the same.

His phrasing, his tempo, are part of the Record. These you neither can, nor indeed do you desire, to alter.

But this you can do. You can give to the music new beauty and a new quality of liveingness. You can vary it in subtle details, just as the Artist himself varies his every performance.

You can shade and color the tones, now rendering this soft passage still softer. Again giving to these brave phrases still greater power and dominance.

Think what this means! Mastery of the Phonograph means mastery of all instruments and voices.

Do you love the violin? Then play violin Records, expressing your own musical instincts with the bows of the world's most famous masters. Do you wish to sing? The sweetest, best-trained voices in the world are yours.

Words cannot picture the charm and interest of the Aeolian-Vocalion with its marvelous new tone-control. You must hear it and play it yourself. Then you will comprehend why it has leapt into instant and amazing popularity.

When It Plays for You

When you let The Aeolian-Vocalion play for you—for like other Phonographs it will play itself—you are astonished at what sound like new tones and effects.

The music is richer and deeper and fuller than any you have heard before from a Phonograph. Nor do you hear any of those noises that have seemed to be inseparable from phonographic reproduction.

Every instrumental Record that it plays reflects its own distinctive tone-quality. The violin is truly a violin, with all the wistful, string beauty of that instrument. Clarionets, flutes, horns, all identify themselves the moment they are heard. While vocal Records sound like the veritable living tones of human beings, not like strident reproductions.

If you use The Aeolian-Vocalion for dancing, another phase of its superiority to other Phonographs becomes apparent. Its fullness and body of tone give it greater carrying power than other Phonographs possess. Without loudness or harshness, its musical strains pervade a greater area, reaching the ears of even those relatively distant from it.

The Aeolian-Vocalion is made in a large variety of beautiful models. Its prices compare favorably with those of Phonographs of other make. One favorite style, costing $90, may be purchased for $8 down and $5 per month. All the different models are sold on equally moderate terms. Liberal allowances are made on Talking Machines of other make, taken in exchange.

CURRENT HISTORY

A Monthly Magazine

THE EUROPEAN WAR

This magazine originated in the extraordinary demand for an intelligent, readable, explanatory record of the events which have occurred since August 1, 1914. Not one-sided or prejudiced, it prints the story as told by the chief antagonists, the eyewitnesses, and the literary spokesmen of the nations in this tragic drama of history.

When the powers of historians of the future have been taxed to write a full and well-proportioned account of this war, it will still lack the vividness and sheer thrill of these first-hand accounts. The impassioned speeches of the German Emperor; the terse, dramatic descriptions from the fronts by staff correspondents of the world's newspapers; the glimpses of fighting in the letters of soldiers, and the words of fate spoken from the European Chancelleries suffice to give the reader a reasoned notion of the causes and effects, the interplay of moral and spiritual antagonisms that have hurled vast armies into conflict.

While the European war furnished the occasion for starting this magazine, it had been planned long in advance to be a permanent monthly review recording the progress of the world as told by great authorities and gifted spokesmen. As coming events cast their shadows before, Current History will interpret the past and the present with an outlook upon the future. Great programs of action and forecasts of future events, when made by able men, will be included.

OLD ST. PATRICK'S HOLDS CENTENNIAL

Mott Street Cathedral Packed at Services Conducted by Noted Clergymen.

RICH SEATED BESIDE POOR

Father McMahon, in Sermon, Deplores the Laxity of Churchgoers—Cardinal Is Present.

Old St. Patrick's Cathedral, in Mott Street, yesterday held a centennial service in which distinguished Catholic clergymen in the country participated, and the congregation packed the edifice to the doors. Outside of the church, which is in the centre of one of the most thickly populated parts of the lower east side, several policemen kept order among the hundreds who could not gain admittance after pews and standing room had been filled. Inside, the words of the speakers and the thoughts of the listeners went back to the first days of the Mott Street Cathedral, when its surroundings consisted of open fields between Broadway and the Bowery Road and, as a historian puts it, it was "so very close to the wilderness that foxes were frequent visitors." Yesterday's celebration marked the one hundredth anniversary of the dedication of the church.

The services began at 11 o'clock and lasted until 1. Cardinal Farley was present, and at the conclusion of the services passed down the aisle and blessed the congregation. High mass was celebrated by Archbishop Bonzano, the Apostolic Delegate to America, who came from Washington to attend, and after mass he pronounced the Papal blessing on those present. Father Joseph McMahon, pastor of the Church of Our Lady of Lourdes, a graduate of the school maintained by Old St. Patrick's, preached the sermon, tracing the history of the church and referring to the remarkable growth of the Catholic Church in America since the dedication of the old Cathedral.

Laxity of Church Goers.

After expressing gratification of the material prosperity of the Catholic Church of today, Father McMahon dwelt upon the change in spiritual attitude of a great many of the Catholics of today as compared with the Catholics of the day in which the old Cathedral was built. Accompanying the great growth of the church, in numbers of communicants and in wealth, he said, there had been a deplorable increase in laxity on the part of churchgoers.

"We can look back in sad reminiscence on those former days," said Father McMahon. "Then there was not the same commingling of Catholics that is to be seen now. New York itself was rather provincial, and Catholics were fewer in number and stood more apart than they do now. There were then few scandals, and the circumstances of the times which kept our people apart were the bulwark of the church's growth.

"There is now a marked inconsistency, with many of our people, between their professions and their practices, and this is one of the greatest dangers which confronts our church today. With national prosperity has come great self-indulgence and great love of pleasure, but I warn you that this canker of self-indulgence is the cause of the great problem upon the solution of which depends the further growth of the church."

Among the changes which the one hundred years had witnessed, the priest said, were those in observance of Lent and the Holy Days, all of which involved the spirit of mortification of the body, which was being more and more widely ignored.

"Whereas our material prosperity has been unequaled," Father McMahon said, "is it not a fact that the church has been influenced by that spirit which Leo XIII called 'The Spirit of Americanism?'"

In concluding, he urged his hearers to strive to enlarge the work which had been started with the building of the old church and to avoid letting worldliness and the spirit of cosmopolitanism make inroads on their religion.

Rich and Poor Together.

The persons who heard the sermon presented an interesting study of contrasts. In the pews were many members of the congregation of the present St. Patrick's Cathedral in Fifth Avenue, which succeeded the old church as the seat of the head of the diocese in 1879. A number of these had come to the servce in their automooiles. There were present also a great number of the present congregation of Old St. Patrick's, some of whom had been in that congregation in the days when it was still the seat of the Archbishop of the diocese.

Within a few feet of the visiting members of the Fifth Avenue Cathedral, and in some cases beside them, sat women with shawls over their heads and men wearing flannel shirts and collarless. Most of these were Italians, for the district, originally peopled largely by the Irish, has become an Italian community. In the background, standing behind the pews, were little Italian children and more women with shawls.

The celebration of high mass followed the sermon. Cardinal Farley occupied the throne in the sanctuary, which was formerly the throne of the Bishop of the diocese, when this was the only cathedral of the city. The Deacon and sub-Deacon were the Rev. Daniel Quinn and the Rev. Terrence Gilmartin; the Deacons of Honor to the Celebrant, Mgr. Brann and Mgr. Wall; the assistant priest, Mgr. Edwards; the Deacons of Honor to the Cardinal, who was accompanied by Mgr. Lavelle, were Mgr. McGean and Mgr. Guinan. Mgr. Mooney was the assistant priest to the Cardinal, and Mgr. Connolly the Master of Ceremonies.

In the sanctuary were Mgr. Duffy of Albany, a former classmate of Mgr. Kearney, the present pastor of the old Cathedral; Mgr. Kean, Mgr. Flood, Father White, S. J.; Dr. Chidwick of Dunwoodie Seminary, and Fathers Lynch, Huntman, Dean, Reilly, Rossi, Gill, Cunnion, and Donlon. Brother Cyril of Providence, R. I., for eleven years Principal of St. Patrick's School, was in charge of the choir boys. Mgr. Connolly, the Master of Ceremonies, was once an altar boy in the church.

The centennial celebration will last several days, and will be followed by a reunion of St. Patrick's parishoners at Denial That Huerta Has Bought Apartment Houses or Will Bring His Family Here.

Abraham C. Ratner, financial adviser of General Victoriano Huerta, the former Mexican President, is going into business in New York and has engaged offices in the new Adams Express Building. Mr. Ratner, who, with General Huerta, is living at the Ansonia, said yesterday that the company of which he will be the head will probably be known as the A. C. Ratner Investment Company, and that banking and investing would be the principal activities in which the company would engage. He denied that General Huerta, whose most intimate friend he is, would be identified with the company.

For some days there has been an impression in local Mexican circles that General Huerta contemplated making New York his permanent home, and that he intended to bring his family from Spain to New York. This was denied by Mr. Ratner yesterday, who said that while the length of General Huerta's stay was indefinite he had no intention of remaining in New York. He branded stories printed recently that General Huerta had invested several hundred thousand dollars in New York real estate as false.

A matter that neither General Huerta nor Mr. Ratner would discuss was a report from Mexico City, via New Orleans, that General Huerta and General Felix Diaz, both of whom are now in exile, had been expelled from the Mexican branch of the Masonic order. In addition to Diaz and Huerta it was said that several other men prominent in Mexico during the Porfirio Diaz and Huerta regimes had been expelled from the organization.

At the Ansonia yesterday General Huerta said he was enjoying his stay in New York very much, and that he had never visited a finer or more interesting city. He has been viewing the sights daily for more than three weeks, and he hopes to see Coney Island and the other beach resorts before long. As yet he has set no date for his visit to Washington.

A long story, in which Francisco Villa is reported to have told what he intended to do when he triumphs over Carranza, Obregon and his other opponents in Mexico, was read to General Huerta yesterday. In that story Villa was quoted as saying he intended to make Mexico a nation of proud Mexicans, who would be "worthy of being called citizens of America," and that the new nation which he said was to be born would be one the citizenship of which will be "thrifty, peaceful and progressive."

General Huerta made no comment on the article, and only smiled. Mr. Ratner, on the other hand, said it was ridiculous to imagine Villa having talked in such fashion. Villa, as he pointed out, is illiterate, and could not talk as reported even if he wanted to.

Ratner then told the story of how Villa acted when he was a prisoner of General Huerta.

"General Huerta," he said, "had ordered Villa executed, and when Villa was brought before him he stretched himself at General Huerta's feet and made a piteous appeal for mercy. He caught General Huerta around the legs, tried to kiss him, and humbled himself in every possible way.

"'Please, please spare me,' he whined as he cringed before the General," said Ratner.

"Finally General Huerta decided to give him another chance, and turning to an aid told him to take Villa to Mexico City and put him in jail. And that is the brave patriot who is now busy giving out these wonderful interviews," added Mr. Ratner.

BANKRUPT BLAMES WIFE.

Friedman Says She Spent His Assets in Riotous Living.

Felix Friedman, a manufacturer of women's dresses, applied to Justice Hendrick of the Supreme Court to reduce his alimony from $20 a week to $4 pending his wife's suit for a separation. He failed to appear when the alimony was being considered, and he said he was kept away from the court by a trick. He said he called upon his wife at her request on the day the case was heard, and the moment he entered her home he was assaulted, he said, by his wife and her sister, who attacked him, and drove him to the street, where he was arrested.

The Friedmans were married fourteen years ago in Odessa. In an affidavit presented to the court Friedman said:

"I have always been home-loving, but my wife was inclined to frivolities and extravagance. I still want to live with her, although my life has been miserable since I married. I have been ruined financially and am a mental wreck. All my friends say that my infatuation for my wife borders on insanity, and I am continually advised that I ought to resort to the divorce courts, but for the sake of my children and my love for my wife I am willing to forgive and condone."

Friedman said he had established himself in business several times and had given his wife charge of the financial end.

"In 1913," he said, "my business went into bankruptcy because of her personal extravagance. Shortly afterward she told me that because of certain irregularities the authorities were after me to arrest me. I remained in Canada three months, and she continually wrote me to stay away. My suspicions became aroused, and I returned to find that the authorities never wanted me. The three months I was away she spent in riotous living. With the moneys left I could have made a responsible settlement with my creditors, but my wife consumed them, and today I am bankrupt."

Friedman says his wife has three married sisters, all living apart from their husbands. He says his wife has repeatedly told him she wanted a divorce and was willing to have it a collusive one. Then Friedman said:

"Several weeks ago my wife trumped up a charge of larceny that was made against me in a police court. The only witnesses she had were herself and my 7-year-old son, who had been tutored to give false testimony. The case was thrown out of court."

Mrs. Friedman, in an affidavit, said her husband's charges against her are the result of "insane delusions." Alimony was reduced to $12 a week.

OFFICIALS GOING TO FAIR.

New York Party Will Start for San Francisco on May 26.

A large delegation of city officials, their families and friends, is to travel to San Francisco to take part in the celebration of New York City Day at the exposition on Wednesday, May 26. The arrangements have been made by the Panama-Pacific Exposition Committee, appointed by Mayor Mitchel, assisted by a sub-committee, and the details are in the hands of David Ferguson, Supervisor of The City Record, Room 812, Municipal Building.

Mayor Mitchel has started for the West, and will be present at the ceremonies after spending a few days bear shooting at the Anderson ranch in Wyoming. The rest of the party will leave the Grand Central on a special train on Saturday, May 15. They will travel through the Canadian Rockies by the Canadian Pacific Railway route, and will visit Vancouver, B. C. They will reach San Francisco on May 24, two days before New York City Day. They will start back on the Saturday following, and will visit Los Angeles, San Diego, and the Grand Canyon, arriving in this city on Monday, June 7.

The city officials wish to extend the privilege of using the special train to as many of their friends as decide to take the trip, and full particulars can be obtained from Mr. Ferguson. Hotel accommodations in San Francisco will be aranged by Morton L. Fouquet, the city's representative at the exposition.

The Panama-Pacific Exposition Committee consists of Mayor Mitchel, Chairman; George McAneny, Lewis H. Pounds, Frederick H. Stevenson, and Frank L. Dowling. Henry Bruere is Chairman of the sub-committee, of which the other members are Robert Adamson, R. A. C. Smith, Louis Graves, Merritt H. Smith, F. J. H. Kracke, John A. Kingsbury, Robert B. McIntyre, Dr. G. F. Kunz, Burdette G. Lewis, Mrs. Mathilde C. Ford, E. A. Zabriskie, Travis H. Whitney, and Albert E. Hull.

WOULD BAR HEAVY BUSES.

Vibrations Crack Ceilings, Boskowitz Tells Estimate Board.

Adolph Boskowitz, a lawyer of 60 Broadway, has written to the Committee on Franchises of the Board of Estimate to protest against the operation of heavy motor buses through the residential streets. He lives at 32 West Seventy-second Street, and has had experience in the last few months of the effect of the Fifth Avenue Coach Company's buses on his ceilings and walls when they pass at a considerable speed. He asks the committee not to give up the idea of extending the bus service, but to regulate it in such a way as to make it innocuous to property.

Taking the maximum weight that the committee in asking for bids has set for motor buses, 10,500 pounds, he states in his letter that these, even when filled, and so weighing about 14,500 pounds, do not cause serious vibration in buildings as long as they are operated at only seven or eight miles an hour. But as soon as they are run at from ten to twelve miles an hour, he says, "ceilings and walls of buildings are cracked, and frequent passage increases the width of these cracks, weakens walls and ceilings, and will ultimately cause the former to fall and the latter to require support."

For the truth of these assertions, Mr. Boskowitz says, he can quote the reports of seismographic observations made in his premises by Marshall W. Brown, a consulting engineer, and Walter Timmis, A. S. M. E. He does not consider that the repaving of the streets would improve conditions, although frequent repaving will be necessary, he says.

The remedy Mr. Boskowitz proposes is the operation in the residential districts of motor buses about 2,000 pounds in weight, and he sees no objection to their running at fifteen miles an hour. He would confine the larger buses to business streets, where buildings of steel frame construction can stand the strain.

If the heavy buses are permitted to operate along the residential streets, such as Seventy-second Street, Mr. Boskowitz foresees many damage suits against the city.

MASONS TO MEET HERE.

Since that time several new lodges have been instituted, and a substantial increase in membership will be shown.

After the various reports have been presented and referred to the appropriate committees, a recess will be taken until 9 o'clock on Wednesday, when the business of the convention will be resumed. The special order of business for the afternoon of Wednesday is the election of officers for the ensuing year. The installation of the officers will take place on Thursday, and the communication will be closed until next year.

COURT EMPLOYE ENDS LIFE.

Matthew Murphy, a Yorkville Politician, Hangs Himself.

Matthew Murphy, 56 years old, of 216 East Eighty-fifth Street, for more than ten years an attendant in the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court and a well-known politician in the Yorkville district, committed suicide yesterday morning by hanging himself to a bedpost in his room.

Murphy's body was found by Mrs. Mary Gorman, his housekeeper. According to Mrs. Gorman, he had been in ill-health. Two months ago he returned from a sanitarium in Flushing.

Murphy was reputed to be wealthy. He owned the house he died in and four others. He was a bachelor, and formerly resided with a married sister and a brother, both of whom are now dead.

FIGHT IN FIRE HOUSE; OFFICERS ARRESTED

Captain and Lieutenant Are Held Under Bail for Felonious Assault.

DUMBBELL FELLED FIREMAN

George and Bonna of Truck 26 in Harlem Make Counter Charges Against Man Dangerously Hurt.

Captain Raymond L. George of 117 Clay Avenue, the Bronx, in charge of Hook and Ladder Company 26 at 52 East 114th Street, and Lieutenant Joseph Bonna of 208 West 143d Street, of the same company, were held in bail of $1,000 each by Magistrate McQuade in Harlem Court yesterday morning on the charge of felonious assault upon John Broderick of 349 East 139th Street, a fireman of Company 26, who is now in Harlem Hospital. Broderick has a laceration of the scalp and possible fracture of the skull from a blow said to have been struck with a dumbbell. George and Bonna made counter charges of assault against Broderick.

Policeman Repetto of the East 104th Street Station was summoned to the fire house late on Saturday night, where he found several firemen pouring water on Broderick, who was unconscious and bleeding from a deep wound in the scalp. Repetto put in a call to Harlem Hospital, where the fireman was taken.

When Broderick regained consciousness; he told the policeman that he had called at the fire house to talk to Captain George, who had that afternoon served him with a notice that charges had been preferred against him for absence from duty without leave. Broderick said he urged upon the Captain that he had had a good record up to the present, and asked that the charges be withdrawn. Captain George replied that it was his duty to maintain discipline, and that he did not have the power to withdraw the charges. Before long, Broderick said, they had hot words and then blows.

While he and Captain George were fighting, he said that Lieutenant Bonna entered the room and started to help Captain George. During the fight an inkstand and other missiles flew and Broderick said he was finally laid out by a blow over the head with a heavy wooden dumbbell.

After Policeman Repetto had reported this at the East 104th Street station, the Lieutenant on duty sent him out to arrest the Captain and Lieutenant.

Battalion Chief Walter Gorgen asked Magistrate McQuade to parole the Captain and Lieutenant in his custody yesterday. This was refused, and Chief Gorgen then furnished bail for the two men.

Captain Gorgen was at the fire house in uniform last night. He said it was against the rules for him to discuss the case. He refused to say whether he was on duty.

FLOORS FALL, FIREMEN FLY.

Water from Howard Street Fire Pumped Out of Subway.

Members of Engine Company 31 narrowly escaped being crushed to death when three floors of the four-story loft building at 3 Howard Street collapsed at a fire which started at 3 o'clock yesterday morning. Deputy Chief Langford sensed the danger and ordered every fireman out of the building just before the crash. A second alarm brought Rescue Company 1, under command of Deputy Chief Joseph B. Martin. But investigation showed that every man was accounted for.

The building was occupied as a rag and paper shop by the Nicholas Doddato Company, and on the upper floors was a quantity of heavy machinery. The firemen were forced to fight the fire from the outside, and such a quantity of water was thrown into the building that it poured over the sidewalk and ran a foot deep to Lafayette Street, where it entered the Subway. It was not sufficient to affect traffic in the old Subway, but enough water poured into the Manhattan and Williamsburg Bridge Loop to stop work, and electric pumps had to be set going for several hours.

BOARD TO GO DEEP INTO FRANK CASE

Coming Clemency Inquiry So Thorough as to Amount Practically to a New Trial.

ANXIOUS TO DO JUSTICE

Outgoing and Incoming Governors Co-operate — Dorsey Wants Resentencing of Prisoner Hastened.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, May 2.—Leo M. Frank praetically will get a new trial when his petition for clemency is taken up by the State Prison Board. Instead of the usual technical hearing, it is stated at the Capitol, the commission intends to go into the case from every angle, and its recommendation, whether for or against Frank, will be in the nature of a new verdict.

It is stated authentically, though not officially, that Governor Slaton and Governor-elect Harris, who succeeds Slaton in June, have expressed the wish that the commission exercise unusual care in dealing with the Frank petition. Both Slaton and Harris feel that, in view of the criticism of the procedure at Frank's trial, the commission should not confine itself to ordinary routine in dealing with the petition for clemency, but should go into the case practically as if no verdict had been rendered against Frank. In this way the members of the commission will act as jury.

The Commissioners already are studying the record of the case, and when the hearing begins the friends of Frank expect to present new matter. One of the strong points for Frank will be the letter from the late Judge Roan, who presided at the Frank trial, declaring that if he lived he would ask clemency for Frank, as he was not satisfied of his guilt.

When the recommendation of the Prison Commission goes to Governor Slaton or Governor Harris, as the case may be, it will be reviewed as carefully as any case passed on by the Supreme Court. Both Slaton and Harris are understood to have stated that they would not be governed by technicalities, and that when the case is finally disposed of the action taken will be as nearly just as it is possible for human decision to be.

The case may be handled by Governor Slaton, but it is doubtful. His term expires in June, and it is believed that the Prison Commission will not have completed consideration of the case by that time. In fact, it is believed that the commission will not begin consideration of the case until some time in June. In that event Governor-elect Harris will pass on the case.

Both Slaton and Harris have shown a desire that the case be handled in such a manner that, whatever the final action, no one can say that Frank has not had a "square deal." This attitude greatly encourages Frank and his friends. They hardly expect a pardon, but they are confident of commutation, and they believe that, with the sentence commuted, it is only a question of time before Frank's innocence will be established and freedom follow.

It is understood that no more statements to the public will be issued by Frank or his lawyers. They are bent now on conciliating sentiment in Georgia, and they realize that pressure from the outside is going to count for little.

Solicitor General Hugh Dorsey, who prosecuted Frank, wants the case hurried, for some reason. He will go before Judge Ben Hill tomorrow and apply for a writ or habeas corpus to bring Frank into court and have him resentenced to death. The proposed action of Dorsey causes surprise, as the mandate of the United States Supreme Court has not been received and is not expected until about May 20. Dorsey takes the position that there is no need to wait for the mandate; that waiting for it would mean useless delay. Judge Hill says Dorsey's proposed action in asking for resentence in advance of the mandate will raise a novel point of law, and he is not prepared to state how he will rule on the question.

There is much speculation as to why Dorsey wants early action. The Solicitor himself says it is simply to avoid useless delay.

CIRCUS MAKES BOY TALK.

Runaway, Who Baffled Officials, Finally Tells His Story.

After George Devilla, a Spaniard, 13 years old, who was picked up at the Grand Central Station on April 7, had baffled every effort of the officials of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children to get his story, the Superintendent, Ernest K. Coulter, hit upon the circus as an instrument for discovering the truth.

This was after the successive yarns of the child had led to fruitless investigations in Albany and Utica, and at the docks of the Panama steamship lines, the river fronts, and the Spanish-American hotels. No trace could be obtained of his history or his connections.

Mr. Coulter decided that a visit to the circus would put the boy in a mood in which calculated deception would be impossible. It was the first circus the child had ever seen, and it had its full effect. On his return he frankly answered every question. He told of leaving Spain at the age of 5 years; of his father being killed on the Panama Canal, and of his mother's remarriage. The family lived in Utica, and then removed to West Virginia. There, he said, he was put to work as a trapper, forced to work in freezing water ankle deep, and to do heavy work for long hours. His stepfather, he said, took his wages, and he had no hope of getting an education except by running away.

The society got into communication with the boy's mother and verified his story. Her consent is awaited in order that a home may be found for him here.

WEST POINT TO GRADUATE 164

Number of New Second Lieutenants Will Exceed Vacancies.

The class of 1915 of the United States Military Academy at West Point will be graduated the morning of Saturday, June 12, when Secretary of War Garrison will hand diplomas to the largest class West Point has graduated in a century. There are 164 cadets in this class, and their graduation means that the Second Lieutenacies in the army which will be available on July 1 will be exceeded. There are 105 prospective vacancies in the grade of Second Lieutenant, including 39 in the engineers, 27 in the cavalry, and 8 in the coast artillery. There are no vacancies in the field artillery.

It is believed that at the West Point finals this year the largest number of old graduates who have ever attended the alumni reunion will be present. Among them will be Major Gen. Scott, the Chief of the General Staff; Brig. Gen. Erasmus M. Weaver, Brig. Gen. E. A. Garlington, and Major Gen. J. B. Aleshire.

SURPRISES ARE PREDICTED

Views Intended to Show Whereabouts of Family When Mrs. Bailey Was Shot in Physician's Home.

Special to The New York Times.

FREEPORT, L. I., May 2.—The town of Freeport is again stirred up over the Carman murder mystery, and the Carman home on the Merrick Road is again being pointed out to automobilists and strangers as the house in which Mrs. Lulu D. Bailey, of Hempstead, was shot to death on June 30 last. Interest here seems greater now, if possible, than it was at the first trial of Mrs. Florence Carman, and the Mineola courtroom probably will be packed long before Mrs. Carman's second trial on the murder charge is begun before Justice Blackmar tomorrow.

Events of this afternoon here led to the conviction that the lawyers for the defense had suddenly learned of something unexpected in connection with the trial. It has been rumored that the prosecution plans to spring a surprise on the defense. At 3 o'clock this afternoon George M. Levy, Mrs. Carman's counsel, sped to the Carman home with a photographer in his automobile. He was followed in a few minutes by H. G. Clark, who will be one of the assistants in presenting the case for Mrs. Carman. Dr. Carman left the house in great haste a few minutes later in his touring car, and returned some time later with James M. Seaman, who will also assist Mr. Levy in the presentation of the case. A secret conference which lasted until evening was held, and at its conclusion the lawyers and Dr. Carman refused to discuss its cause.

From what the lawyers for the defense said before the conference today it is understood that much new evidence will be presented at the second trial by this side. A photographer has been coming to the Carman house for several weeks, and among the photographs he has taken are said to be a number showing Dr. Carman and other members of the family in the exact positions which the defense asserts they were in on the night of the shooting.

One of these is said to show Mrs. Carman standing by the mantelpiece in the reception room adjoining the doctor's office, in which Mrs. Bailey was shot, and is meant to show that, in that position she could not see into the office and learn what had happened. Another shows the rear porch, to which the prosecution attempted to show that Mrs. Carman had fled after firing the shot. Others show interior scenes in the Carman home, and one shows Dr. Carman beneath the operating chair, in the position to which he said he jumped when the shot was fired.

District Attorney Smith denied tonight that he would be assisted in the presentation of the State's case by a lawyer employed by William Bailey, husband of the murdered woman, as had been widely reported. Mr. Smith said that he believed Justice Blackmar to be one of the fairest justices on the bench and was confident of a "square deal." When asked whether Mrs. Carman would be imprisoned again during the trial Mr. Smith said that the matter rested with the presiding Justice, and that he, Mr. Smith, would make no argument to keep Mrs. Carman out of jail on the bail which is responsible for her present freedom.

Mr. Levy, discussing this point, said it was a matter of indifference with Mrs. Carman, as she was confident not only of being acquitted, but of removing all suspicion at her second trial.

BRANDEIS APPEALS TO JEWS

Urges Them to Support Smaller Nations to Win Justice.

Louis D. Brandeis, with an appeal to the Jews living in America to support all of the small nations of the world as the best means of obtaining fair treatment for the Jews, stirred an audience in Earl Hall, Columbia University, last night until the enthusiasm burst forth in a ten-minute demonstration for the speaker. The crowd filled the hall and the stairs leading to the ground floor, and overflowed into the Columbia crew's trophy room.

"The reason we must make common cause with all the small nations of the world," he said, "is that the large nations must surely come to the day when they will see that it is not good national policy to suppress any one people and drive out of those people their national instincts. We have had much of that in Russia. They tried to make people o every nationality conform to the national traits of Russia.

"Is England less glorious because all of the little nations that went to make up England were permitted to develop naturally and be units within the greater unit? Is England wronged because the Scotch are different from the Welsh and the Irish are different from the English?

"Disabilities are imposed upon the Jews in Russia, where they are denied the freedom to move about, the right to own land, the rights fundamental to the pursuit of life, liberty, and happiness. To win these rights is the only solution possible for the Jewish problem, for any other solution involves suicide and death to Jewish aspirations.

"We must demand group liberty as well as individual liberty. We must work for a growth in all nations similar to the growth which enables the German, French, and Italian colonies in Switzerland to develop and grow side by side."

After his address, Mr. Brandeis and Charles R. Crane, who accompanied him, were obliged to stand in the trophy room greeting an enthusiastic crowd. Mr. Brandeis made a brief speech there.

JEWS IN AGRICULTURE.

E. S. Benjamin Says Those Aided by Hirsch Fund Have Progressed.

"The watchword of Jewish charitable institutions in America is opportunity," said Eugene S. Benjamin, Trustee of the Baron de Hirsch Fund, speaking last night at the Hotel Majestic before the Judaeans. "The purpose of the fund and the allied institution for the betterment of the conditions of Jewish immigrants in this country is, primarily, to help them help themselves."

Mr. Benjamin said it was rather a large question whether or not the Jews of America were better off today as a result of the aid which their own people have given them since the work of the fund, established in Paris by Baron de Hirsch, had, in 1891, been extended to America, but the statistics gathered by the fund had shown that in agriculture at least great strides had been made.

"For a long time before 1891," continued Mr. Benjamin, "it was recognized that some kind of organized effort was needed on the part of Jews already acquainted with the conditions in this country, to help new arrivals to make the best of their opportunities. The moneys of the fund supplied just the capital needed to start immigrants in business of their own choosing, and, when industrial schools were established, to train their children in definite trades.

"The best results have been accomplished in the field of agriculture. During the nineties attempts were made to establish Jewish agricultural communities in different parts of the country, but all save one—the community at Woodbine, N. J.—proved unsuccessful. From the lesson learned at Woodbine, it was decided to approach the matter in a different way. By regulating the distribution of the immigrants over the country, Jews have been sent to 1,700 different communities of the United States and Canada where working conditions were more suited to them than was the case in congested districts like New York. In fifteen years 70,000 Jews have been sent West through the advice of the fund."

TEXTBOOK TO AID NOTARIES.

Volume Prepared Here to Cover Laws of Various States.

Deeds, mortgages, and other papers passing through the hands of notaries and commissioners of deeds are often rejected because of the lack of some necessary feature. Each State has its own methods of handling official papers, the methods being fixed by law. Large sums of money are sometimes lost through failure to follow the legal requirements.

Once a piece of property in Texas was sold here. When the deed got to Texas it could not be received because the notary, being ignorant of the laws of that State, had not prepared the deed properly. It was sent back for correction. Before it again reached the Register's office in the county where the property was situated the seller of the property had failed and it was attached by his creditors. The purchaser of the property became one of the creditors and lost the money he had paid.

So many complaints have been made concerning the lack of knowledge of notaries that many months ago County Clerk Schneider prepared a small pamphlet containing much information as to their duties and responsibilities. But the information was confined to their work in this county, and still much fault was found. Then it was discovered that if a notary wanted to fit himself so thoroughly as to make his work safe from complaint or fault he would have to wade through the pages of seventeen different law books and that even then his knowledge would not be thorough.

So Mr. Schneider had Eugene B. Schwartz, his notarial clerk, prepare a volume containing all the information extant upon the subject. Many copies of this work have been sent to lawyers in the county, and many warm acknowledgments have been returned.

A quantity building—but a quality building, too

The Equitable is the biggest building in the world, and will accommodate more tenants than any other, but it is equally notable as a quality building, for there is not one square foot of its immensity which could be better in quality or more skilfully erected into place.

The fact of the matter is, that this biggest of all business buildings is also a great building in the sense that quality has not been subordinated to commercial considerations, but rather has been utilized to enhance those considerations.

JOHN G. CAPERS

Prominent Washington Attorney, formerly Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

"The Best Tobacco Made"

Emphatic Statement by an Eminent Authority—Pipe-smokers, Read what John G. Capers Has to Say

"When I was Commissioner of Internal Revenue under Presidents Roosevelt's and Taft's Administrations, I had a great deal to do with tobacco. In the collection of millions of dollars of tax I came intimately into contact with the whole business. Tuxedo I consider the best tobacco made. I smoke it myself and find it soothing and restful, mild, fragrant and non-irritating to the throat."

John G. Capers

Mr. Smoker, that's evidence straight from an authority that Tuxedo is the top-notch smoke of them all. The tobacco that a famous Internal Revenue Commissioner chooses for his own smoke because he considers it the best tobacco made.

And remember this, men:—that's picking Tuxedo from a mighty big field; for between you and us and the account sheet, the Government collects $100,000,000 a year in revenues from tobaccos.

Mr. Capers is now a prominent and successful practising lawyer in Washington, D. C., and we are glad to include his name in Tuxedo's great list of friends. It's the same old story everywhere Tuxedo is tried: Quality tells.

Don't quarrel with your pipe and don't quarrel with your tongue. Take your tobacco troubles to good old Tuxedo!

Your pipe'll be sweet and your tongue'll be sound if you smoke Tuxedo. Tuxedo can't bite or blister. That's all taken out by the famous "Tuxedo Process"—the original process which the other brands like so well that they try to imitate it.

And you'll find the Internal Revenue Commissioner absolutely right as to Tuxedo's quality.

Tuxedo

The Perfect Tobacco for Pipe and Cigarette

Try Tuxedo for a week, and you'll know why Mr. Capers and thousands of other distinguished smokers say that it is "the best tobacco made."

YANKEE BATSMEN HIT THE BALL HARD

American League Leaders Beat Paterson, 14 to 1, in One-Sided Batting Bee.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., May 2.—The Yankees smothered the Paterson Atlantic League team here this afternoon in a one-sided game by the score of 14 to 1. They started right after Shortway, who was sent in to pitch for Paterson, and in the first inning scored seven runs.

After that first inning the New Yorkers took things easy and did not extend themselves. Paterson's only run came in the fourth inning, and the Yanks added seven more to their score after the first inning.

Shortway was replaced in the fifth by Haas, but Donovan's crew had unlimbered their bats for the afternoon and made ten hits during the three innings that Haas performed. Artie Pickering, the local boy who is catching for the Yankees, received a big ovation.

Billy Sunday, who held services at his tabernacle, was a much greater attraction than the Yanks, and while there was lots of room in the baseball bleachers, Billy's tabernacle was filled. The score:

Chicago Beats Pittsburgh in Game Cut Short by Rain.

CHICAGO, May 2.—Vaughn had the Pittsburgh batters at his mercy today, while McQuillan was hit hard, and Chicago won an easy game, 7 to 1. Rain fell through two-thirds of the contest, and terminated it after the visitors had batted in the eighth. Triples by Bresnahan and Phelan helped materially in Chicago's run making. Score:

TRIAL HEATS FOR HARLEM REGATTA

Preliminary Races Will Be Rowed on Saturday Preceding Memorial Day Events.

Entries look so promising that the Regatta Committee for the Harlem races of Memorial Day has decided to row some of the preliminary trials on the preceding Saturday. The officials feel that the entries for the special canoe events will require the same sort of elimination. It is not yet decided as to this, but Coach Cramer believes it probable that these will also have to be advanced. It is said that there may be as many as thirty entries in some of the canoe events.

In spite of the cold weather of the past week, the crews have been on the river each evening. For a month they have been making trial spins on Saturday and Sunday, but from now on they will make it a serious daily business.

Samuel Cramer, who is coaching the Commerce High School entries and the Lone Star members is well pleased with both. His schoolboys made a very satisfactory trial race last week, and he is now enthusiastic over the outlook. He expects that this race will be rowed in heats, as there are now six certain entries. Commerce, Fordham Prep., De Witt Clinton, New Rochelle, Flushing, and Newtown have all been working hard and are in good shape. The Fordham Prep. crew may go to the Whitney races for high schools next Saturday. In practice they are rowing close to the Fordham freshmen.

De Witt Clinton candidates are now rowing in a shell loaned them by Coach Jim Rice of Columbia. The Metropolitan Rowing Club has offered the use of its house to the Clinton men, and they are now quartered there for their daily workouts.

The Lone Stars have decided to enter a junior quadruple crew. They will sit as follows: A Levine, bow; T. Fishel, 2; D. Maimin, 3, and H. Roenthal, stroke. Maimin, who is the Lieutenant of the club, may row in the junior single also.

Harry Callahan, Chairman of the Knickerbocker Canoe Regatta Committee, reports that his club will be represented by four entries in the canoe races on the Harlem River. In the cruising class at one-half mile they will enter the tandem single blade and the tandem double blade. In the racing class at one mile they will compete in the club four single blade and the club four double blade.

MUST START GAME ON TIME.

National League Clubs Restricted in Moving Around the Circuit.

John A. Heydler, Secretary of the National League, yesterday issued the following statement: "Hereafter no club in the National League will be permitted to begin a championship game prior to the usual starting hour, or to discontinue play before the game is finished in order that participating clubs may catch early trains. The last train, as stated in the league's laws, will be construed to mean the last train scheduled to reach the next city at least an hour prior to the customary time of starting games."

The above ruling was made and announced yesterday by President Tener of the National League. The case upon which the ruling was based occurred in Pittsburgh recently, when the game was called at 5 o'clock, before its completion and with the score a tie. Pittsburgh being scheduled to play in St. Louis the next day, an agreement was entered into before the game that the teams should stop play one hour prior to the departure of the 6 o'clock train for St. Louis.

The effect of President Tener's decision will be that in the future teams must take a later train, provided such later train is scheduled to arrive at the city where the next game will be played not less than one hour prior to the customary starting time.

Plank Pitches Championship Ball for St. Louis Against Newark.

The Newark Feds were beaten in both parts of a double-header at the Harrison grounds yesterday by St. Louis by scores of 1 to 0 and 2 to 1, respectively. Eddie Plank, the former Philadelphia Athletics' star, was in the box for the visiting team in the opener, and pitched wonderful ball, allowing but three hits. He was opposed by Falkenburg, who was also in rare form, and a pitchers' battle resulted.

The second affair was also well played. Bob Groom, formerly of the Washington Americans, outpitched Kaiserling, the local boxman. Newark will be idle today. The scores:

Chicago Leads the League.

CHICAGO, May 2.—Chicago took first place in the Federal League race today, defeating Buffalo twice, while Newark was losing a double-header to St. Louis. In the first game honors between Schulz and Hendrix in a pitching duel were even until the eighth inning, when Chicago drove in four runs on three singles, a sacrifice, a double, and a triple, clinching the game, 4 to 0. The second game, played in a drizzling rain, was called at the end of the fifth inning. Buffalo's errors and bunched hits enabled the locals to win, 5 to 1. The scores:

BOXING ENDS AT GARDEN.

Coffey and Reich Will Close Bouts for Summer Wednesday Night.

Interest of boxing enthusiasts centres this week on the long-awaited bout between Jim Coffey, the Dublin Giant, and Al Reich, the local heavyweight, which takes place Wednesday night in Madison Square Garden, and will be the last boxing exhibition staged in this arena until next Fall. No limited round bout of recent years has been looked forward to with more interest than that between Coffey and Reich, and the fact that the winner will prove himself the most likely candidate for a match with champion Jess Willard lends further zest to the coming contest.

The chance to get in line for a bout with Willard alone should bring out the best that is in the rivals, and it has been predicted that the battle will terminate with a knockout. Each has been working for two weeks with the help of big training staffs, Joe Jeannette schooling Coffey and Willie Lewis having Reich in charge.

Coffey entertained more than 500 fans at the New Polo A. C. yesterday, and after sparring twelve rounds with Jeannette, Jack Connors, and Mike McTeague, tipped the scales at 200 pounds, the same weight at which Reich will go into the ring.

Coffey is bigger and stronger than at any time in his ring career, and his improvement in the past year has made him the best drawing card in New York. Many experts pick him as the only logical choice for a championship bout with Willard. The match will be the last step Coffey will make before Manager Gibson will seek a bout with Willard for his man.

Reich is the best man Coffey has boxed and in condition the ex-amateur heavyweight is a dangerous customer, being a hard, snappy puncher, combined with more than ordinary cleverness. Indications point to a crowded house, and when the reserved seats go on sale this morning there is sure to be a rush for the choice ones.

St. Nicholas Rink will take the place of the Garden as the scene of the leading bouts during the Summer months. Already two big bouts have been arranged by Manager Jimmy Johnston. On May 12 George Chip, the New Castle middleweight, tackles Jimmy Clabby, the clever Westerner, and the succeeding week, May 19, Lightweight Champion Freddie Welsh will again oppose Leach Cross. Both of these exhibitions give promise of developing considerable excitement.

Clabby and his manager, Larney Lichtenstein, arrived here yesterday, and tomorrow night at the Broadway Sporting Club the former will engage Al McCoy, the so-called middleweight champion, in a ten-round bout. Clabby will complete his training for the match at a local gymnasium today. He is in shape now, but needs a little work-out to limber his muscles after a long train journey. McCoy, whose pugilistic affairs are now directed by John Dunn, has been training at Stamford, Conn.

The first of the week's boxing entertainments take place this afternoon at the Broadway Club, when the sixteenth of a series of matinee performances will be given. The main event will present as opponents Jack Hempel of California, who helped prepare Willard for his bout with Jack Johnson, and Battling Johnson. Hempel and Johnson boxed a draw on the Coast. Ten semi-professional exhibitions will complete the program.

Young Rector of Jersey City and Bobby Williams of Philadelphia hold the headline position on the bill arranged by Matchmaker Donnelly of the Olympic Athletic Club in Harlem tonight. There will be two other ten-round set-tos, bringing together Johnny Martin and K. O. Smith of Yorkville, and Young Lippie and Young Omega.

All colored boxers will be the contestants at the Vanderbilt A. C., in Brooklyn, tonight. Harry Gardner and Frankie Williams are scheduled to box ten rounds, and so are "Wee Wee" Barton and Kid White.

Tomorrow night at the 135th Street Sporting Club, Battling Chuck will oppose Harry Gardner, Young O'Leary boxes Young Mundy, and Darkey Griffin engages Young Small.

Jack Kearns, manager of Billy Murray and Red Watson, has concluded negotiations with Tom Andrews of Milwaukee, whereby he will take a string of boxers to Austarlia for Snowy Baker, leaving on boat sailing from San Francisco the latter part of this month, or early in June. In the party will be Murray and Watson, and probably Ray Temple, lightweight, and Joe Bonds, Tacoma heavyweight.

HERZOG AFTER RIGLER.

Cincinnati Manager Wants Umpire Punished for Fist Fight.

ST. LOUIS, May 2.—Manager Charles Herzog of the Cincinnati National League Club watched this afternoon's game between his team and the St. Louis Cardinals from the players' bench. He did not venture on the field, where Umpire Rigler, with whom Herzog engaged in a fist fight yesterday, was officiating. The Cincinnati leader was nursing a badly bruised face, the souvenir of the encounter.

Herzog declared tonight he would not appear again on the same field with Rigler until the umpire had been "punished for his conduct as a ball player would have been punished for a similar offense." He denied Rigler's charge that Herzog spiked him in the foot, and the umpire denied that he struck Herzog with his mask.

Players who witnessed the affray say Herzog spiked Rigler and Rigler struck Herzog with a mask, but that in each case the action was accidental.

Tomorrow the manager and the umpire will appear in Police Court to answer charges of disturbing the peace.

Race in Morning at Ascot.

LONDON, May 2.—The Ascot race meeting, which hitherto has been one of the chief events of the social season, is to be robbed of all its social glory this year and will be held merely to meet the necessities of the breeding of bloodstock. King George is taking a great amount of interest in the arrangements for the meeting, being desirous of keeping it within the severest limits. The Royal Hunt Cup, the classic event of the meeting, will be missing from this year's cards, and the King has expressed a desire that the racing shall commence in the morning of each day and finish before luncheon.

For the Chester race meeting, which commences next Tuesday, the committee has given over the county stand for the entire use of the soldiers who are at present quartered on the race course. Accommodation has also been made in one of the other large stands for the wounded soldiers from Chester and district to see the races, and all soldiers in uniform will be admitted to the course free.

A cablegram received from Calcutta states that the Derby Sweepstake, which is one of the largest in the world, is proceeding, but will probably be a small affair this year, mainly confined to members of the Calcutta Turf Club.

AMERICAN RECORD FOR KOLEHMAINEN

Hannes Kolehmainen, leading amateur distance runner of the world, materially assisted in the successful inaugural of the outdoor track and field season in the Monument Club games, before 6,000 persons, at Celtic Park yesterday, by creating a new American record for fifteen miles of 1:23:08 4-5. In making this new mark, which supplants James Crowley's figures of 1:25:15, the Finnish athlete finished eighth in the fifteen-mile handicap race, which was one of the features of the meet. But his mark will be accepted, for he was timed by five of the best timers of the metropolitan district. The world's amateur record for fifteen miles is 1:20:04 3-5, made by F. Appleby in England.

Handicapper Obertubessing cut out an almost impossible task for Kolehmainen by allotting handicaps as high as fifteen minutes, and the victor, John Philips of the Bronx Church House started with an allowance of fourteen minutes. Charles Pores of the Millrose A. A., winner of the Brooklyn-to-Sea Gate Marathon, with a mark of eight minutes, ran second to Philips. E. L. Bryne, another Bronx Church House representative, who started off the same handicap as Pores, finished half a lap back of the young distancer. Aaron Morris, a colored boy, who competed unattached, brought up the rear of the prize-winning brigade.

The fifteen-mile record, made by Crowley in 1909, was one of the weakest on the American record books, and probably would have been wiped out sooner had Kolehmainen made a previous attempt at it. The Finn's performance was much better than it appears on the face, for there was a stiff wind blowing through the backstretch during the running of the event.

It was evident from the start that the Finn had little chance to win because of the big handicaps, and he never attained a position where he was within striking distance of the leaders. He was about three-quarters of a mile back of Philips at the finish.

Philips, who at one stage was more than two miles ahead of Kolehmainen, took the lead in the seventh miles, and was never headed. Pores had considerable ground to make up, which he did in workmanlike fashion, but he was three-quarters of a lap from the tape when the winner finished.

Kolehmainen's time by miles was: 1, 5:02 4-5; 2, 10:22 1-5; 3, 15:45 3-5; 4, 21:03 3-5; 5, 26:27 3-5; 6, 31:58; 7, 37:30; 8, 43:02 1-5; 9, 48:30; 10, 54:19 1-5; 11, 59:56 2-5; 12, 1:05:43 1-5; 13, 1:11:33 2-5; 14, 1:17:15 1-5; 15, 1:23:08 4-5.

From a competitive standpoint the one-mile invitation race was the feature of the meet. Mike Devanney of the Millrose A. A. again demonstrated his superiority over Sidney Leslie of the Long Island A. C., but not until he had received one of the hardest races of his career. The event, in fact, was a repetition of the two-mile indoor championship in Madison Square Garden, when Leslie, after leading until the last lap, had to bow to the superior sprinting qualities of Devanney. The time of the race was 4:32 4-5, and was very good, considering the wind. Myles McHugh of the Pastime A. C., an added starter, annexed the third honors. The only other starter was W. Banfield of the Knights of St. Antony.

Leslie led for three circuits of the four-lap track. On the back stretch on the final he was challenged by Devanney, and for the time being staved him off. There was no stopping the Millrose man when he entered the home stretch, where he ran away from Leslie, winning easily. McHugh and Banfield were outclassed.

A promising sprinter was uncovered in the 100-yard dash handicap in H. Katz of the Irish-American A. C., who won from six yards in even time. Katz is only a schoolboy, being one of the stars of the De Witt Clinton High School track team. The summary:

100-Yard Dash, Handicap.—Won by H. Katz, Irish-American A. C., (6 yards;) H. A. Richardson, Salem-Crescent A. C., (6 yards,) second; W. McNamara, Ozanam A. A., (5½ yards,) third. Time—0:10.

Lux Leads in Ten-Mile Run.

F. Lux of the Mohawk Athletic Club yesterday captured the Pastime A. C. invitation road run of about ten miles from a big field. With his teammate, S. Weiss, as runner-up, Lux led practically throughout the journey, and was thirty-five seconds in front of Weiss at the completion of the ten miles. J. E. O'Connor of the Millrose A. A. was third.

The first twenty finished in the following order: F. Lux, Mohawk A. C., 52:00; S. Weiss, Mohawk A. C., 52:35; J. E. O'Connor, Millrose A. A., 53:00; R. Hug, Fifty-fourth Street Gymnasium, 53:10; T. Walkers in Practice Jaunt.

A big squad from the Walkers' Club of America took a thirty-five mile hike yesterday afternoon. The men left Van Cortlandt Park at 8:30 A. M., there being one squad of veterans and another of novice walkers. The latter covered about fifteen miles. The walk was for the most part over the roads in Westchester County. It was really a practice event for those who are to take part in the Philadelphia-New York race on May 29. Those who finished yesterday were Pacemaker J. H. Hocking, Gage, Heath, Lackemacher, Schwartz, Daniels, Goldstone, Hefferman, and Rede.

LEADER HURT IN RACE.

Cyclist Runs Down Reynolds and Robs Him of Victory.

Only two clubs finished full teams in the sanctioned novice run held yesterday through the streets of Bay Ridge, Brooklyn, by the St. Michael's Catholic Club. The representatives of the Presentation Club triumphed over the Trinity Club team by a score of 24 to 31. The individual honors went to Ted Fischer of the Presentation Club, who covered the course of approximately four miles in 22 minutes 42 seconds. J. J. Reynolds of the Ozanam A. A. was second and S. De Vine of the same club was third. Forty-two runners took part in the event and thirty-six finished.

Fischer's victory was unexpected, as Reynolds, after leading throughout, was thrown down and slightly injured by a bicycle rider less than a quarter of a mile from the finish, and at a time when he was leading by more than two city blocks. The bicycle passed over his left foot, lacerating the toes slightly, and before the Ozanam boy could regain his feet he had been passed by Fischer. Despite his injuries he tried to overtake the leader, but failed by forty yards. The summary:

Ted Fischer, Presentation Club, 22:42; J. J. Reynolds, Ozanam A. A., 23:50; S. De Vine, Ozanam A. A., 23:12; M. Murray, Presentation Club, 23:20; J. Pollard, unattached, 23:23; A. Leary, St. Agnes A. BECKER WINS ROAD RUN.

De Witt Clinton Runner Beats Big Field in City Playgrounds Race.

G. Becker, running in the colors of the De Witt Clinton Park, crossed the finish line a winner yesterday in the practice road race for members of the various public playgrounds throughout the city. His time was 21:20. The race was decided over a course measuring approximately four miles through city streets and was witnessed by a large crowd along the route. Johnny Hayes fired the gun which started the runners, twenty-two in all, on their way, and all but one completed the race.

Police Captain Ormsby witnessed the race and insisted that the runners were properly clothed before leaving the starting mark. Supervisor of Parks Lee also witnessed the run.

The De Witt Clinton Park runner maintained the lead from the start and had an advantage of one and one-half blocks over his nearest competitor at the finish. T. Helpine appeared certain of third place as the field entered the stretch, but he eased up in his pace and G. Creed secured the place at the tape by inches. The order of finish:

G. Becker, De Witt Clinton Park, 21:20; S. Silverstein, Sheridan A. C., 21:55; G. Creed, Salem-Crescent A. C., 22:00; T. Helpine, Morningside A. SKEE-BALL, NEW SPORT.

Variation of Bowling, of Seaside Origin, to be Tried Here.

Have you ever heard of skee-ball? No? Well in that case you had better look it up, for its devotees are firm in the belief that it will place in the scrap heap some of those games which are just now better known. It is reported to be as fascinating as bowling and to require the delicacy of billiards. The game first originated at Atlantic City and similar places and now it has emerged into a full-fledged city pastime. It is already popular in Philadelphia, and on Saturday the first alleys will be opened in this city, to be known as the Manhattan Skee-Ball Alleys, on Seventh Avenue, above Forty-second Street.

Skee-ball is a variation of bowling, in which the ball is put to an entirely different use. It is about the size of a duck-pin ball, and is rolled rapidly over a twenty-foot alley to a scientifically designed hump which makes it jump into the air. If the shot is properly directed, with just the proper amount of force, the ball will enter the bullseye of a target placed sixteen feet behind the hump and score fifty points. A less accurate attempt may score forty, thirty, twenty, ten, or nothing at all.

There are two unique features in connection with the innovation game. One is an automatic scoring device, which registers your score and adds it quicker than the mind can follow. This is a particular advantage when a gallery is following the playing of a match. The other is a nickel-in-the-slot attachment, which does away with the need of an attendant, as the balls necessary for playing one game are fed out by this method.

The balls roll over a cork alley, so that the game is practically noiseless unless a bell is installed to indicate a perfect shot. Nine balls are provided for one game, and the possible count is 450, though 200 points is considered a good game. The alleys are 36 feet long and four feet wide.

Soccer Season Nearing End.

Continuing the steady pace which brought them to the top of the percentage table of the first division of the New York State League the Continentals yesterday easily defeated the Yonkers eleven by 4 goals to 1 at Tibbet's Field, Yonkers.

After a scoreless first period the Bay Ridge soccer eleven took a perceptible brace, with the result that it scored two goals and won its second section New York State League championship match with the St. George eleven at Bay Ridge Oval, Brooklyn.

The Jersey A. C., leaders in the National League, received a shock yesterday afternoon at Clarke's Field, Newark, N. J., when the West Hudsons defeated it by 3 goals to 0.

NEW STAR APPEARS IN CYCLE RANKS

Robert Spears of Australia Defeats Alfred Goullet at the Newark Velodrome.

A new contender for the premier cycle sprinting honors arose yesterday at the Newark Velodrome when Robert Spears of Australia downed Alfred Goullet, his countryman, in two out of three heats of a special two-thirds-mile match race. The victory means that a new star in the game has made his appeal for recognition. Spears, who has only recently attained his majority, will be matched against Champion Frank L. Kramer next Sunday. Spears hitherto has always shown a world of speed in his races, but yesterday his judgment was better than ever, and he displayed careful preparation for the most important race of his career.

Spears won from Goullet in the first and third heats. He raced from in front, never allowing Goullet to head him off. Spears in the past has always relied on his great speed to carry him to victory from behind, but it was the late Manager Floyd MacFarland who had coached him to adopt different tactics. In the second heat Goullet, a master hand in match racing, jumped Spears before the first turn of the last lap was reached, and he won in the chase to the tape. Goullet, vanquished yesterday, has generally been considered the best sprinter in the game with the exception of Kramer.

The weekly contest held for the Brassard was successfully defended by Marcel Dupuy of France, who defeated the challenger, Frank Cavanagh, in a single heat of a match race. Cavanagh has apparently not yet reached his best form for the Frenchman won rather easily, racing the last eighth in 12 3-5 seconds. The holder of the Brassard gets a weekly prize of $50. The summaries:

Two-thirds of a Mile Match Race, (Professional,) between Robert Spears, Australia, and Alfred Goullet, Australia.—Won by Spears in two out of three heats. First Heat—Won by Spears; time of last one-eighth mile, 0:12 3-5. Second Heat—Won by Goullet; time of last one-eighth mile, 0:12. Third Heat—Won by Spears; time of last one-eighth mile, 0:13.

HAGEN WINS AT GOLF.

American Open Champion Captures the Exposition Championship.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 2.—Walter Hagen of the Rochester (N. Y.) Country Club, open golf champion of America, was the winner of the Panama-Pacific Exposition open championship on the links of the San Francisco Golf and Country Club today. He received a cash prize of $1,000.

The contest was over 72 holes at medal play, 36 being played yesterday and 36 today. Hagen's total score was 286. He broke all records for the course yesterday with 140, and continued his good golf today with 146.

John Black, professional, of the Claremont Country Club of Oakland, Cal., had the second best score, 294, eight strokes behind the champion.

Charles (Chick) Evans of Chicago, Western amateur champion, and Harry Davis, amateur, of San Francisco, tied for third place for the 72 holes with 297. They agreed to play off over nine holes, and Evans won. He completed the extra nine-hole round in 37 to Davis's 39.

Jim Barnes of the White Marsh Valley Country Club of Philadelphia, Western open champion, took third money among the professionals with 301.

Johns Does 18 Holes in 67.

"THE WESTPOINTER"
Reg. Trade Mark.

This is about a boys' shoe, and the only kind of a shoe boys should wear.

We have just put it out.

There had always been more or less foot trouble among the West Point Cadets, and when General H. L. Scott, now Chief of Staff of the United States Army, was Superintendent of the Military Academy he started a careful investigation.

This resulted in the adoption of a new type of shoe, designed by General Scott and his associates to allow the foot to work exactly as nature intended. It has thoroughly proved itself for seven years now.

In looking for the very best sort of shoe for boys we picked this West Point shoe.

We found that no shoe like it was on sale—but we have it now.

Our "Westpointer" is not merely a copy of the Academy shoe, but is actually made on the same last.

It is a correct shoe, not a corrective shoe, for the boy who wears "The Westpointer" should never have any foot trouble—and it is stated that one-third of the children in New York public schools have fallen arches, caused by incorrect footwear. "The Westpointer" is not only built in the right shape, but its special construction strengthens the arch muscles by allowing them perfect exercise.

We sent General Scott a pair of "Westpointers" to look over and criticise. He concluded his complimentary letter about them with the remark:

"I rejoice that you are taking this step in the education of the public to the proper care of the feet."

Within the last few weeks we also showed "The Westpointer" to a prominent orthopedic physician in New York, who said:

"You people have something better than you know."

Perhaps; at least we know we have a very good thing.

"The Westpointer" comes in 10 to 13½ sizes at $3.50 and 1 to 5½ sizes at $4.00, and is made of black calfskin with stout Blucher uppers.

Everything men and boys wear.

DR. ELIOT'S OUTLINE OF THE CONDITIONS OF PEACE.

Dr. ELIOT plans the foundations of permanent peace. Deeply concerned with the consideration of measures that may most speedily end the present great war, by a natural and benign projection of his thought he broadens his plan through the inclusion of safeguards against the recurrence of war. In the letter we publish today, written in response to a request from Mr. S. O. LEVINSON of Chicago that he "suggest the basis "for an immediate armistice and an "enduring peace," Dr. ELIOT renews the proposal publicly made by him some years ago that there be established a supreme court of the nations, with an international army and navy to enforce its decrees. This suggestion has now come to general acceptance among men who believe in the permanency of peace no longer as an ideal, but as a blessing within reach of practical realization, the highest blessing that could be conferred upon the peoples of the earth. Dr. ELIOT says in his letter:

> It should, further, be generally understood, before any suspension of hostilities is attempted, that the main object of the international conference or council called to settle the terms of peace will be to devise such a reorganization of Europe that national armaments can be safely reduced and a permanent peace secured through the establishment of a supreme international tribunal, the maintenance of an international military and naval force, and the stable development of international law.

It is possible, it is to be hoped for, it should be striven for. The minor and the major morals of nations are not quite the same as those of individuals. Governments, as the custodians of the interests of subjects or citizens, may and do adopt policies or follow courses that in the case of an individual would be considered selfish and mean-spirited. But as a mass meeting traditionally rises to a level of morality somewhat higher than that of its individual units, so from nations acting collectively we may expect a nobility of behavior not to be looked for with any degree of confidence when each determines for itself what it is to do. There must be sacrifices and renunciations—that is fundamental. But the social compact we call the State rests upon the agreement of each citizen to surrender something for the general good, not for the general good alone, but distinctly for individual benefit. Aspirations to world dominion go by the board, of course. They are not to be tolerated even without a supreme tribunal. Whatever sacrifices were called for, every reasonable man can see that compensation would be made a hundred fold by the resulting gain.

Dr. ELIOT suggests, as Dr. DERNBURG has done, that there must be "general acceptance of the proposal "that the freedom of the seas and of "the canals or channels connecting "great seas be placed under inter-"national guarantees." By more than one Power we could name that concession would be contested, and would be made grudgingly, if at all. The international lawyers would all oppose it and proclaim scores of reasons why the immemorial traditions of blockade, of contraband, of search and seizure and the destruction of private property at sea should be sacredly maintained. The chapters on conditions of war at sea make up a great part of all treatises on international law. It is natural, therefore, that the lawyers should resist a change so momentous. It will be pointed out that no great maritime nation could afford to assent to a principle which would so curtail its efficiency in war. It seems to be necessary to remark that the avoidance of war. If we are to go on fighting, if we are carefully to take thought about the means of success in future wars, then we may as well stop talking about a supreme international tribunal. But it is a postulate in the discussion that war is to be done away with, or made as nearly impossible as human ingenuity can make it. Freedom of the seas would seem to be, therefore, logical and necessarily included in the plan.

The open door, the freedom of trade opportunities, must likewise be included. As the discussion proceeds it will doubtless be enlivened by a wrangle between protectionists and free traders. Universal permanent peace would tend to bring about universal free trade. For one reason, because nations would no longer need to levy customs taxes, since expenditure for armament would be so very largely diminished. Representative TAWNEY a few years ago showed that 71 per cent. of the annual expenditure of the United States Government was on account of wars past, present, or to come. The venerable tariff for revenue argument would disappear and protection would have to justify itself as protection. It would no longer be incidental. And if it be true that following the war there is to be a general rise in wages in Europe the pauper labor argument would also disappear and protection would be hard beset to make out its case.

These considerations are pertinent to the noble aims within the wider scope of Dr. ELIOT's proposals, they are foreign to the immediate purpose of his suggestions. He has attempted, he says, "to outline the fundamental "conditions under which preliminary "negotiations for peace might reason-"ably be opened." They are the conditions of common international morality, of self-denying ordinances curbing the power of the mighty, of respect of the rights of the weak, of good neighborhood usage such as prevails in civilized and enlightened communities. There is necessary provision for the righting of wrongs already done. Belgium must have "adequate compensation for her losses." The principle must be recognized "that no "European population shall be held to "an unnatural allegiance contrary to "their wishes." Although stated in general terms, every one will see the application to Alsace and Lorraine. Further, "the national aspirations of "the peoples of Eastern and South-"eastern Europe shall be satisfied in "some reasonable measure." That points to Bosnia and Herzegovina, to some possible Balkan federation, if the pugnacious Balkan States can persuade themselves that such an arrangement would be beneficial. Colonies near or remote are not to be seized by force of arms, but enlargements of territory are to be recognized as worth having only when brought about "by consent and with good will." Dr. ELIOT has attempted only to formulate general principles, the applications in detail must necessarily be made by the peace conference itself and later by the supreme international tribunal he has in view. His conception of what is just, of what is eternally just and right, has been his guide, and in his broad and philosophic vision he foresees the time when the nations collectively will accept justice as the controlling motive of their policies, just as human society in civilized States, according to its enlightenment, makes justice the spirit of its laws.

There is not a thought or suggestion in Dr. ELIOT's letter that the warring nations, each and all, may not at this moment accept and act upon with wisdom and with honor. His conditions of beginning the discussion of peace are fair to all. If once formally proposed, no one of the belligerent nations could reject them without reproach. They would be formally proposed, they would come officially to the notice of Governments, and what is hardly less important, generally to the notice of peoples, if one of the belligerents would let it be known that it was prepared to consider them. In the beginning of peace parleys everything depends upon the state of mind. In all the nations now at war the state of the public mind must be that of repugnance to the unnamable horrors of slaughter. The state of ruling minds may be different. If the butchery is to continue, we shall know that it is because this or that nation is not ready to acknowledge defeat or because other nations are determined upon further victories and the infliction of exemplary and deterrent punishment. The cost will be terrible, the suffering beyond all measure. The path to peace lies open in the sight of all these nations, peace with honor, with the hope of permanence. It is time. There are no right purposes to be accomplished by the further prosecution of the war that may not be achieved in the deliberations of a dozen men seated at a council table. In the terms of peace enforced by conquest there would almost certainly lie the germs of future wars. In a conference following upon an armistice promptly declared, present peace could be secured upon conditions that would be the guarantees of future and permanent peace. For the happiness of mankind, for the prosperity of nations, the difference is inconceivably great. Every consideration save those which spring from the passions of war, from the lust of blood and ravaging, pleads eloquently in support of Dr. ELIOT's appeal. Let any of the embattled Powers intimate a readiness to discuss these conditions and it will have the full sympathy and aid of the American people and of the American Government in the endeavor to end the slaughter and to take an appeal from the field of arms to the conference chamber.

A CARRANZA BOOMERANG.

The denial by Mr. JOSE YVES LIMANTOUR that he wrote the letter to Mr. DE LA BARRA, published the other day, is conclusive. The letter is bogus, as the agents of VILLA have said it was, and so, of course, is the one addressed to FELIPE ANGELES and signed with the name of ex-President PORFIRIO DIAZ. The authenticity of the letters was not very seriously questioned, in spite of the mystery of their sudden apparition, as it was not conceivable that the American agents of CARRANZA would be guilty of a trick so contemptible as the use of bogus letters to create sympathy with their cause. For the purpose of the Carranza bureau in giving out the letters for publication was to put their opposers in a bad light in the view of the world. The purpose was not achieved. If the letters had been authentic they would not have proved the existence of a conspiracy between General ANGELES and the exiled clericos. The forged letters were skillfully composed, and whether they are the fabrications of a consul of the Carranza faction in the United States or another, they certainly did not tend to discredit the alleged writers. It seemed perfectly natural that the aged PORFIRIO should be anxious for the restoration of peace in Mexico and should believe that his own way of pacifying the country would still be effective. Neither he nor Mr. LIMANTOUR would be at pains to deny the authorship of such letters if they had really written them.

The revelation of the forgery, however, places the Carranza bureau in an unenviable position. Their boomerang has returned swiftly and struck them a heavy, if not a deadly, blow. CARRANZA's petty intolerance had already deprived him of American sympathy, and his agents' practice of distributing bogus letters will further injure his cause.

WAR AS A PLAGUE.

The young sculptors who are showing their conceptions of "War" in the competition arranged by the Society of Friends of Young Artists dwell on the physical results of such an experience as Europe is going through. Gaunt mothers with gaunt children in their arms, the horrors of the corpse-strewn battlefields, soldiers binding up the wounds of their comrades, woman crucified, all the depressing and none of the inspiring aspects of war are seen in the exhibition rooms, which bear a curious resemblance to the crowded alleys of Père Lachaise without the tin wreaths. Two or three of the competitors present the spirit of battles in the guise of a cave man. Several have been pitiful toward the innocent beasts slaughtered on the field. Once or twice a skeleton is shown in the pose of a winged Victory. Again his Satanic Majesty bundles up the débris of the battle grounds and carries off the dead world on his back.

As art the exhibition is weak, but it shows clearly enough the turning of public opinion toward a pessimistic view of war. It is no longer an affair for trumpet-blowing angels and "Triumphs" with Victory on her chariot crowning heroes. When CONSTANTIN MEUNIER undertook to symbolize labor he betrayed in a similar way the modern feeling toward labor as a curse. Twisted muscles and bent shoulders showed bodies oppressed by tasks too heavy for them. There were no strong men rejoicing to run their race in the recent exhibition of his works. Perhaps it is a good thing that we no longer idealize killing and physical hardship, but it would be interesting to know what subject would inspire the modern artist to cheerful statement. It would be interesting, for example, to see what these young people think of when the subjects of peace and industry are suggested to their minds.

DEFERRED COMPETITION.

The difficulty of arriving at correct deductions as to the effects of the war upon the future of international trade is that the war itself has a future. The economic premises are subject to change. If peace were at hand then it would be possible to say with approximate certitude what consequences were inevitable; but as both the time and the terms of peace are uncertain, all predictions must be conditional, or, as the Wall Street phrase is, "good until canceled."

One of the first and largest assumptions was that the industrial and financial prostration of Europe opened to this country world opportunities of a most unusual character. American merchants and manufacturers had only to find Europe's customers, appropriate their business, and gain an advantage in the competition for trade which would survive peace, for, afterward, of course, Europe would be handicapped by the necessity of rehabilitating herself. These notions now are undergoing some modification. At the Southern Commercial Congress last week WILLARD D. STRAIGHT of J. P. MORGAN & Co. said it was foolish for us to talk of capturing British and German trade because Europe was at war and because the Monroe Doctrine was supposed to give us a kind of hypnotic prerogative in the profits of South American commerce. Upon the restoration of peace Europe, commercially and industrially would aggressively undertake to recoup itself for the losses incurred in the war by extending her foreign trade.

The possibility of Europe emerging from the war with the means formidably to reorganize her industry and commerce has been almost wholly obscured by discussion of the amount of capital destroyed. It is not inconceivable. Necessity is a potent force. The productivity of capital is no fixed relation. Incentive is an important factor. The most dangerous competitor of all is the trader who is obliged to trade. He will do business on very hard terms. It is not at all improbable that the competition of Europe for world trade after the war will be more aggressive than before, and that capital in the hands of the European manufacturer and trader will be worked harder than in the past. So Mr. STRAIGHT thinks. It is something to keep in mind.

There is corroboration of an interesting nature in the reports from American Consular Agents in Europe to the Department of Commerce on post-bellum trade prospects. They agree that after the war Germany especially will be a very active competitor in the markets of the Orient, Southern Europe, and South America. "Not a single smokestack has been thrown down," one agent writes from Germany, "and when peace is de-"clared her [Germany's] tremendous "resources will be ready to enter on an "era of gigantic industrial energy." That is provided, of course, no smokestacks are thrown down, and that Germany is not hopelessly crushed by the Allies. The actual conditions that will exist upon the restoration of peace cannot now be foreseen. Germany's competition may be more or less formidable, accordingly as she is more or less damaged by what is yet to happen in war; but in any event Europe's rivalry in the markets of the world will not cease, and it may very well be rather intensified than diminished in consequence of the war, obvious assumptions to the contrary notwithstanding.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Americans Will Not Be Grateful.

As a result of action taken at Gibraltar by the representative there of the British censorship, Americans will not be exposed to the influences that would have been brought to bear on them had eight cases full of German and Austrian "propaganda literature," destined for this country and loaded on an Italian steamer bearing the noble name of Dante Alighieri, been distributed here and read.

It won't be because the Captain of that vessel, after the presence of the cases thus laden had been revealed by his manifest, escaped the long, hard job of digging them out for confiscation from deep in his freight-hold by promising that he would bring them back unopened on his return voyage.

Thus the censors extend to us the kindly protection which they accord to their own fellow subjects. As their intentions are good, one must not criticise their judgment too harshly, and to refrain from that is the easier, as we are already pretty well supplied with Teutonic arguments and statements. But while in no really desperate need for more of either, we do have, if not exactly a yearn, at least a willingness, to hear whatever our German friends have to say in defense or explanation of their "case," and we have no desire at all to have "the other side" kept from us by people in Gibraltar or anywhere else. Indeed, if precautionary measures of that sort didn't seem to us rather amusing, because of their futility, they might try our patience enough to excite something very much like resentment against our self-appointed guardians.

Scolding of the British censors, however, can safely be left to the Britons themselves and their newspapers. Both are giving a good deal of attention to that task and are performing it with an effectiveness which shows that while England's supply of shrapnel may run a little low at times, its stock of obloquious epithet remains abundant in spite of large demand and heavy consumption.

If the censors were a little wiser—or perhaps, one should say, if they were a little wise—they would know that if anything could make us suspect the Germans of having devised some efficient "propaganda" at last, it would be the toiling by their enemies of their efforts to get the same to our eyes and ears.

Pugnacious Seekers for Peace.

As a reporter Miss JANE ADDAMS would hardly meet the requirements of modern journalism. Those are, not only to tell the truth—of course Miss ADDAMS wouldn't and couldn't do anything else—but also to tell the whole of it, at least to the extent of giving to newspaper readers the basis for an accurate judgment of whatever happening is under consideration.

It is in this respect that the eminent lady's reporting falls below the modern standard. If left without other sources of information than her dispatches, one would inevitably conclude that the proceedings of the Peace Conference at The Hague were marked by perfect harmony, and that all the delegates were of a single mind as regards war in general and war in particular. As The Associated Press reports reveal, however, that is by no means the case. Concerning war, as war, they are well enough agreed—as is everybody else, for that matter—but when it comes to debate on the existing situation, the racial sympathies of the various delegations come bubbling briskly to the surface, and on contact with the air explode with bangs quite loud enough to give a dove of peace the shivers.

One of the few British delegates who had managed to get across the Channel did not hesitate to tell the other members of the congress that in demanding an immediate ending of the present conflict they were far from speaking for all women. And even in the congress itself a resolution favoring peace could not be passed until the words "with justice" had been added to it—a truly amusing addition, in the circumstances, for with it the resolution became one that might have come from the War Office of England, France, Russia, or even Germany. Every militarist in Europe claims to be fighting for nothing else.

In short, the women assembled at The Hague reveal—unintentionally, but not surprisingly—that, instead of being a group apart, they are human beings much like the rest of us, with the element of pugnacity well developed and as little disposed to pay any price for peace as men are. If they weren't, what a sorry world this would be!

Revealing Canal Dissensions.

General GOETHALS, in disclosing that there have been serious differences of opinion between himself and General GOETHALS in the conduct of Panama affairs, only spread nation-wide a secret that already had considerable extension. No work of such magnitude as the building of the canal was ever carried through without the development among those engaged in it of dissensions and jealousies, but this particular undertaking has been as rarely free from them as could be expected with humanity as it is.

That there should be friction between the constructive and the sanitary departments was inevitable. Each inevitably interfered with the immediate attainment of the other's end, and each expected and demanded of the other concessions and sacrifices of speed and convenience which that other deemed excessive. The one officer thought first of making the Isthmus a safe place to live in. That was his business and his duty, and the measure of his success has astonished the world and glorified his country. The engineer's first thought was to get ships moving from ocean to ocean, and he, too, astonished the world and glorified his country. But the two ends, though so closely related, were different, and—well, General GOETHALS had the more power, and it is the sanitarian who complains.

He did much, but he could have done more had his advice been fully followed. No doubt. The grievance, however, is not as large as he sees it—is no larger than would have been the alternative grievance resulting from a transposition of the supreme power.

THE FACT OF BOSSISM.

It Is an Organic Part of the Political Structure.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Regarding making bosses constitutional: Actual governing influences, or determining factors in any form of government, be they constitutional or not, are facts in that particular form of government, and are not to be disregarded as such facts. The boss phase of our form of government is proved beyond cavil to be almost as vital a function as our Legislatures themselves. Witness the part this element in our political life has played in the career of our most widely advertised ex-President—more recently a defendant.

All the elements composing the body politic—that is, the inertia of the mass of the population, its general stupidity and lack of attention to public affairs, the danger to property rights from popular onslaughts, the incessant change of individuals in office—all these factors do make necessary some constant, unchanging institution, to stand for one purpose amid such confusion. The static phases of our body social, the extremes of wealth and poverty, call for a static phase of government to which to appeal. This has been naturally evolved in the boss. He is not casual, nor passing, nor wholly bad and useless. His cause and effect are merely unstudied, and his existence scoffed at by the mass.

This is not an argument for bosses, but a plea that thought, instead of wild talk, be applied to this element of our political life.

Cotton Kits.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Kits of cotton-made articles are a God-send to the suffering soldiers in Europe, a help to the cotton growers and others affected, a decided aid to relief workers in Europe, such as the Red Cross, &c., and also a boost for the "Made in U. S. A." movement.

A kit made up of the following inexpensive cotton goods would be most acceptable:

An outing flannel sleeping garment, a few pairs of American-made socks, a half dozen soft mercerized handkerchiefs, one or more suits of light knit underwear, a wash cloth, a pair of towels, a cake of white (cotton oil) soap, a small celluloid pocket comb, a small pocket mirror with celluloid back, and a celluloid handle toothbrush.

I earnestly hope—as a volunteer Philippine War veteran—that some of your kind readers will incur the slight trouble and expense and send at least a few of the suggested comforts, which will mean so much to the poor, broken men who are deprived of every little personal belonging.

ALBERT LEE ANDREWS.

Mail Order Diplomas.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Referring to the letter of the Secretary of the Chautauqua Correspondence School for Nursing, I would like to call attention to the fact that a correspondence school for nursing cannot be sure that the answers sent by a pupil are written by herself, and a diploma may be given to a person who has never opened a classbook. I know of a case where a masseuse wanted some sort of correspondence school diploma, so she engaged a friend of hers, who had a smattering of technical knowledge, to be the "correspondent."

New York, April 28, 1915. L. S. H.

Phocion's Good Example.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Probably it is true, as your correspondent "C." alleges, that "Billy Sunday has called as many as 50,000 persons to hear him in a day." But his anecdote concerning Themistocles called to my mind the one told of an even greater Athenian, Phocion, who, after one of his speeches had been furiously applauded by the multitude, asked himself the question: "Can it be that I have been making a fool of myself?"

LIFE'S LITTLE IRONIES.

He watched the swirling waves sweep by
The pierhead with despairing eye,
And, flinging cap and coat aside,
Prepared to join the foaming tide.
"O Celestina Jones, for you,"
He breathed, "I bid this world adieu!"
He leaped, but an arresting hand
Of steel restored him to the land.

"I do not mean to interfere
In the sad business brings you here,"
The rescuer said, in soothing tones,
"But—what of Celestina Jones?"
"A year ago," the sad one sighed,
"The jilt became another's bride.
Since then life's lost its charm and zest,
And in yon waves I look for rest!"

The other gasps, "What fools are we!
Your Celestina married me!
I've lived in torment such a year
With her, I sought oblivion here!"
The situation's so absurd
The tragic pair to mirth are stirred.
The life they scorned seems strangely sweet—
Back to the world they turn their feet!

Our Japanese Philosopher Finds It In Artificial Privileges.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

May I be allowed to bring home to those who hold that the road to permanent peace is either an international court or an international police force, the superiority of something else which will eradicate the causes of war?

For the protection of a house against a fire there are two methods—one by installing efficient fire-extinguishing apparatus and the other by building the house of non-inflammable material; for the protection of a home against burglary there are also two ways—one by keeping the home prepared for a possible intruder and the other, as Mr. Henry Ford suggests, by getting rid of the undesirable element from the community. In a like manner the recourse for the protection of nations against possible aggressors must be had to either arming every one of them to the teeth or the stamping out of the root of war. Both war and human sicknesses are symptoms of organic disease, for the treatment of which a wise doctor would not resort to patent medicines or alcoholic stimulants, though he does not overlook occasional merits of those soothing tonics.

What, then, is the underlying cause of war? Even a casual observer might trace it to the existence of the artificial privilege, the most glaring features of which happen today to be tariff and immigration law. Shall we not meet in the council of reason and sanity and arrive at a voluntary resolution which will forbid any nation, race, individual or combination of them from monopolizing the whole or part of the means and the resources for human sustenance, comforts, and luxuries, which God meant for them all?

There is no reason for keeping on this mad race for bread and butter when, cutting off alcoholic beverages alone, we can save a tremendous amount of foodstuffs which now go to wastage and destruction. Science, in the meantime, will find us a way out before starvation ever faces us. As long as mankind remains enslaved to the yoke of food problem, so long the siesta for the true art and the true literature.

THE B. A. IN BUSINESS.

He Hasn't Even Learned to Spell, Adjutates a Critic.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Recently there appeared in one of the New York newspapers a statement that a Committee had come here from the State of Washington for the purpose of selecting a President for the University of that State. In your issue of last Sunday reference was made to approaching graduation exercises at one of the large colleges. These publications prompted me to write you of observations made and experiences had as an executive officer of one of the prominent local corporations.

During the past fifteen years I have employed two or three hundred young men, and almost daily receive written and personal applications from prospective college graduates and others. It is surprising to what extent nearly all of them are lacking in business fitness. Lately three letters came by the same mail from students at different colleges who are to receive diplomas shortly. None of them was properly folded or written in a legible hand; in one the word "accommodate" was spelled incorrectly, and in another "affect" was used erroneously. At one time there was in my office a youth who had been graduated from one of the foremost colleges in America, and the only subject that I heard him discuss for more than five or ten minutes at a time was his college and his experiences there.

Please do not misunderstand me; I do not mean to deprecate college education in the least. As conclusive evidence to the contrary, I have two sons now attending such institutions. But I am convinced that some measures should be adopted to afford the college students of this country opportunity to gain more business knowledge than they acquire during the course of study generally pursued at present. Supposedly, the early schooling of college attendants renders further instruction along these lines unnecessary, but such is not the case. Their letters are inferior from a business standpoint; they do not know the difference between a check and a draft; their business ideas are juvenile, and it is quite apparent that while they have been educated in some directions, their business education has been neglected.

It occurred to me that if THE NEW YORK TIMES would take sufficient interest to adjutate this subject something beneficial could be accomplished.

Unlicensed.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There are at present 150 eligible chauffeurs on the civil service list awaiting appointments. When an ordinary citizen seeks employment from the City of New York as a chauffeur or automobile engineman he is compelled to pass State automobile and municipal civil service examinations, including a demonstration. Having passed these examinations, he must pay for his operating privilege, that is to say, he pays for his license.

There are city officials in New York who personally operate the city cars, thus combining the chauffeur's task with their own official duty. These city officials are exempt from examination. Furthermore, they are not compelled by the law to buy a chauffeur's license. The city official who operates the city cars and who is not examined is more likely to injure persons because of his inexperience. Why are the chauffeurs thus discriminated against?

Obtrusive Fire Drills.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I was delayed for fifteen minutes today on an Avenue B car on account of a fire drill taking place at Public School 62. The Faculty of the school, instead of requesting pedestrians to clear the walk so that pupils participating in the drill could have free access to the park, ordered the fire signal placed in the centre of the street, thereby blocking traffic completely.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial on "Use for Napkin Rings" puts the seal on the question of their past, present, and future usefulness. To the Editor of The New York Times:

I noticed the letter from F. W. Hehmeyer, entitled "Germany is Finished." I would like to ask him whether he actually believes that Germany's losses up to date have amounted to 8,000,000 men. I think that Mr. Hehmeyer's "Finis Germaniae" is—to express myself politely—a little preliminary.

Harvard's President Emeritus Sets Forth Seven Fundamental Proposals Upon Which the War Might Be Ended.

The letter of Dr. Charles W. Eliot, President Emeritus of Harvard University, which is here published, was written in reply to a request from Mr. Salmon O. Levinson of Chicago, whose letter is also published, for some suggestions of a basis for peace negotiations in Europe. The Times has asked for and has obtained Dr. Eliot's consent to the publication of the letter over his signature.

Mr. Levinson's Letter.

The Vanderbilt Hotel,
New York, April 21, 1915.

Dr. Charles W. Eliot, Cambridge, Mass.:

Dear Dr. Eliot: You have doubtless read the published Portland letter of Dr. Dernburg. He seems to have been profoundly impressed with several of the important suggestions contained in your article in THE NEW YORK TIMES of March 12.

I am inclined to the hope that the position of Germany, as reflected through him, has measurably changed; indeed, the views of all of us have had to undergo marked modification as the war has progressed and as the fever of partisanship has somewhat abated.

Where Germany evidently errs most is in her failure to appreciate the neutral world's opinion of her treatment of Belgium. She seems to think her necessity for territorial expansion sufficient justification for any course, however brutal. Undoubtedly the needs of Germany are manifest and urgent in this respect; she has approximately the same area as France and about twice the population; her tendency to rapid increase in population and her energies along all lines of industrial and intellectual activities would seem to call for some present expansion, if it can be accomplished without conquest or perpetuating evil precedents.

I am anxious to have your views, not only on this subject, but more comprehensively as to the basis upon which this destructive conflict can be halted and millions of European youth saved from destruction, so that the Angel of Peace and not the Angel of Death may hover over the suffering peoples of these distracted nations.

I beg to express to you my sense of gratitude for the many interesting letters and conferences on the subject of the war with which you have favored me during the past three months. With your knowledge of the world's history, your comprehension of the play of international forces, your sincere desire for permanent peace among the nations of the earth, and your persuasive and trenchant way of putting things, I have felt for months that you have the power and ability to suggest the basis for an immediate armistice and an enduring peace which would appeal not only to the neutral world but to the belligerent nations themselves. Sincerely yours,

S. O. LEVINSON.

Dr. Eliot's Reply.

Cambridge, Mass., April 24, 1915.

Dear Mr. Levinson: The sufferings and losses caused in nine months by the colossal war have been so enormous, and prolongation of the war is so sure to produce still greater damage and misery, that thinking people cannot help reflecting on the feasible conditions, if any, of an armistice or suspension of hostilities. Americans, happily withdrawn from the actual scenes of combat and unaffected by the storms of passion which beat on the belligerent nations in Europe, ought to be able to see more clearly than those who are in the midst of the fighting what the possible conditions of a suspension of hostilities have now become. At your request I have already attempted twice to state these conditions. I now try again with the aid of your suggestions on my previous efforts.

(1) The first condition is that every nation now at war should recognize the fact that no nation in the world can establish rule or dominion over any other civilized nation, large or small; because the majority of the civilized nations will, in the present state of public opinion and international law, inevitably resist domination by any single nation. If, therefore, the peace of Europe or the world is hereafter to be kept inviolate, it must be kept not by the overruling power of any one nation, but by international agreements entered into by a group or groups of nations which, after the experience of the past nine months, have rejected aggressive war as an available means of settling international disputes or of extending national power.

(2) The second condition for a suspension of hostilities is a general agreement that the small States in Europe shall have firmer securities for their peace and independence than they now possess, that no European population shall be held to an unnatural allegiance contrary to their wishes, and that the national aspirations of the peoples of Eastern and Southeastern Europe shall be satisfied in some reasonable measure.

(3) The war having produced an unprecedented disturbance and dislocation of industries and commerce the world over, the third condition of an armistice must be the general acceptance of the proposal that the freedom of the seas, and of the canals or channels connecting great seas, be placed under international guarantees.

(4) The fourth condition of an armistice is general acceptance of the policy of the "open door" as the best means of promoting the trade of all manufacturing peoples.

(5) The fifth condition is the abandonment of the policy of seizing either distant colonies or adjoining provinces by force and holding them against the will of their populations, and the recognition of the principle that the only enlargements of territory which are worth a nation's having in this age of the world are those which are brought about by consent and with good will, and are bound to the central or parent State by the sense of mutual service and advantage.

(6) The sixth condition must be that Belgium receive adequate compensation for the losses which the German invasion and occupation have caused, the nature, scope, and amount of that reparation to be determined by an impartial arbitrator.

(7) It should further be generally understood before any suspension of hostilities is attempted that the main object of the international conference or council called to settle terms of peace will be to devise such a reorganization of Europe that national armaments can be safely reduced, and a permanent peace be secured through the establishment of a supreme international tribunal, the maintenance of an international military and naval force, and the stable development of international law.

If the experience of the past nine months has satisfied all the combatants that the views above stated are just, and fit for general acceptance, no one of the belligerent nations will have any sound reason for prolonging the war, and the present horrible destruction might cease. The great lessons of the war seem to us detached Americans to have been already taught with overwhelming force.

I have only attempted to outline the fundamental conditions under which preliminary negotiations for peace might reasonably be opened. Many details would remain to be discussed in the ultimate international conference; and the constitution of the conference itself would be one of the first details to be considered in the preliminary conference of the belligerent Powers. It is obvious also that, under the general conditions above described, many opportunities for discussion and compromise would present themselves, but at the present stage it is unnecessary and undesirable to consider any details.

The question to which I have addressed myself is this: What are the feasible grounds on which preliminary negotiations for peace might now be opened with some prospect of a satisfactory result? If you see any way to use the above answer to that question toward the promotion of a durable peace in Europe, I beg that you will use it at your discretion, provided that it be not published over my name. I regard the statement as the result of conversations and exchanges of letters between us during the past two months, and beg to place it entirely at your disposition. Sincerely yours,

CHARLES W. ELIOT.

THE CORPSE INTACT.

An Argument for Asphyxiation in Place of Missiles.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Domestic animals, especially household pets, are useful and enjoyable adjuncts of civilization. Unfortunately it becomes necessary at times to have the family canary, cat, dog, or horse put out of the way. We commonly employ some humane method, such as asphyxiation, to accomplish this end. The practice has become so universal that we now have in every large city a reputable, professional death-dealing organization, an "Animal Rescue League" or its equivalent, which performs the unpleasant function on a commercial scale. There is a certain correlation between the probable depth of our feeling and the size and intelligence (especially the latter) of our doomed friends. It would scarcely occur to us to club or stone these creatures to death or even to shoot them, except at hopelessly close range.

Recently we have heard that one of the largest death-dealing syndicates in history, having for its object the elimination of the most domestic and intelligent of animals, has adopted asphyxiating tactics as an improvement over the older method (still employed by its rivals) by which its victims either suffered intense agonies or, in many cases, were merely desperately maimed. It seems curiously hysterical and unintelligent to read in your columns of the effects of the "horrible chlorine." Why such an unreasonable upheaval in our logical method? Aesthetically or humanely an intact corpse seems preferable to an extreme state of subdivision or even to a living human fraction, deprived of appendages and sense organs which we have come to consider essential.

THE EARLY D. W. S. BIRD.

It Got Up at 1 A. M. and Found a Turning Worm.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

About two weeks ago a small hole appeared in the roadway in Ninety-sixth Street between Central Park West and Columbus Avenue, at the exact spot where about a year ago some minor repairs were made to a leaking water main.

Nothing was done until this morning at 1:15 o'clock, while the residents were attempting to recover from the effects of the unseasonable weather handed out yesterday by the Weather Bureau, when a wagon of the Department of Water Supply drew up, unloaded four men and a foreman and an assortment of chisels, crowbars, and sledge hammers. With these utensils the men enthusiastically attacked the pavement and immediately aroused the earnest attention of everybody on the block.

After listening to the infernal din for about a half hour I telephoned to Police Headquarters and asked that a policeman be sent to investigate. One called from the 100th Street Station, and I asked him whether anything could be done to defer until a reasonable hour the efficient work that was going on before his eyes, especially in view of the fact that the hole in the middle of the street had not increased to any appreciable extent since it was first discovered. He regretted that he could do nothing, as he could not interfere with another city department. He told me that he knew also that the hole had been in the street for at least two weeks.

The work continued merrily until 6:30 this morning, and, by that time, a hole about seven feet long and eighteen inches wide had been opened at the curbstone in front of 47.

I have been requested by some of the neighbors, especially by representatives of three of them confined to their beds by illness, to voice their appreciation of the "remarkable efficiency" suddenly displayed by the Department of Water Supply, &c., and to thank the gentlemen responsible for this "efficiency."

40,000 TULIPS BLOOM IN BRONX PARK SHOW

Botanical Garden Contains the Largest Exhibit of Its Kind Ever Held in This Country.

MORE THAN 100 VARIETIES

100 Rare Japanese Cherry Trees in Flower Add to Beauty of the Arrangement.

One of the largest exhibits of tulips ever made in this country has been arranged at the New York Botanical Garden, at 198th Street and Bronx Park. There are more than one hundred varieties, and they range from the rarest Dutch blooms to the "Sir Thomas Lipton," which was developed and grown in the gardens of the tea merchant in England and later successfully transplanted in this country. This is a tall, upstanding plant, with a vivid deep red flower, fading to yellow at the stalk. There are also a number of tulips that have been grown in this country so long that they are really American flowers, although they cannot deny their Dutch ancestry. There are more than 40,000 tulips in bloom now.

The main part of the exhibit is in the Conservatory Court. The great bed there, which is also the largest single bed of tulips in the State, is a splendid mixture of deep pink, edged with a wide border of white. The pink tulips of the "Cottage Maid" variety belie their title, for they are far from meek and humble, as it would suggest. The white border, which is four feet deep, is the "Tulipa la Reine," and shows a set white against a deep green foliage. Flanking this bed, across the narrow gravel walks, are half-moon and circular beds of "Rose Griseldin" and "Crimson King" tulips, which are in full flower and very beautiful.

Among the most vivid of the yellow and gold tulips are the "Tulipa Chrysolora" and the "Mon Tresor," which are shown in large beds along the various walks leading to the conservatories. These are now in full flower, and from a distance look like a patch of light gold on the lawn. As soon as they have flowered and gone, their places will be taken by "Golden Crown" and other vivid yellow tulips, and in some of the beds where they have been will be the "Parrot Tulips" or the "Tulip Mark Graf von Baden," which is a medley of all colors, with red and purple predominating. These are now set out and the buds are beginning to show color.

The tulip exhibit is the third stage of the Botanical Garden. Dr. Britton has arranged so that, from the end of the snow until the first severe frost, there will always be beds of flowers in full bloom. The first stage is that of the snowdrops and the earliest Spring flowers; this is followed by the crocuses and their kin, and now the tulips and other bulbs are making their showing. Among these are the narcissi and daffodils, of which there are great numbers. The "Narcissus Incomparabilis" and the "Lucifer" daffodils are the most noticeable, and they are full blown and fresh, having come into bloom during the past week.

The wonderful purple "Wouverman" and the "Orange Beauty" tulips came into bloom Saturday and yesterday. These are classed as "late flowering," and both have rrecently been added to the Botanical Garden, the "Wouverman" having been imported from the great bulb-growing district of Holland. A tulip that stands out particularly is the "Pink Beauty," which has reached its highest development. This is found in a number of beds, and is one of the "early, late, and often" blooming kind, according to George V. Nash, the head gardener. It comes into flower among the earliest, and is one of the last to make way for its successors, the Spanish mixed iris and the pink Oriental poppies.

Dr. Nathaniel Lord Britton, founder and director of the garden, announced to his assistants, George V. Nash, the head gardener; John Finley, the foreman gardener, and "Jim" Smith, who did the planting, that this was going to be a tulip year, and with their assistance has made his prediction come true.

Apart from the tulips, the most beautiful and rare exhibit is the Japanese cherry trees, which are now in full bloom. There are more than a hundred of them, all growing in a little valley. Coming over the little rise from the north and dropping into the depression, it is like looking down at an inlet of a brilliant pink and white sea. The valley seems filled almost to the top with the fragrant blossoms. Some of these trees are ten and twelve years old, and were planted not long after the garden was laid out. The older ones are a solid mass of pink and white, the most beautiful of them being the "Ko-Fugen" or "Prunus Pseudocerasus" trees, which were planted in the valley after spending several years on Long Island. A rare species of the tree, the "Amongawa," which is shaped like a poplar, with its branches growing straight up, bears a pale pink blossom, and stands like a vivid pillar against the green sides of the valley.

A peculiarity of the Japanese cherries is that it has been found possible to graft their shoots onto American wild cherry trees. The resultant blooms are as large and beautiful as those of the original Japanese trees, and next year it is expected that several of them will be added to the grove.

Another Japanese invader in the Garden is the "Tofo Noki," or "Magnolia Obovata." This is a sturdy shrub, about six feet high, and is remarkable for the lateness of its blooms. The flowers are six and eight incres across, of a deep red hue, and are just now in full bloom. Other flowers, shrubs, and trees in the 400 acres of the Garden are coming into bloom with great rapidity. Violets are scattered all over the greensward, with here and there the yellow eyes of dandelions.

MISS INGALLS BUYS FARM.

Will Raise Chickens at Hot Springs—Mrs. Heinroth Injured.

Special to The New York Times.

HOT SPRINGS, Va., May 2.—Miss Gladys Ingalls of Washington, daughter of the late Melville E. Ingalls, is going into the farming game for her amusement. She will build a modern farmhouse and a large, up-to-date chicken plant. Her brother, M. E. Ingalls, who returned to New York tonight after an over Sunday visit, concluded the purchase for her of the McDonald estate a fifty-acre property on the road to Fassifern, running from Mr. and Mrs. George Gunston's villa to the Lanier Dunn place.

Mrs. Joseph W. Heinroth of New York, who was thrown from her horse here yesterday, will be confined to her room for several days. Her physicians say she is not seriously hurt. She was riding through Dunn's Gap with her husband when her horse threw her, and she landed on her back in a shallow brook. JOHN LEE DEAD.

John Lee, former New York Manager of the White Star Line, and Vice President of the International Mercantile Marine, and one of the best-known ocean steamship men in this country, died early yesterday morning at his home, 194 Clinton Street, Brooklyn, in his 65th year. Until he retired, in September, 1910, he was a familiar figure in shipping circles and was known to many thousands of ocean travelers.

Mr. Lee was an Englishman, born in Derbyshire, and educated at the Chesterfield Grammar School, later finishing at the Collegiate Institute in Sheffield, in 1867. In that year he was apprenticed to the firm of G. H. Fletcher & Co. of Liverpool for a term of five years, receiving a salary of $100 a year. Mr. Fletcher, the senior partner, did not take an active interest in the firm at that time, except to manage his own ships, but it was he who with Thomas H. Ismay founded the White Star Line. Thus Mr. Lee became conversant with the business of that line, and when his term of apprenticeship was finished he was chosen from a number of others in the office for the post of junior inward freight clerk for the White Star business in this city. He came to this country on the old Republic, and her passenger list, which is still preserved, shows that there were only twenty-six first-class passengers besides himself.

Mr. Lee served a year under Joseph Hyde Sparks, who came here to open the agency, and then was appointed chief of the outward-bound freight department and representative of the White Star on the Produce Exchange. On the Exchange he made a reputation for honesty, independence of thought, and broad-mindedness, and often when disputes arose among members regarding the interpretation of charter parties or freight engagements, the disputants would settle the matter by saying, "Let us leave it to Lee," and Mr. Lee would decide the question.

He continued in charge of the outward-bound freight department until 1898, when he became one of a committee of three that took charge of the affairs of the line in this country, which position he held until the end of the following year, when he was appointed General Agent of the White Star for the United States and Canada. Despite the many changes in the management of the various lines forming the International Mercantile Marine, Mr. Lee remained as Manager of the White Star here until he retired. Besides being a former Vice President of the International Mercantile Marine, he was also a former member of the Freight and Passenger Committee.

Mr. Lee was unmarried. He is survived by a brother and two sisters in England.

The Contractor Is Only Human

The Bond the contractor gives for proper performance may never be needed. But what if it should? If the contractor defaults, the Bond will immediately become the vital factor. But it will be too late to consider its real strength, the amount of actual protection it affords.

You should consider the Bonding Company on two points—first, its ability to pay; and, second, its proven willingness to pay just claims promptly. Not only is this Company the largest Surety Company in the world, but 31 years of prompt payments of just claims have established its reputation in this respect.

SEES TRADE BALANCE OF BILLION DOLLARS

Will Reach That Total for Fiscal Year, Redfield Predicts in Letter to Stone.

SAVE TOURISTS' $170,000,000

Kept at Home This Year by European War—Deplores High Ocean Rates, Answers Republican Critics.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—In a letter to Senator Stone of Missouri, Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, William C. Redfield, the Secretary of Commerce, says that the trade balance favorable to the United States will amount to a billion dollars, in all probability by the end of the fiscal year on June 30. The trade balance in favor of this country amounted to about $761,000,000 in the middle of April.

Secretary Redfield mentions in his letter that it is estimated that the amount of money usually spent by Americans abroad annually, but which has been kept at home this fiscal year on account of the European war, is $170,000,000. He takes a rosy view of financial and industrial conditions in the United States, pointing out that the present remarkable trade balance has been established in the face of the fact that last August the stoppage of American exports resulted in an unfavorable balance of $19,000,000.

Mr. Redfield takes occasion to poke fun at Republican editors who have been criticizing the workings of the Underwood-Simmons tariff law and comparing it unfavorably with the Payne-Aldrich tariff law. He asserts that what these editors call a deficit for April, 1914, was due to the increase in foodstuff importations arising from our own shortage and increased importations of crude materials of a kind produced here in small quantities or not at all.

The letter from Secretary Redfield to Senator Stone follows:

"My Dear Senator: I am sure you will be interested in the facts respecting our foreign trade and its reaction upon our domestic commercial and financial situation. Stated briefly, our exports for the nine months of the fiscal year ended with March 31 have reached the unparalleled total of $1,933,475,580, indicating an approximate total for the full fiscal year of $2,750,000,000. The apparent balance in our favor on merchandise transactions in this foreign trade up to the 17th of April (the date for half of April being estimated) is $761,000,000. Unless some unforeseen change in the export movement occurs, this favorable balance will reach, if not exceed, a thousand millions during the current fiscal year.

"This is of itself sufficient to make American hearts glad, but certain factors add greatly to its weight. It includes the month of August, in which the substantial stoppage of our exports for a fortnight resulted in an unfavorable balance of $19,000,000. It is coincident with the absence of an expenditure on the part of American travelers abroad, estimated at net about $170,000,000 per annum, and also with the absorption by us of large but undetermined amounts of American securities owned abroad, by reason of which the interest on the securities thus purchased is now paid to us instead of to others. Not only, therefore, is the favorable balance remarkable in itself, but it is not subject to the offsets that have hitherto been usual.

"It is, of course, a pity that we are still paying such high rates for ocean transportation that foreign carriers are thereby prospering at our cost, while we remain in the humiliating position of depending upon foreign navies to protect the movements of our own commerce, which we ought to control but do not. From the Far East, as well as from the Atlantic, comes the cry for shipping, and it is speaking conservatively to say that the business movement which shows such wonderful results would be greatly enlarged if vessels were available, under American control, to take the traffic whence and whither American commerce desired to have it go.

"Some Republican editors are funny fellows—more facile in fancy than familiar with facts. They unite marked powers of assertion with a wonderful gift of forgetfulness. The facts of today being hard for their digestion, they go back a year and talk about the balance of trade in April last, with both a singular omission to state the facts of that time and the facts which followed the enactment of the Payne-Aldrich law of evil memory. Every one knows who reads—but our friends, the editors, if they read do not say it—that what they call the deficit for April, 1914, was due to the increase in imported food arising from our own shortage at that time, and to the increase of crude materials which we do not ourselves produce or produced insufficiently for use in our manufactures. On the export side for that month the decrease was in shipments of foodstuffs, which we could not spare, and in crude materials, viz., coal and raw cotton. It was in the items of fully finished manufactures that the decrease was least.

"Not only, therefore, were the conditions of which our friends so often and so feebly write the outcome of circumstances which had nothing to do with any law, but they are treated by our friends with an amusing forgetfulness of their own past. If they look at the year following the Payne-Aldrich tariff law, which began its brief career on Aug. 6, 1909, they will find that in March, 1910, there was what they call an adverse trade balance of over $19,000,000. There was no war then to shut off our trade, but it was not until August of 1914, when the war did shut our exports off for a time, that the Payne law deficit was equaled. Not only so, but in the year which followed the passage of the Payne-Aldrich law there were five months in which there was an adverse trade balance.

"It is hard to see how our friends, the editors, therefore, escape the conclusion that, by their own arguments, the law they favor was a failure. It adds strength to this to point out that, despite the deficit on which they leaned so much in April, 1914, the trade balance for the ten months of that fiscal year, which included April, showed a favorable balance of $470,000,000, while during the ten months ended with April, 1910, most of it under the Payne-Aldrich tariff and the rest under the Dingley tariff, the favorable balance was but $168,000,000. Therefore, on the basis of the arguments used by our critics, there was under the Underwood tariff the increase of $300,000,000 favorable balance as compared with that under the Payne law.

"May I point out that the conditions this year, during which President Wilson has so ably guided our ship of State amid stormy seas, are such that the favorable balance in our foreign trade is so great that it already reaches a sum sufficient to purchase the largest of our railway systems, and that if it is continued for the balance of the fiscal year at the current rate, it would be sufficient to extinguish the entire interest-bearing debt of the National Government? It would several times pay the cost of the Panama Canal, would more than discharge the debts of all our States, or more than pay the entire net debt of the great City of New York plus that of the City of Philadelphia.

"I beg to remain, yours very truly,
"WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
"Secretary."

CLIMATE AND THE PLAGUE.

Madras Nearly Free from It on Account of the Heat.

The freedom of certain areas from diseases which have devastated neighboring regions is a peculiar phenomenon. An instance is found in certain parts of India. Although much of that country has suffered severely from the bubonic plague, the Madras Presidency has been affected to a relatively slight degree. To account for this immunity has been one of the many problems confronting the British commission on the plague in India.

Bubonic plague is caused by the disease among rats. The rat flea is the agent whereby the virus is transported from rat to man. As plague is carried from place to place in the bodies of infected fleas, any local conditions affecting the survival of these insects are of importance in determining the liability of the neighborhood to plague. Plague-free Madras may thus owe its comparative immunity in part to its warm climate. Invasion is further restricted by the fact that a low-lying, comparatively hot and dry plain separates the areas at present infected from the more humid and cooler coastal regions, especially in the north of the Presidency. The districts which have suffered most resemble each other in being the most elevated and coolest regions in the Presidency; but they also have the characteristic in common that they are in closest proximity to infected areas outside the Madras Presidency.

It is difficult to estimate the relative importance of the facilities afforded for the transport of insects from infected to uninfected localities and the climatic agencies. Probably they have unlike significance in different places. The extraordinary susceptibility of Madras rats to plague, according to The Journal of the American Medical Association, suggests that the present immunity of the province is not exceptional and that the Madras Presidency has escaped plague not altogether because of the measures which have been adopted to prevent its spread during the present pandemic, but largely owing to climatic or other peculiarities.

LIVES IN FEAR OF SPIES.

English Patron of Hotel Here Suspects All with German Name.

There is one English visitor in New York who thinks he is in continual danger from German spies. He has just arrived from the other side and if you ask him a question he is apt to look quickly to one side and then to the other and put a finger to his lips and say, "Sh!"

He is said to be a man of considerable wealth, and to have a hobby. Rumor has it that he has brought over all the accumulated indulgence in that hobby and had it placed in a safety deposit here for keeping, feeling that the collection might be in danger if the Germans get to England. Since the war began he has remained quietly at his home until the other day, when he went to Liverpool on board the steamer.

Mr. Blank was discovered yesterday at a hotel desk asking a cautious question. When addressed, he answered with reserve.

"Just rest and recuperation," he gave as the object of his trip.

"And what do you think of the war?" he was asked.

He turned and looked at the hotel clerk. Then he looked at the mail clerk, who answers to a German name. Then he drew his questioner away from the desk. Just then a heavy-set man with a long, drooping mustache passed by and Mr. Blank looked at him quickly, and dropped his eyes. Raising them, he happened to encounter the gaze of the cashier, whose features were cast in a distinctly Teutonic mold.

"Ah! a painful subject," suggested his inquisitor. "Perhaps you have lost a rel——"

"No, no," hastily interrupted the traveler. Then he put his hand to his lips. "Spies," he stage-whispered, "German spies."

"They have been dogging me," he went on. "Wherever I look, I see one. I cannot turn, but what I behold a German face, or see somebody listening. Never since the war began have I failed to exercise the utmost precautions. Usually I go out only in the daytime, and when unusual circumstances have required that I leave the shelter of my home after nightfall, I have never failed to seek the best lighted streets, and on them I usually keep in the middle of the thoroughfare."

"You will probably not have to exercise such precautions now," suggested the questioner.

Just then a page came along the corridor, calling names. "Mr. Morschauser! Mr. Tannenbaum?"

Mr. Blank started, then looked an "I-told-you-so" at his inquisitor, and excused himself. Now the room clerk is wondering whether Mr. Blank's subsequent demand to be given better quarters for the price he was paying is preliminary to his seeking a more secluded abiding place in New York.
